At one point you come to a place where ages and ages ago a mountain and a river met and fought for the right of way. The river won. You can see where the battle was fought. On either mountainside above the gorge the granite walls are scarred with the marks of conflict for a thousand feet. And if you listen you can hear far down in the gorge the roar of the victorious river that has through the centuries worn the rock away that it may have a channel to the sea. Today the river does not need to be protected. It has never needed to be protected. The river protects itself and the land through which it flows, and will, so long as the Blue Ridge remains a watershed and rivers run to meet the sea.

It is a picture of the river of living truth, flowing from beneath the throne of God. Again and again in the history of this old book the mountain and the river have met and fought for the right of way, and ever the river has won. Many are the battles which the Bible has waged, many are the blows it has received. It is scarred with the marks of conflict, but it is victorious, it is always victorious. The Bible does not need to be protected, it has never needed to be protected, it protects itself and the world through which it flows, and will as long as rivers run to meet the sea and God's truth can find a tongue.—Record of Christian Work.

FAMILY ALTAR.

Scripture to describe the glow of the Holy Spirit upon a child of God.

It certainly was a prominent trait of Jesus. Once it blazed up so fiercely when the desecration of the temple stung him to the quick. We see it not only in this outstanding incident; but it was the habit of his life throughout, and, let come what would, he never flagged; his zeal for the truth and the kingdom and the glory, kept him so that nothing discouraged him until he had set judgment on the earth.

What we need is a large amount of this enthusiasm in us, that we may not cease to press on and be willing to spend and be spent in the carrying on of his work in this world. Whatever our temperaments, denomination or feelings, it is imperative that at the bottom of our hearts there should be this deep, unchanging, burning desire to help that great work of Jesus, for his sake.

Prayer—Our Father and our God, as fire to powder and shot, so fire our souls with truth to do the work thou hast given us to do. Amen.

In the Bible there is more that finds me, than I have experienced in all other books put together.—Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4¼ inches x¾ inch
The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4¼ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

MARRIAGES

SIPE—SANDRIDGE.

Mr. Dorsey David Sipe and Miss Marie Sandridge appeared at my home March 22, 1932, and expressed a desire to be married. Accordingly, I pronounced the words that started them happy on the way of life together. The bride's parents accompanied the happy couple, and witnessed the ceremony. They are from the McGaheysville and Elkton communities. The bride is a granddaughter of the late Rev. J. W. Dofflemyre, who, during his life, was one of the leading ministers of the Virginia Central Conference.

OBITUARIES.

ELEY.

The Christian Temple of Norfolk lost one of its oldest and most devoted members in the death of Mr. James A. Eley. Mr. Eley was born in Isle of Wight County, near Windsor, Va., in 1856. He was married to Miss Clara Docia Beaton of Windsor, in 1877.

He united with the Antioch Christian Church in early childhood. He moved to Norfolk, Va., in 1888. Mr. Eley was instrumental in organizing the Christian Church in Norfolk. He was a charter member of the Memorial Christian Temple in Brambleton, but later moved to the Park Place section and was instrumental in helping to organize the Third Christian Church and was a charter member of this church, a member of the Board of Trustees and Treasurer of the Church. He was a charter member of the Christian Temple and served as the Treasurer of that organization for a number of years. No man could be more loyal and faithful to the church than was Mr. Eley—faithful in his attendance—sacrificial in his support. He lived daily in the simplicity of child-like faith in Christ, trusting God, and with the confident hope that as He had borne the "image of the earthy" that, by the power of Christ, he would bear the "image of the heavenly."

He was a faithful husband, a devoted father and a conscientious Christian. The church will greatly miss his life of service.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Clara Docia Eley, two daughters, Mrs. Minnie Eley Dixon, Mrs. Hattie Eley Jarvis, one grandson, H. J. Dixon, Jr., and a great-granddaughter, Peggy Ann Dixon.

The funeral service was largely attended. The flowers presented by the friends and members of the church were many and beautiful. The services were conducted from the Chirstian Temple by the pastor, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley and Dr. J. E. Thacker. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved.

L. E. SMITH.

PORTLOCK.

In the death of Mr. Frank Livingston Portlock, the Christian Temple and the Christian Church loses one of its oldest and most substantial members. Mr. Port-lock was born in Norfolk County, September 6, 1859. At the age of sixteen he united with the Providence Christian Church, one of the oldest churches of the Christian denomination. He remained a faithful member of this church until conditions necessitated the closing of the church. When Old Providence merged with the Third Church and the Memorial Christian Temple, forming the Christian Temple of Norfolk, Mr. Portlock's membership was transferred to the new organization. He believed in the Christian Church and dedicated his life to its principles. He was faithful to his church in attendance and in contributions—always willing and anxious to do what he could to advance its interests.

Mr. Portlock was active in community life and in State affairs. By profession he was a teacher and surveyor. He took great interest in the improvement of his community in every particular, serving as county farm agent for a number of years. He will be greatly missed both by church and State. He died at his residence in South Norfolk, January 9, 1932. The funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Dr. L. E. Smith, Monday, January 11th, at 11:00 o'clock A. M.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Marion West Portlock, two daughters, Mrs. Edgar H. Adsit, of New Rochelle, N. Y.,

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

NEW TERM OPENS JANUARY 25th, and any student may begin the college work at that time.

HOLLAND.

Christopher Columbus Holland, son of the late Calvin and Patsy Howell Holland, died at his home, Holland, Va., March 25, 1932, aged 65 years. The funeral was conducted at Holy Neck Church by the writer, assisted by Drs. W. W. Staley and W. M. Jay, and the body interred in the church cemetery.

Mr. Holland leaves a widow, who was Miss Lucy Jane Piland, five sons, George Calvin, of Norfolk, Howard Virginius, of Holland, R. 1., Raymond Gilliard and Junius Columbus, of Holland, R. 1., Gordon Wesley, Washington, D. C., and two daughters, Mrs. D. H. Howell, Holland, R. 1., and Mrs. J. D. Smith, Norfolk, and four grandchildren. He also leaves three brothers and two sisters, P. C. Holland, of Holland, Va., J. G. Holland, of Isle of Wight County, R. H. Holland, of Camden, N. J., Mrs. Mary E. Jernegan, of Holland, and Mrs. Ann Duke, of Suffolk. Mr. Holland was a member of Holy Neck Church and a good man, loyal to his home, his church and his community. He was patient in suffering, strong in faith and bright in hope, resigned to the Lord's will. May the Heavenly Father's comfort and help be with the loved ones.

She made her home with her youngest son, H. C. Mostella. The deceased leaves to mourn their loss, besides her only son, fourteen grandchildren, twenty-four great grandchildren, and a great host of other relatives and friends.

Mrs. Mostella was a faithful member of Rock Springs Christian Church for about fifty years. She was unusually active till about a week before she died, when she had a fall on frozen ground. Funeral services were held from Midway Methodist Church, with the Methodist minister, Rev. Sharpton, in charge, assisted by her pastor and this writer. Her frail body was laid to rest in the adjacent cemetery.

Our College.—

One of the great interests at our approaching Convention will be the future policy of the college. Many of the alumni will attend the Convention because of this problem alone. There is an increasing number of Elon men and women who are becoming more and more active with regard to the college. Alumni are increasingly being placed on the Board of Trustees of the college. This is as it should be. No institution can live and grow without an increasing support of those who have received its fostering care. The college has been serving the church in the preparation of leaders for forty years and the churches have felt the redeeming influence of their leadership.

Seminary Summer Course.—

Two special courses to be offered at the summer session which Union Seminary will conduct July 5th to August 12th, in cooperation with Columbia University, at the Seminary, are "Problems of the Modern World," with lectures by Kirby Page, Harry W. Laidler, Edmund B. Chaffee and H. Richard Niebuhr, and "Two Major Problems in Religion," with Henry N. Wieman lecturing on "The Idea of God," and William Adams Brown on "The Place of the Supernatural." The Seminary will offer this year three courses for specialized groups—a group of ministers, a group of college chaplains, teachers of religion, etc., and a group of presidents of Christian associations in colleges and universities.

Washington D. C.—

The halls of Congress these days reverberate to the sound of clashing opinions as they have not possibly since the war days. Justice Brandeis declares that the economic crisis that is upon us is worse than the crisis precipitated by the war. Scarcely had the test vote in the House on the liquor issue been recorded, than the urgent tax matters were taken up, and if the constituency at home who have never been to Washington imagine that a state of summer calm prevails under the dome of the Capitol they should visit the National Congress and get the real facts. With one ear to the ground to get the sentiment of the folks back home, and the other ear attuned to the war cry of the opposite camp, your Congressman today is a very much harried individual. He at least deserves the sympathy of the home folks.

Enlistment of Youth.—

During the campaign, to date, of the Allied Forces for Prohibition, headed by Dr. Poling, Allied Youth Councils have been formed in more than 200 cities; all States are now represented in the signed enrollment of more than 150,000.

Part or full-time secretaries of Youth Councils have been provided in some of the larger cities, such as New York, Los Angeles and Philadelphia. Study classes have been formed for youth leaders, and in a number of cities youth groups have formed speaking teams to operate in their respective territories; one youth alone, through speeches in high school assemblies, has enrolled more than 9,000 students. Debates and oratorical contests have been conducted. The Allied Forces will have reached nearly 600 cities upon the completion of their campaign. The Youth Fellowship movement in our church has great possibilities. Shall it have a large place in our Convention?

Southern Convention.—

The Southern Convention of the Christian Church will hold its next session at Burlington Christian Church and it is urged that all members elected by the Conferences attend. In order to do so it will take some planning ahead and every elected delegate should begin plans now to go. There are grave questions to come before the Convention with reference to the future of our church and its institutions. Shall we attend the sessions of the Convention and take care of what we have done and plan for the best interests of the work before us. We have had a serious financial depression in our private life, church life, national life and international life, but that is no excuse for neglect of our duty. We cannot afford to neglect it. A time like this will show the loyalty and sacrificial spirit of our people. Heroes are revealed in time of a crisis. In time of war they are revealed. This is no less so in times of financial depression. Let no delegate fail at a time like this.

Vacation Study for Ministers.—

Many ministers make it a custom to go to summer courses for study, and numbers of churches provide to meet the expenses, which would not be much. For example, Columbia University and Union Seminary are offering the following special courses for ministers this summer: "The Preparation and Criticism of Sermons," led by the president of the Seminary, Dr. Henry Sloan Coffin, J. V. Moldenhawer, H. E. Luccock and H. H. Tweedy, and "The Problems and Work of the Ministry," which will stress the question of "The Ministry and Psychiatry." Dr. Edward E. Uphaus, associate professor of Christian methods at Yale Divinity School, will direct the group interested in the course in "Religion in Higher Education." General courses include "New Testament," by E. F. Scott; "Introduction to Christian Faith," by Dr. Curry, and "The Bible," by Chaplain R. C. Knox. Students may elect at least one course from the Columbia curriculum. This program affords a great opportunity.

Our Church Paper.—

Shall our church paper live and continue to serve every other interest of the church by keeping them before the people, or shall we discontinue THE CHRISTIAN SUN? The Convention that meets in its coming session will have to consider this question, and the readers of the paper and those devoted to the church paper should concern themselves with the work of the Convention on this problem. These strenuous times will require some good financing to carry on what we have projected. The people who attend the Convention will be confronted with these grave problems and shall need the counsel, wisdom, and cooperation of the entire church to settle these questions and solve these problems. There is wisdom, inspiration, communion of spirit out of which creative thinking emerges when Christian people come together after prayer and preparation for the tasks that confront the church. At one place Christ could not do many mighty works because of unbelief. We shall need great faith as well as much prayer. Shall we have such preparation for a time like this?

Religious Education Association Meets.—

This year's meeting of the Religious Education Association will be held at Columbia University, May 3rd to 5th, and discussions will be based upon study of the problems presented by the Wickersham Commission in the causes and cure of crime. Dr. John H. Finley is president this year. Among the speakers at the meeting will be Mr. Wickersham, Dean Roscoe Pound and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler. Seminar discussions will be led by H. Richard Niebuhr, on "Social vs. Anti-Social Conduct;" F. Dean McClusky, on "Changes Going On in Moral and Religious Sanctions for Conduct;" F. Ernest Johnson, on "How to Direct Human Behavior that has Gone Wrong," and others. This will give a great opportunity for the leaders of Religious Education to study the ubiquitous question of improving conduct in society by the moral outcomes of Religious Education. Society needs special attention given to the whole educative process, and the schools of education in our universities are giving more and more attention to this problem for the better preparation of teachers. The churches and the constitution will not let them teach religion in our public schools, but they are teaching the great principles of conduct in the name of ethics and social guidance. Let all be done that can be done to improve the conduct of society, whether you call it religion or education, or combine the two and call it religious education. We need it all and then we need religion to crown it all, to inspire it all, and to give it the spirit of Christ.

NOTES-PERSONALS

If the Conference elected you a delegate to the Southern Convention, a responsibility has fallen upon your shoulders which, even though it requires self-denial and sacrifice, you should meet. The presence of every delegate will be needed this year and no one should shirk this duty. A great program and great problems are to be faced. We should be there to face them and to bear them together.

Mrs. J. A. Williams, President, is very anxious that every delegate elected to the biennial session of the Woman's Convention, to meet at Burlington, N. C., Tuesday, April 26th, at 10:00 A. M., shall be on hand at the opening. It will just be a one day's session before the opening of the General Convention at 7:30 P. M., and the women want to finish their work by the time the General Convention opens.

Orders are coming for the coin card. We believe here is a plan that every pastor with his Sunday School superintendent can use in every church and Sunday School. The coin card will appeal especially to the young people, and it will mean many dollars in self-denial for the sake of the Kingdom. "The Dollar Plan" is certainly a commendable plan, and the Mission Secretary will be glad, by letter or otherwise, to explain to any one who may be interested or desires to know further about it.

Dr. W. P. Minton is to be with several of our churches in Eastern Virginia beginning Sunday, April 17th. At 11:00 A. M., he is to preach at Suffolk, Va., at 7:30 P. M., at Newport News, with engagements for each day of the week following and with dates arranged up till the meeting of the Convention at Burlington on the 26th. Dr. Minton will speak to our people about the merger and the plan of union and carrying out the plans which have been adopted in Church Councils. He is thoroughly conversant with this theme and will be heard with profit.

The Easter offering for Missions is beginning to come in from the churches. How happy the Mission Secretary would be if the churches would report promptly and all do their best to get as liberal offerings as possible. The Convention is meeting and the Mission report is being made up, and we trust that every church will have a part in this report. Surely, no pastor will be so forgetful or indifferent as to fail to take the offering this year. Our hope is through the effort and contribution of all, since the few cannot carry the burden of the many this year.

What plan have you in mind for the Convention and the Conferences for the next two years? The delegates should come to the Southern Christian Convention at Burlington, April 27th, and stay through the Convention, as their presence and counsel will be needed. Plans for financing our institutions and enterprises, plans for deepening the spiritual life, plans for evangelization, plans for building up the Kingdom of our Lord, for increasing the power and influence of the local church and of all church activities, must be discussed and adopted. Plan for the Convention! Pray for the Convention!

SUN readers will be gratified to know that Rev. John G. Truitt, Dayton, Ohio, will, in the succeeding weeks, furnish a sermon each week for the sermon Page of THE SUN. When Brother Truitt is unable to furnish a sermon of his own, he will be responsible for the sermon that will appear. Rev. J. W. Fix served well and furnished valuable sermons for the page, and we regretted that he resigned, but we are happy to find a successor who enters into his work with zeal and who has proven himself to be one of our great sermon builders and writers. In this way Brother Truitt will be coming back to his own every week, and visiting in all our homes with a message from his own heart and from God's Word.

It was the editor's pleasure to be in company with Dr. Ellwood W. Jones, pastor of our Franklin Church, and to hear Dr. Jones in his welcome address to the women of the Missionary Societies who met in his church last Thursday. Dr. Jones is getting a good grip on the work in Franklin, is taking an interest in all that pertains to the work, and it is needless to say his people are delighted. They feel that they have found the right man in Dr. Jones and one who will lead them wisely and well in building up the work in Franklin, and in making their contribution to the Kingdom through the church. Dr. Jones is a recent accession to the Eastern Virginia Conference, and with his pleasing personality and ready power in pulpit and public address, becomes a real asset to the Conference, of which his church is a member.

"GO TELL."

The Easter season is past; yet the joyousness which it brings to human hearts who know the victory of Easter, forever abides. The gloom of the tomb where the body of the Lord Jesus was laid, overcame the broken heart of Mary Magdalene, and she could not see for the tears, but the voice of the risen Lord dried those tears and his command to "go tell" roused her to instant action. She sped away at his command spreading the joyful news to others who had not seen the glorious appearance of the risen Lord.

Today those words are still ringing down the centuries to you and to me: "Go tell." What shall our message be? "For God so loved that he gave; for Christ so loved that he gave." Not what was left over, but ALL, because Love was the compelling force, the only force. An answering love should constrain, yea compel us and spur us on to action as we see the need in the hearts of unsaved men and women, for the Christ who taketh away the sins of the world.

Our duty is not only to those close by but should reach out so that the gospel light which we have had the glorious privilege of beholding may shine forth into darkest lands of heathenism. Our responsibility is great because we have had the light of the gospel so long.

Stewardship has been defined as an acceptance of one's personal responsibility to use the right share of anything he possesses such as time, talent, property and skill for the furtherance of the Kingdom of God. It is not a matter of being more generous; it is a matter of rightly dividing one's income with his Partner, Christ. It is a matter of placing God first in one's life. He must not be given our left-over money, the fag-ends of our strength, the remnants of our time. The first and rightful share of these must be set aside for him.

So we find that "Missions represent not so much a human service as a divine enterprise. When we interest ourselves in this we link onto the plans and energies of the Almighty. We must make an honest, earnest effort to share our Lord Jesus Christ with the heathen or we ourselves shall be condemned. Indifference to missions means forfeiting the favor and blessing of the Master himself.

Ah, who among those who have tasted of his grace would attempt to live without him? One of the prime necessities in order to keep him in your heart is to share him with the peoples who have him not."

We shall pass through this world but once; may we pass on the saving gospel of Jesus Christ to those who know him not. Some one is waiting for your word; shall they wait in vain? The seeming defeat of the cross was swallowed up in the victory of the resurrection. Oh, may we not let anything defeat us in our work for the Kingdom of God, but may we ever go onward joyfully and willingly pouring out our love and devotion, time, talent, property and skill that all may be used as he sees best.

"For whosoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." W.

"HAVE FAITH; GO FORWARD!"

Thomas A. Edison, one of the world's greatest men, after 84 years of a full and energetic life, gave to the world's largest audience, over the radio last June, what proved to be his final public utterance. His words make a most powerful sermon.

The message was spoken at a time when banks were continuing to go to the wall, when unemployment was steadily increasing, when sales of all kinds were being held and many stores were cutting prices to the limit, with little or no profit. Pessimistic statements were the rule.

What should such a man say at such a time? Here are his words:

"My message to you is to be courageous! I have lived a long time. I have seen history repeat itself again and again. I have seen many depressions in business. Always America has emerged from these stronger and more prosperous. Be as brave as your fathers were before you. Have faith! Go forward!"

HAS PROHIBITION HURT THE FARMER?

In 1914 Peoria distilleries purchased less than 8,000,000 bushels of corn for beverage liquor and commercial alcohol.

In 1929, two food product and industrial alcohol plants alone purchased 22,525,000 bushels. (Figures furnished by the Peoria Board of Trade.)

Milk for beverage and household purposes produced in the United States in 1917 amounted to 36,500,000,000 pounds. In 1924 production had risen to 54,325,800,000 pounds, an increase of over 50 per cent. (U. S. Department of Agriculture Year Book.)

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

PALM CITY, FLORIDA. Rev. James E. Parker, pastor. A new cement walk and finishing coat of cement upon the rough block steps have greatly improved this church, which is a model church for a rural community.

FORT MYERS, FLORIDA. The Music Club of this city have planted a tree in honor of Mr. Thomas A. Edison, planting it upon the grounds of our Edison Park Church. Mrs. Edison attends this church. At the planting of the tree, Rev. O. T. Anderson delivered the address.

REV. THOMAS H. DERRICK, formerly pastor at Orange City, and who recently spent several weeks in the Government Hospital at Lake City, is now at home at East Plymouth Ave., Deland, Fla. He is gradually recovering his health and is able to be about some, but has to conserve his strength.

NORTH MIAMI, FLORIDA. Rev. Oscar H. Denney, pastor, reports having taken into membership since the first of the year, twenty-eight; all members of the Sunday School except two. This church has also responded very favorably to the "Dollar Plan," having placed forty-one "Coin Cards" in circulation immediately.

INTERLACHEN, FLORIDA. Rev. C. DeW. Brower, pastor. This church has lost a faithful friend and helper in the recent death of Mr. W. B. Sanderson, who has for years been the treasurer of the church, cared for the building, "a faithful doorkeeper in the House of the Lord." He was always present and always ready to share in the responsibilities and the work of the church. One of the Master's fine old men.

TAMPA, FLORIDA. Rev. Walter Metcalf, pastor of the First Congregational Church, will broadcast over WMBR each Sunday morning at 9:15. This service will seek to give a preparatory atmosphere for the work and worship of the Sabbath; and will endeavor to give inspiration and guidance along the pathway of modern life. Mr. Metcalf's sermon, "Triumphant Living," published in The Tampa Church News, of April 1st, is most interesting and helpful. This church took into membership on Easter Sunday eight new members.

ORANGE CITY, FLORIDA. This church has suffered greatly in the death of Mrs. Frank S. Taylor, who has for over forty years been a member and a very active and devoted worker in this church. Her husband, who survives her, has been for a long time a trustee of the church, and is one of its most generous supporters. The funeral was conducted April 1st, by Rev. Thomas H. Derrick, who has been until recently pastor of the church. Mrs. Taylor was a woman of kindly nature, faithful to her home and her church, and will be greatly missed.

CHAPEL DEDICATED.

The beautiful new Knowles Memorial Chapel at Rollins was dedicated on Tuesday, March 29th. This chapel is the gift of Mrs. George E. Warren, of Boston, in memory of her father, Francis Bangs Knowles, one of the founders of Rollins and donor of one of the halls. The $25,000 organ in the church is the gift of another daughter of Mr. Knowles, Mrs. Homer D. Gage, of Worcester, Mass. The chapel is built in the beautiful Mediterranean style of architecture, which has been adopted for the architectural style of the new Rollins' buildings. The sermon for the dedication was preached by Dr. Robert H. Wicks, college pastor at Princeton, and formerly pastor of a Congregational Church at Holyoke, Mass.

There was also dedicated the Annie Russell Theater, presented by Mrs. Edward W. Bok, in honor of her life-long friend, Annie Russell, the actress. At the dedication of this building Mrs. Bok presented the keys of the theater to Dr. Hamilton Holt, President, and Miss Russell appeared in a play for the first time since she retired from the stage fourteen years ago. The theater stands in the same block with the chapel and is connected by two cloisters forming a beautiful quadrangle. These two new buildings are the fourth and fifth units in the new building programs of Rollins College.

OUR WORK IN PORTO RICO.

(The first year of the United Evangelical Church of Porto Rico. Union of the Christian, Congregational and United Brethren Churches.)

The United Evangelical Church of Porto Rico came to the close of the first year of its history at the Annual Assembly held in Ponce, January 19-22, 1932. We can report with joy very marked progress in the cooperative spirit. At this time every church and every worker are enthusiastic about the new organization. This year has been a year of trying out new paths of service. We cannot say that there have been no struggles. That would be to say that we had not lived, for life is a real struggle. We have had to debate many questions, but all has been done in a true Christian spirit. Personal desires have been made subservient to those of the general cause. Love and good will have prevailed.

Some of the results that have been attained have been a better understanding of each other, and so a better appreciation of each other, and a decided advance in the administration of the work by the nationals. Uniform plans and methods of work will contribute to our strength and we have been able to have these approved by studying them carefully in our Executive Council, which is composed of fourteen members who come from the various fields of the church and understand the local conditions. There were ninety-five representatives in attendance at the Annual Assembly. Every discussion was carried on harmoniously and never has there reigned a better spirit.

We close the year with 3,490 members. There were received 398 new members during the year. In our Sunday Schools we had 5,732 pupils and teachers and in our C. E. Societies 1,680 young people. The offerings collected on the field here come to $12,100. These numbers do not represent an increase in every case, but they do give proof to loyalty in service. This has been perhaps the hardest year for finance that we have known in twenty-five years, yet the offerings for church work are almost the same as last year.

We have to lament the loss of one of our oldest ministers. On September 25, 1931, Rev. Macario Rodriguez died in our Ryder Memorial Hospital at Humacao. This was after having to suffer two severe surgical operations. Don Macario was a strong preacher of the Gospel, loyal through almost twenty-seven years in the work of the Master. We were fortunate in having a young man graduate from our Seminary, Luis Rosario Nieves, who comes to take the place left-vacant. Luis married one of the graduate nurses from our hospital and they are stationed in the church work at Cieba, where we can look forward to consecrated service.

During the year two of our young men were ordained to the Holy ministry. Ramon Morales on the South District at Tallaboa and Cruz A. Suarez on the East District at Yabucoa, each in his own church was ordained in a most impressive service.

ACTIVITIES.

The summer conference at San German was a splendid success. It took the form of an institute for pastors and missionaries. The United Evangelical Church had the largest number in attendance. Almost all our workers took advantage of this class work, which means better churches.

This year we sent 20 of our young people to the Young People's Conference for a week's training in leadership. Now, these young people are helping in Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, and as church officials and teachers during the year, with attendance of at least 130. With these activities we believe that the year 1932 will be better. We now plan for an evangelistic campaign of personal and pastoral evangelism. May we not count on an increased volume of prayer from our larger constituency and with our united efforts make real progress this year?

C. I. MOHLER,
Executive Secretary.

MONTHLY REMITTANCES.

(Extracts from Minutes Adopted at Mid-Winter Meeting, 1932.)

The Commission on Missions, acting through its Executive Committee, is moved to take action with regard to the importance of more frequent remittances of contributions from the churches by the following considerations:

1. In 1930, 41.2 per cent of the apportionment contributions from the churches were sent in during the last forty days of the year; in 1929, 42 per cent.

2. The situation compels the State Conferences and the National Societies to borrow considerable sums of money to carry on their work, and the substantial interest charged on these loans must be subtracted from work done on the field.

3. The withholding of contributions seems to lead in many cases to the use of the money for current expenses, and frequently it seems difficult to put this money back into the missionary treasury before the year closes.

4. The Apportionment Plan, under which we are now working, calls for weekly or monthly offerings from the people. It is an essential part of the present Apportionment Plan that money go into the State Conference and missionary society treasuries with reasonable promptness after its receipt from the people.

Therefore, it is voted:

1. That during the year 1932 we make it a major item in our suggestion of methods to the churches that they remit contributions as near as possible the first of each month (in the case of churches having less than $500 apportionment, at least quarterly, on the first of April, July, October and January).

2. That special publicity be given to this vote and to an explanation of it by insertion in the Congregationalist and the Missionary Herald, in the State papers and in other suitable ways. If possible, a copy of this vote is to be sent to every church treasurer in the country.

3. All our secretaries and missionary speakers are asked to have this matter in mind in visiting local churches, and to call the vote to the attention of the proper official.

4. Since this is a matter of as much concern to the State office as to the national societies, we ask the cooperation of State superintendents and State staffs in carrying out the vote.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CONVENTION.

The Southern Christian Convention meets in regular biennial session at Burlington, N. C., on Tuesday, April 26th. The regular biennial session of the Woman's Convention will meet at 10:00 A. M., and hold its regular sessions for business and promotion, morning and afternoon of Tuesday, the 26th. The women will also have their report and their program for the General Convention on Wednesday evening, April 27th.) The General Convention will meet for its opening session at 7:30 P. M., Tuesday, the 26th, and will continue for three sessions a day—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, April 27th, 28th, and 29th. This is likely to be an epoch in the history of our church, because for the first time we will be meeting not only as the Southern Convention, but also, for some meetings, as the Congregational-Christian Convention of the Southeast. The Southern Convention is an incorporated body and so is the Congregational Convention of the Southeast, and there are many legal problems that have to be worked out before either body can be released from its obligations and corporate existence and come to be one body. There will be joint sessions and joint meetings, but there will be of necessity separate sessions and councils in order to carry out the requirements of the two corporate bodies. The Southern Christian Convention has, as a corporate body, subsidiary corporations, whose corporate laws and requirements must be met. Of these Elon College is one, the Christin Orphanage another, the Mission Board, Inc., another, and in addition to these corporations, the Convention owns and sponsors

THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and has Boards through which its interests are promoted—Board of Superannuation, Board of Religious Education, Board of Finance. Also constituting the Convention are seven Conferences, constituent bodies of the Convention, most, if not all, of whom are incorporated. These corporate interests have to be considered and their corporate laws and requirements carried out. Even this will show something of the value, intricacy and efficiency of the work that must be done to complete the merger in a legitimate and proper way. And what is said of the corporate existence of the Southern Convention may be said of the corporate existence of the Convention of the Southeast of the Congregationalists, in so far as there are corporate entities of this body.

Nowhere have we heard objections to the merger of the two bodies, but everywhere the desire is expressed that we shall work out a real merger without the absorption of one body by the other, or the annihilation, or "swallowing up" of either. Everywhere the desire is expressed that we work out the union and complete the merger in a proper, fraternal, mutual and helpful manner. This will, in a measure, indicate the importance of the forthcoming session of the Convention, April 26th to 29th, inclusive. Surely every delegate elected should make an effort to attend.

And never more was counsel needed for laying wise plans to carry on the interests and the enterprises of the church. No church can long exist without carrying on its institutional interests and enterprises, which, of course, mean the climax and constitute the combined efforts of the local churches. Our present time seems to have lost faith in business and in affairs; and the whole world of industry and enterprise about us suffers the sad consequences of that loss of faith. Business and industry will not be revived until there comes a new faith, or a revival of old faith. The church will have to play its part in this revival of faith, and there is no better way to begin this revival of faith in mankind, in institutions, and in God than by beginning through the church. We need now to revive our faith, to learn more of the needs and prove our loyalty to our institutions and church enterprises by increasing our faith. This we will do if we plan well our work and give the people programs, plans and prospects that will renew their faith, increase their loyalty, and stimulate their zeal. We should come to the Convention with prayerful hearts, with open minds and with a burning zeal to do those very things, to adopt those very plans, outline those very programs, that will increase the faith of our people. If ever the church needed to deny itself and make an effort to stimulate and to increase its faith in God and humanity, that time is now. The Southern Churchman gives this, and it is certainly appropriate as we think and plan and pray for our coming Convention:

"Faith is needed all the way,
Faith to toil and faith to pray,
Faith to learn and faith to teach,
Faith to practice, faith to preach,
Faith to start each day anew,
Faith to do our duty, too;
Faith to help the weak along,
Faith to bear, in patience, wrong;
Faith to smile, though sad within,
Faith to conquer every sin;
Faith to ask Him for His care,
While we earthly trials bear;
Faith to smother every sigh,
Faith to live and faith to die."

Morality does not make a Christian: yet no man can be a Christian without morality.—Selected.

SOLDIERS OF PEACE.

There are soldiers of peace. A great orator declared to a breathless audience a while ago that the reason "why gay uniforms, martial music and the measured tread of soldiers, carrying their guns on parade, stirred the hearts and evoked the enthusiasm of the on-looking multitudes, was because those men were going to the front to show us how to die." Possibly the orator's explanation tells why, with the outbreak of war, our spirit of patriotism runs high, and that we will do anything in reason for those who are going to the front to die for their country, to lay down their lives for us. We yet recall how our prayers were lifted daily for the safety of our "boys" at the front, of how our money was given in millions that they might have every necessity and comfort as they went out "to show us how to die"—to show the world how to kill and be killed. It was a great life, a great day, a great experience! How the mind and heart of humanity throbs and thrills with patriotism as (to quote the Roman gladiator's salutation) "we who are about to die salute you."

But there are soldiers of peace as well as soldiers of war; soldiers of life as well as soldiers of death; soldiers of salvation and security as well as soldiers of destruction and ruin. Out yonder on the battle-front today, the nearby and the far-flung battle lines of righteousness, are the missionaries, at home and abroad, as brave as any soldier that ever went to battle, as true as any son that ever bore arms, as patriotic as any officer that ever commanded a company, as heroic as any soul that ever blessed this earth. They, too, are out there on the battle lines representing us. They are there not to kill and to be killed, but to carry life, even more abundant life, and to show those to whom they have gone, how to live. They, too, are giving their lives, not that others may die, but that others, through their message and their life, may live. They are our missionaries, carrying not the insignia and implements of war and destruction, but of peace and of life. And the world never needed these soldiers of peace as it needs them today. Why not give to them, the torch-bearers of the light that shineth in darkness, the bearers of the message of eternal peace—why not show them our love and loyalty also? Why not give to them some of the encouragement, the support, the backing that we gave to the soldiers of the war? In this, we will have the comfort, in the cooperation and the assurance of the Prince of Peace, of whom the prophet was speaking when he said: "And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." J. O. A.

THE UNDERWORLD—THE UPPERWORLD.

The underworld looms large in the press of today and, especially as it relates to the City of Chicago. There is in this condition much to excite concern on the part of good people, not only in that city but similar conditions on a smaller scale in other cities. But when the relative conditions are observed the condition is not so bad as it seems.

There is an upperworld that is much larger, much more powerful in influence over humanity than the underworld. Even in Chicago there is an upperworld of business, education, social life religion, and home-life that, relatively compared, makes the underworld look small.

It represents millions as compared with thousands. There is that vast army of daily workers in factories, stores, offices, hospitals, schools, laundries, and kitchens that go about their daily tasks in obedience to human needs and human improvements. There is that decent, safe, sober throng on the streets that pass one another in safety and peace, and that represent the Christian civilization of this Republic; and the happy school children going to and from school in all the luxury of this good day. If people would look more at the good and less at the evil it would improve the good and reduce the evil. If the press would publish more of the upperworld and less of the underworld, it would improve the press and improve the readers. Bad is like good in this respect: the more publicity it receives, the more active it becomes. If no one mentions your name you will drop out of public notice. Advertising is psychologically wise business. It may be overdone, but it is good business. If nothing were said or printed about the underworld, it would wane. One reason why a revival meeting is better attended than the regular services in a church is because there is more said and printed about it. What this age needs is more said, written, and printed about the upperworld and less said, written and printed about the underworld.

DOLLAR-A-MONTH CLUB FOR ELON.

On March 19th, an interesting and enthusiastic group of the Alumni of Elon College, the majority of whom are teaching in the High Schools of North Carolina and Virginia, gathered at the college for a complimentary luncheon. The informal program for the occasion called for short addresses and expressions from those present. Among those speaking were: Mr. R. S. Rainey, President of the Alumni Association; Mr. L. J. Perry, Principal of the Reidsville High School, Reidsville, N. C.; Mr. W. D. Loy, Principal Berry Hill High School, Charlotte, N. C.; Mr. John Farmer, Wilson, N. C.; and Mr. M. L. Patrick, teacher in the High School at High Point, N. C. Mr. Patrick suggested, as a means of helping to finance Elon College, a Dollar-a-Month Club for the college and that every Alumnus of the institution be invited to join this club. The plan was enthusiastically adopted by those present, and Mr. Patrick was asked to head up the movement. He has sent this idea to every Alumnus of the institution. It is indeed gratifying that a number have responded immediately.

At an Alumni meeting in Greensboro, N. C., Thursday evening, April 7th, plans were laid to reach the Alumni of certain sections before Commencement, with the hope that we might have at least one hundred members of this club by that time. The goal set for membership in the club is one thousand from the Alumni and former students of the college. It was pointed out that this plan is within the reach of practically every one who has attended the college. This is certainly a practical plan. Our expenses at the college are monthly and this proposes to help us meet the same. Mr. Patrick is earnestly soliciting the cooperation of everyone in this commendable undertaking, and may I add my earnest appeal to you to join with us.

The following is a list of those who have already sent in their names for membership in the club, including amounts mailed:

SUFFOLK LETTER.

One of the four District Missionary Rallies of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference was held in Bethlehem Church on Thursday, April 6, 1932. It was the eleventh annual session and was attended by more than one hundred and fifty persons, including five ministers, Revs. W. M. Jay, R. E. Brittle, E. B. White, H. S. Hardcastle, and W. W. Staley. This district includes fourteen churches.

The meeting was called to order by President Mrs. B. D. Jones, at 10:30, and the subject of the hour was, "Facing the Facts With Faith." After the hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers," Dr. I. W. Johnson conducted devotional services, giving the story of Ruth and a fine interpretation of the Good Samaritan as her message. Dr. W. M. Jay offered prayer.

After the worship period, the President, Mrs. B. D. Jones, delivered the annual address on the topic of the day, "Facing the Facts With Faith." She named facts which Missions have always had to face, and challenged the meeting to face the facts with faith in God, in man, and in self. She named ways in which women could meet the present needs. The address was well prepared, well delivered, and well received.

A recognition service was then held and members present from various societies requested to stand and be counted and to make any report from their society. Mr. R. T. Bradford, President of the Eastern Virginia Missionary Society, under the head of "Tell Me a Story," told the story of three Christian women in three countries, illustrating the spirit of sacrifice and service, challenging American women to the same virtues. It was a beautiful story told in a very effective manner and spirit and touched the heart of the audience. After the offering was taken, Mr. H. S. Hardcastle gave a brief, but clear, history of the spring rallies in their growth and achievements. Following these interesting features of the meeting, the main address of the day was delivered by Dr. J. O. Atkinson on, "Foundations of Our Faith." In his great address he emphasized the fact that Missions have changed the world's worship, its conception of the value of personality, government, and work. After this inspiring address the morning session closed with the benediction by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

A good luncheon was then served by the ladies of Bethlehem Church, and the throng enjoyed the meal and the social rest hour.

The afternoon session opened with "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," and a prayer by Rev. R. E. Brittle, pastor of Bethlehem Church.

The main address of the afternoon was delivered by Mrs. George Martin, President of the Woman's Missionary work of Norfolk, and a member of the Stewardship Council of the Southern Baptist Convention. Her subject, "How Others Are Facing their Situations," led her to consider the problems of evangelism, economy, depression, peace, and the problems that lay at the heart of all these problems—that of devotion and consecration to Christ.

Another feature of the afternoon program was a round-table discussion of "Our Problems" helpfully led by Mrs. J. R. Darden, of Holland. It was entered into most interestingly by many of the audience.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: Mrs. B. D. Jones, President; Mrs. Herbert Harrell, Vice-President; Miss Lillye Holland, Secretary.

Special musical numbers were rendered. A quartette by Misses Josephine Griffin and Ruby Rawles, Joel Harrell and W. W. Ballard, and a duet by Mrs. Sumner Rawles and Mrs. J. J. Gwaltney, accompanied by Mrs. I. W. Johnson in both cases. Reports of appreciation of program and hospitality were read. Cypress was chosen as the place of next meeting.

A large display of posters, hand-painted by a wealthy woman of Minneapolis, and loaned for this occasion, added to the beauty and information of the decorations.

It was a fine day, a fine audience, splendid services and benediction by the writer.

W. W. STALEY.

A MEMORIAL SERVICE.

Bro. George Henry Frey, of Norfolk, Va., passed away suddenly on March 16th, being 71 years of age. For over 45 years he had been a deacon of the First Christian Church.

Sunday, April 3rd, our pastor, Rev. P. Houlder Brown arranged and conducted a memorial service that made a profound impression on the large audience that filled the auditorium.

Besides the usual floral decoration the vacant chair was placed on the platform in front of the flag on half-staff. The chair was decorated with a large, white bow of silk ribbon.

The processional hymn was intoned and the choir and the speakers took their places.

The opening hymn, "Shall We Gather at the River," was sung and prayer was offered by the pastor. The choir sang Bro. Frey's favorite hymns: "Jesus Saviour, Pilot Me," and "Abide With Me."

Mr. B. F. Morgan, the president of the board, spoke of Mr. Frey as a Christian, Mr. J. F. Steele of The Virginia Pilot, spoke of him as a citizen and business man, and Mr. L. L. Fulcher, superintendent of the Sunday School, spoke of him as a church member.

Mrs. A. F. Hozier placed a bouquet of white flowers on the vacant chair, the congregation stood in silence while the organ softly played, "Nearer My God to Thee."

Mrs. A. F. Petrey and Mrs. B. L. Eason sang a duet, "O Think of a Home Over There."

Rev. Brown delivered the memorial sermon on the subject, "Faithful Servants," taking his text from Phil. 4th chapter.

The congregation was greatly moved and the service was concluded by a consecration to the Lord of all who promised to become "Faithful Servants." The service will be remembered for a long time.

Bro. Frey had been ill for a month, but had improved in health to the extent that he could be up and around.

He had just finished his supper and went into the parlor to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, sat down in a chair and died in a few minutes.

The church has sustained a great loss by his departure, but we are comforted by knowing that heaven is enriched by a soul cleansed in the blood of the Lamb.

Bro. Frey and his wife, to whom we extend our heartfelt sympathy and prayers, were faithful attendants at all services of the church and always had their church at heart.

The funeral service was conducted by our pastor, assisted by Rev. Caviness, and the body was sent to New York for burial.

THE BETTER COUNTRY.

"I seek another country, and therefore, am content to be a wanderer upon the earth," wrote John Wesley in his Journal on June 4, 1759, as he left Newcastle, where he was inclined to linger, and resolutely mounted his horse and went on to his next appointment. The devoted old pioneer speaks for us all who have our hearts set up entering the heavenly home when this life is over.

The book of Hebrews says of saints of old: "But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly, therefore, God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city." (Heb. 11:16.) Is that land so beautiful that it may all be called a city, and city so great that it may be called a country? We must go and see. If you love the country, or if you love the city, you will want to be there.

Where is heaven? We have been thinking much about that. Human research brings no answer. The Bible does not undertake to tell us, only indirectly and incidentally, as God's dealings with humanity are revealed. Jesus teaches us to pray to God in heaven. It must be within reach of the praying spirit. Jesus came from heaven to live his earthly life, and returned to heaven when his work was done in his first advent. He assured the dying thief: "Today thou shalt be with me in paradise." That day was far spent, but they would reach the paradise of God before the day was done. There is much of mystery about the question of the heavenly home, but faith is given to deal with mysteries and hold us to the path of obedience until faith becomes sight.

The word rendered "country" in this notable eleventh of Hebrews, first appearing in the fourteenth verse, is "patris," which means "fatherland." It is a dear word. You know the feelings of love and loyalty that belong to this relationship. Sir Walter Scott has the old minstrel sing:

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
'This is my own, my native land';
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burned,
As home his footsteps he hath turned
From wandering in a far-off land;
Lives such a man, go, mark him well,
For him no minstrel's music swells."

Travelers in foreign lands tell us they feel a deep thrill of joy when the home-coming ship plows its way into the harbor and they see the flag of the homeland floating in the breeze above the port of entry. Or, your journey may not even have been so far as to foreign shores, just a trip out over the highways of your own country, but coming back to the home acres and your house, especially if it is an ancestral home, you are happy to be back at "home, sweet home."

But, however dear to us these earthly attachments may be, we cannot possess them forever. Our earthly patrimony will fail us some time. We may be living in another country than the land of our birth, and already have broken some of the home ties. Others may have come into possession of the home of our childhood, and hold the title, and till the soil, and call it home. Even under the most favorable conditions of life, we cannot live here forever. Life is getting away from us. With the passing of the days it becomes history, and soon the last page of the record will appear, the book will be closed, and we will be called away.

That better land is God's country in a way this earth is not. No sin enters there. It does not depend on the sun for light, as the earth does, and draws from it practically all the conditions that unite in making the world habitable. The evils and diseases and heartaches that flow from the presence of sin do not mar that land. God is there, Jesus is there, holy angels are at home there, the righteous dead are there. Paul said that death would mean his departure from this life to be with Christ. The Revelator says, "And there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him; and they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads." (Rev. 22:3, 4.)

The state of the saints in heaven is exceedingly happy and good. They are at home with God. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." (Rev. 7:16, 17.)

Jesus gives us a good thought of that land in his conversation with the disciples on the night of his arrest and trial. "Let not your heart be troubled," he began to say, and after asking that their faith in him should be as steady as their faith in God, in the trials soon to come, he spoke of heaven. He said: "In my Father's house are many mansions . . . I go to prepare a place for you." (John 14:2.) Home is not home unless we have a place there; and we are promised a place in heaven. Have you tried to feel at home in a great city, wandering about the streets, sitting down to rest in public places for a little, then moving on to another place? That is not the picture of heaven here indicated. Here is the thought. I have been away on a journey. I am coming back to the city where I belong, where I have a place. Off at the station, out on the street, turning here and there over familiar ground I come in sight of home. It is my place, a place prepared by loving hands and in which loving hearts are awaiting me. That is home, and that is like heaven.

They are employed in that better country. The Bible tells us: "They serve him day and night in his temple; and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them." (Rev. 7:15.) And again we read: "His servants shall serve him." The saints are reunited there in loving fellowship, nevermore to be broken. David said of his baby boy who had just died: "I shall go to him." (II. Samuel 12:23.) If we should be inclined to think that the difficulties of finding our loved ones is too great, amid the millions of the heavenly inhabitants, we do not think well of the heavenly Father's care of whom it is said that not even a sparrow is forgotten before him.—Editorial in Wesleyan Methodist.

THE PLACE OF EMPHASIS.

The Church of Jesus Christ has a definite spiritual mission to perform. The emphasis of the pulpit should always be upon the preaching of the gospel. This is the duty and the joy of every true man who stands at the sacred desk. His preference and purpose is to do nothing else than to preach Christ and bring humanity into the way of salvation.

In accomplishing this great task, many kinds of messages must be delivered. There are occasions when the material interests of the Kingdom of God must be given attention. This is where the necessity of calling for money arises. If liberal and ready responses to these calls were made, their repetition would be unnecessary and the calls would be quite infrequent; but the hesitation of the people to contribute adequately puts upon the leaders of the Church the duty of multiplying the appeals. The Kingdom of God must not be allowed to perish for the lack of funds.

With all the need for money, there is yet no probability that the emphasis of the church will be placed upon collecting funds. Complaints to this effect are not justifiable. A five-minute talk for contributions, delivered during the hour of church service, however, may lead some member of the congregation to complain that the minister is forgetting to preach the gospel and is placing his emphasis upon money. The great volume of church thought and denominational planning concerns spiritual life. Our general boards do not forget this. Beyond the funds for which they ask is the purpose for which the funds are to be contributed. They well know that money is not an object in itself. It is worthless except as it serves the work in hand and builds the Kingdom of the Master. Whatever fears may be entertained regarding the church's danger of becoming secularized, let it be remembered that the deep heart of the church yearns for spiritual conquests. Stewards and general boards and pastors have only one use for money, and that is the establishment and extension of the Kingdom of God.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

HAD HE NOT COME.

There had been no babe in Bethlehem's manger,
Along the shores of Galilee, there had been no mystic stranger,
No healing faith, no saving grace,
No meeting with Him face to face;
There had been no wise men from the East,
Nor angels singing songs of peace,
No gifts of frankincense and myrrh,
No songs of praise our souls to stir;
Had He not come.

No church bells' chimes
Would ever ring in strains sublime;
The darksome night without a ray
Of hope along the clouded way;
But He has come.

And so, I say, the night has passed.
The morning sun, the song birds' glee,
The flowers that bloom, the budding tree,
To you and me this message give:
Because He lives, we, too, shall live.

A PRAYER.

Jesus, how futile our following if it be not all the way! Halting is losing. We may test the footing and circumnavigate the steeps, but Golgotha may not be lost to view, nor its enactment unrealized. Thou, blessed Lord, didst not seek to escape from the rugged climb. It was the Father's will to bring thee to the pinnacle of divine power, and we thank thee that in thy victory is our sufficiency for gaining the summit of eternal light. To thy name be praise forever. Amen.

WHAT BECAME OF MR. DOLLAR BILL NO. 795-A?

A SHORT STORY INSPIRED BY THE DOLLAR PLAN.
By FRED GREY.

Did I ever tell you the story of the Five One Dollar Bills? No! Not a Five Dollar Bill, but Five One Dollar Bills. Each one a very important bill and each one feeling his importance very, very much. And they were very dignified Bills, as they had a right to be. They had the picture of George Washington stamped right on their faces. So all these Dollar Bills had a great reputation to uphold. Well! There they were, all folded together, lying snugly in a purse. And that was the first real unusual circumstance—because it was not often that this particular purse had the honor of such wonderful company.

Now these five dignified Bills all belonged to the same family. They all bore the image of their father—George Washington—and their home was in Washington, D. C. They had come from a very clean, very carefully managed and carefully guarded home. And this was their first trip away from home. You can imagine how excited they were, and full of wonder as to what adventures were in store for them. However, there was very little time to speculate about that, because right at that moment the Purse was opened, and Bill No. 791A was separated from his brothers, and then the Purse was closed with a snap! And now there were four Bills in the Purse. How they did chatter and wonder what would become of Bill No. 791A. And while they are wondering about it, and no one can tell them, suppose we follow to see what happened! Well, after all, it was very simple. No. 791A (don't forget the "A" in that name. It is always very important!)—No. 791A soon found himself in the butcher's shop. He had been given away in exchange for meat, bread and cabbage to furnish a dinner for the man who owned the Purse. And that's what happened to 791A!

About 10 o'clock in the morning the laundry man came, and again the Purse was opened, and No. 792A was taken out and given to the laundry man, and he put this Bill in his Purse, where it had to keep company with a lot of small change—some of whom did not have very good manners! So now there were three Bills left, and they were getting very excited, and not a little nervous, wondering what strange experiences waited for them!

At 11 o'clock there came a ring at the front door bell, and there stood the paper boy! Oh, dear! It just seemed as though everybody wanted money! Anyway, the paper boy must be paid, otherwise there will be no evening news for the man who owned the Purse. So—once more the Purse was opened, and Bill No. 793A was given to the paper boy, and off he went whistling. No. 793A was shoved down, all crumpled up, into the boy's pocket, where there were all sorts of things, such as marbles and string and a stick of chewing gum! And what became of No. 793A after that I don't know! we must hope that he did not become lost!

Well, now there were just two bills left. And as the Purse was shut with a vigorous snap, these two Bills heard the man say, "My, just look how the money goes! Anyway, I'm going to keep these two Bills—you see!" And then it was all very quiet for a long time and the two Bills hugged each other and made all sorts of promises to write if they got separated. Very soon it seemed as though the man who owned the Purse was walking. And then he was running—and then—the Purse was opened again, and Bill No. 794A was given to the conductor of the street car in exchange for some street car tokens and some small change. Meantime Bill No. 794A found himself in a leather bag, crowded up against a lot of other Bills—fives and twos and ones—such a dirty, smelly lot that 794A just crinkled and curled up in distress.

Now Bill No. 795A was all alone! No one to talk to and no one to cheer him up. And there he was—all neatly folded up, and oh, what a lot of thinking he did all by himself! After a while he heard voices talking—and then the Purse was opened the last time, and Bill No. 795A knew his time had come! What would become of him? He heard a voice speaking!

"Well! Unless we get a great many One Dollar Bills given for the work of Jesus—for the missionaries, the hospitals, the schools, and field workers at home and abroad—all telling the good news of God's love to men—unless we receive a great many—I am afraid much of the work will have to stop."

"That's too bad!" exclaimed the man with the Purse, and the Dollar Bill itself just shook with sympathy.

"But that's not all," continued the first man. "Already we have had to cut the salaries of our missionaries and the other workers, and many of them are in great need. So—we are asking our boys and girls, and their fathers and mothers, and everybody—to help in this emergency by making a special gift of One Dollar each."

Just here Dollar Bill No. 795A did his best to wiggle out of the man's hand, because he did want to go to help the missionaries and pastors. But the man held on to him very tight.

"How many Dollar Bills do you need?" asked the man with the Purse.

"Oh—we need a million," replied the first man.

"My, what a lot of Bills!" exclaimed the man with the Purse. "I'm sure I can't give you a million dollars. Everybody seems after money this day. Here I had Five One Dollar Bills this morning—all fresh and clean—and this is the last I've got! Well! I can't give a million dollars for Jesus—but in this emergency, rather than have the missionaries called home and God's work stopped, I can be one of a million to give one dollar!"

So! That's what became of Dollar Bill No. 795A. And how happy he felt that he was to be used in such a wonderful way! Soon he found himself with a lot of other One Dollar Bills—and wonders upon wonders—he found his brother, 791A, because the butcher had sent it, too, for the same purpose.

Oh, yes! That reminds me—I sent a Dollar Bill to keep No. 795A company—but his number is 544A. Wouldn't you like to send one, too? And so—in this time of great need in the world we shall all send a lot of happy Dollar Bills on their way to carry the message of Jesus and his love!

Surely every pastor in every church will give all their people at least a chance, and a kindly request, to make some contribution to Missions this year. How can any pastor assume the responsibility of not giving his people a chance to make some offering?

Thank you heartily.

EASTERN VIRGINIA MISSIONARY RALLIES

The Missionary Rallies of the Eastern Virginia Conference were held last week. On the whole they were well attended and the programs, as printed, were fully carried out. It was rather remarkable that not in a single instance, so far as we now recall, did one on the program fail to respond, or was any part of the program left vacant.

The first Rally of the week, the one at Christian Temple, on Tuesday, was presided over by Mrs. H. C. Caviness, Superintendent. All societies were represented, and the program was carried out to the letter and on time, or ahead of time. The second of the week, on Wednesday, at Bethlehem, was presided over by Mrs. B. D. Jones, and was very largely attended. The Open Forum, with its questions and answers in solving problems, was especially interesting. The Rally which met at Franklin on Thursday, is made up of only a few churches. This district will possibly unite with two of the other districts before another year. This was presided over by Mrs. W. K. Saunders. The Rally at New Lebanon on Friday was the busiest and fullest of the four. Every person on the program was present and well prepared, and took full part as requested. Mrs. E. T. Atkinson presided and was happy in presenting her superintendent's message, and the response of all her leaders was ready and liberal. This district holds to the original plan of a real One-Day School of Missions, and spends the day with the one thought in mind—that of teaching Missions and carrying real information to every Society represented, and stimulating interest in Missions through information as well as inspiration. This district always reaches the high-water mark of spiritual enthusiasm and interest, and the sweet spirit in which all respond in their efforts and desires to make the day a successful one, is wholesome and inspiring indeed.

The Rallies are certainly worth while, since they acquaint the local Societies with what each and all are doing and bring home to the delegates information not to be obtained otherwise. The four already held are of deep interest and abiding concern. A duty well performed always makes a contribution. For example, one of the outstanding features of the Nansemond District Rally was the reading of the Secretary's report by the faithful Secretary, Miss Lillye Holland. One can get a complete history of this district and what it has done from the records of this Secretary, and each year one looks forward to the reading of the proceedings of the last meeting as a real contribution of the day. It only shows how a duty signally and faithfully performed carries its reward and makes its contribution of worth and weight. This example will suffice to indicate the value of doing well the task that is assigned one. Our District Rallies are certainly making a valuable contribution to our missionary life and progress.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Missions Secretary.

NANSEMOND-GATES MISSIONARY RALLY ATTENDED BY MANY.

The eleventh annual district rally of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference, including the Nansemond-Gates District, was held at Bethlehem Christian Church April 6th. One hundred and seventy-five delegates, ministers and visitors were present from the Societies of the district. The theme of the rally was "Facing the Facts With Faith." Mrs. B. D. Jones, president, called the meeting to order and after the hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers," the devotional service was conducted by Mrs. I. W. Johnson, who used the story of Ruth and an interpretation of the Good Samaritan as her message. The Rev. W. M. Jay offered prayer.

Immediately after devotionals the president delivered her annual address, using as her theme the topic of the rally, "Facing the Facts With Faith." She called attention to the universal and permanent facts which Missions have always had to face, and challenged her hearers to face these facts with faith in God, faith in one's fellowmen, and faith in one's self. She enumerated some specific ways in which women could help to meet the present situation.

A welcome or recognition service in which the representatives from the various Societies were asked to stand and be counted revealed about 175 present. Mrs. R. T. Bradford, president of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference, under the head of "Tell Me a Story," related the story of three Christian women in three countries illustrating the spirit of sacrifice and service, and challenging American women to the same virtues. Preceding the offering, which is used for sending delegates to summer missionary conferences, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle gave a brief history of the growth and achievements of the spring rallies. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, secretary of missions, spoke on "Foundations of Our Faith," emphasizing the fact that missions have changed the world's worship, its conception of the worth of personality and of government, and its work. The morning session closed with a benediction by the Rev. H. S. Hardcastle. Lunch was served in the Sunday School rooms by the ladies of the Bethlehem Church.

After the hymn, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," and an invocation by the Rev. R. E. Brittle, pastor of the host church, Mrs. George Martin, the president of the woman's missionary work of Norfolk and member of the Stewardship Council of the Southern Baptist Convention, spoke on "How Others are Facing Their Situations." She dealt with the problems of evangelism, economic problems and the depression, peace, and the problem that lay at the heart of all these problems—that of consecration and devotion to Christ. Another helpful feature of the afternoon program was the round-table discussion on "Our Problems," led by Mrs. J. R. Darden, of Holland.

The following officers were elected at the business session: President, Mrs. B. D. Jones; Vice-President, Mrs. Herbert Harrell; Secretary, Miss Lillye Holland. The committee on resolutions submitted a report expressing appreciation of the program and hospitality. Cypress Chapel was selected as the place of meeting next year.

Other features of the program were a stirring address by J. M. Darden, assistant secretary of missions, special musical numbers by a quartette composed of Misses Josephine Griffin and Ruby Rawles, Joel Harrell and W. W. Ballard, and a duet.—Norfolk Virginian Pilot.

A CLARION CALL FROM A GREAT SOUL.

I fear you are burdened by a very pessimistic atmosphere in Boston. This is no time for that. It is the Board's great opportunity to show its inherent faith and strength. It was at such an hour at the New Haven meeting of the Congregational Council in New Haven a few years ago when they were about to yield to Dean Brown's appeal to shut out all consideration of ministerial relief for another year, the complete change was made and the entire $5,000,000 proposed fund was granted to the Ministerial Relief Fund! The American Board needs courage and enthusiasm for its work, and not faltering or mere 'prudential' consideration. You younger men (in spirit) should get together and take the lead. Go to the churches. Press the timeliness of the hour, and the resources in Christian hearts and the spirit of God. Don't give up the ship! Wherever your flag flies. Support especially the hard-pressed stations, and have friends and foes alike know that you are there to win, as Paul was and as were Napoleon at Austerlitz and Wellington at Waterloo! God is on your side.—From Letter of Henry A. Stimson, D. D., in Missionary Herald.

Beverly Adkins, 22-months'-old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Leslie Adkins, of Aleppo, Syria, has already started on her missionary career. Recently while a Moslem lady, who speaks English, was visiting the Adkins' home, Beverly trotted into her father's study, brought out a book and presented it to the guest. It was "The Bible Society Record." Apparently the indirect method did not appeal to Beverly.

The Bible is a book in comparison with which all others in my eyes are of minor importance, and in all my perplexities and distresses has never failed to give me strength.—Gen. Robert E. Lee.

PLAYTIME!

"Playtime" is the alluring name of a mimeographed bulletin issued frequently by the International Society of Christian Endeavor, through its Department of Recreation, of which Carroll Wright is the versatile chairman. We are reprinting this week some of the games suggested in these bulletins during the past year, hoping that they will help make your playtime fun.

A Boat Race.—Place two chairs a few feet apart at one end of the room and facing the opposite end. Ask a boy to sit on one chair, another boy to sit on the lap of the first, another on the lap of the second, and so on until there are eight all together. Then get eight girls to take similar positions on the other chair. Inform your players that, no matter what happens, they are to retain these same sitting positions, and to assist them to do this, each must grasp the waist of the person in front (except, of course, the one in front). At a given signal, the chairs are to be removed and the two lines of players, still retaining the sitting position, are to race to a goal without breaking lines.

Nose and Toe Tag.—One player is "IT" and may tag any other player not standing in "nose and toe position," which means grasping one's nose with the right hand and the toe of one's shoe with the left hand. As soon as "IT" has passed a player, he may assume his natural position, but must be on his guard to assume the nose and toe position as soon as "IT" approaches him.

Jumbled Flowers. Pass out slips with the following jumbled letters from which names of flowers are to be made. How many can you work out?

1. a-s-n-y-p.
2. r-s-a-e-t.
3. c-n-a-a-n.
4. a-z-n-i-i-n.
5. h-a-l-d-a-i.
6. x-l-o-h-p.
7. i-p-n-s-k.
8. r-m-e-g-u-i-n-a.
9. t-a-n-r-c-n-o-i-a.
10. s-r-e-o.

Perhaps some of your ingenious young people will suggest some other "jumbles" for you to work out!

Chewing the Rag.—As each guest starts down the receiving line, a large molasses kiss is handed him, which he is to chew while meeting those in the line. He must shake hands with each person and call him by name. As each person reaches the end of the line, he stands in line, and greets the rest as part of the receiving line. It's fun trying to talk with sticky candy in your mouth!

Simple Simon's Silly Smile.—"IT" goes from one to another asking questions. All questions must be answered with Simple Simon's Silly Smile, without laughing. Should the one questioned laugh, he must take the place of "IT."

Parlor Slapjack.—Circle formation, standing. Hands with palms outstretched are held behind. "IT" walks around outside, suddenly slapping an outstretched hand, and, without stopping, continues to WALK around circle in same direction. The player tapped immediately WALKS in opposite direction, the objective for both being the vacant space. The one who reaches it first remains—the other is IT. When they meet, "IT" may do a stunt of his own choosing, which the other must imitate exactly. They then shake hands and continue racing the same way.

Foolish Stunts.—Each player writes on slip of paper the most foolish thing he ever did. The slips are read and the person guessing the authorship of the most wins the prize.

BE TRUE TO YOUTH.

By REV. A. R. FLOWERS.

This life is, undoubtedly, a sort of two-fold citizenship; one for the world that now is, and one for the world that is yet to come. I heard a great minister say a few years ago that, "no greater calamity could come to a young person than to think of himself as being a citizen of this present world only; and that it would be no less a calamity should he think of himself as being a citizen of the world to come only, and therewith separate himself from all civic duty." There are certainly these two aspects in human life, and in the development of a fruitful Christian character; and I consider it an indispensable duty that we emphasize this all-important fact and pass it on to our boys and girls; that they may come into manhood and womanhood deeply conscious of their obligation to the future of their dual citizenship. However great any movement may appear, on the surface, they should be taught not to accredit it as good unless it makes a contribution to the standard of Christian righteousness.

The ruling passion of the present age has not been to place first things first in the minds of the youth of our time. Even the minds of many of our educational leaders have been too much occupied in business diplomacy and in the solution of material problems. They forget that all schemes to improve human life and conduct must be made with respect to its higher faculties. Jesus knew well the secret fountains of human life, which consist of understanding coupled with purpose and activity and in these he made no permanent separation. His gospel is one of knowing and feeling, which leads to fruitful doing and nothing is more disastrous to the permanent well-being of youth than to remove from it the great doctrine of Christ.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THAT TALK AT YOUR YOUNG PEOPLES' MEETING.

By WILLIAM J. WRAY.

Popular speeches do not just happen. They are made. Even the man who can make a good speech at three minutes' notice has had to earn his ability by study and care.

Know what you want to say. Put it into a sentence or two. Then when you have planned your speech see whether you have said it.

Every good speech has a beginning, a climax, and an end. Many speeches begin in confusion, continue in a muddle, and end in bewilderment.

Use short sentences. The simple will understand them and the wise will welcome them.

Use words ordinary people can understand. If they have to puzzle over the meaning of your words they will soon be tired of the effort and tired of you.

Be interesting. The public speaker will be forgiven many things, but not dullness.

If you must use figures, use small numbers. People cannot think in millions. Tell them how much it means for the individual and the family. People are much more interested in household expenditures than in national expenditures.

Respect your audience. Even though they are few, give them your best.

Take care of your facts, and avoid dogmatic statements unless you are sure. A little vagueness will hide mountains of ignorance.

Adapt your voice to the building. Speak loudly enough to be heard in the hall, but not loud enough to be heard in the street.

Be brief. The fact that Lloyd George can hold an audience for an hour does not prove that you can. If you do not know that, other people do.—Exchange.

FOR THE DISCUSSION.

When there is a big job ahead, a job that requires all manner of skill and keen judgment, the person who expects to come out with flying colors likes to get off by himself for awhile. At the time when the decision as to what one must do for his lifework is to be made men seek solitude. There are certain big questions to be solved. Quietness gives a man a chance to think and to decide what he will do. This will not be the last time that there will be decisions to make. Nay, they will come every day, and sometimes every hour. But if one's course has been chosen then the decisions will more readily be made. A definite starting point along a certain way remains in the mind and serves as a guide for future decisions. This setting aside of one's life, or dedication to some work, is very important in the accomplishment of worth-while things.

The motive for our life work is expressed in the work itself. We should determine upon a life purpose that represents our highest ideals and seek to discover a place in life through which we can give it the fullest, highest expression. Our own personal qualifications help in determining just what type of work we should choose for our life's work. But regardless of the line of work we engage in our goal can be a worthy one. Each person can serve, even with few talents or qualifications.

It is right and it is natural to desire a position of power. It is right that one should work to be the very best that he can be, to hold the highest office that he can hold in his organization. The wrong comes when one takes a doubtful path to attain what he has set as his goal.

Jesus stands today as the greatest character of all times because he always refused to compromise with evil. Jesus wanted great power, not for what it would do for him, but for what it might do for others. To Jesus a supreme reign would have meant a reign of righteousness. He would gladly have accepted a position of power if he had not been forced to compromise with evil by accepting it. Great power simply for power's sake, or position for what it might bring him, these things did not enter into his program.

We live in a marvelous world, but there is much to be done. Hatred, war, ignorance, prejudice, crime, disease, and poverty still have a strangle hold on civilization. No Christian youth has a right to choose his life work without serious consideration of all the occupations in the light of their contribution to the establishment of the Kingdom of God.

ABRAM'S GENEROSITY TO LOT.

LESSON IV—APRIL 24, 1932.

LESSON TEXT: Genesis 13:5-16.

GOLDEN TEXT: "In honor preferring one another."—Romans 12:10.

Introduction.

Throughout the ages mankind wrestles with the conflict between selfish interest and social welfare. The individual seeks self-satisfaction. Social demands keep directing him toward altruistic action. Morality, ethics and religion seek to assist the individual in the attainment of dependable social character. In modern society there are the selfish tendencies of acquisitive persons and there are those altruistic motives that lure men toward the good goals of the larger brotherhood. The lesson today calls us to see the similar contest in the more simple life of nearly four thousand years ago.

Prosperous Kinsmen.

Abram and Lot were kinsmen and represent closely related tribes. In verse 8, Abram says, "For we are brethren." The tribes were descended from a common ancestor. Each had been prosperous until their material possessions were great. Flocks, herds, tents, servants had multiplied. "Their substance was great so that they could not dwell together." Both tribes seem to have been successful in the accumulation of property. It seems that people have always wanted to increase their wealth and to enjoy the advantages it gives them. How eagerly we are all wanting the return of material prosperity.

Perils of Prosperity.

There must be an adequate economic support and culture or civilization cannot progress. We need more than the mere minimum wage for sustenance. Man's desire for a surplus seems well founded. So we work to achieve economic prosperity. Every good has its possible peril; there are perils in prosperity. Whenever man sets his affections on material things and the personal satisfaction that they bring, he begins to lose some social values. "There was a strife between the herdsmen" (verse 7). Acquisitive society is rife with strife.

Abram's Generosity.

There are many generous souls. True generosity comes out of a genuine regard for the rights and worth of others. Some so-called generosity is the product of prudential ethics. Ulterior motives sometimes corrupt the streams of human behavior. The ways of man's planning are often devious. Abram is presented as a truly generous soul. Rather than quarrel or war, Abram sought peace. He could be generous. So they sought a peaceful and satisfactory way out of their strife.

We Are Brethren.

Abram was unwilling to fight and contend with his brethren. The finer motives of good will reached beyond his own tribe. He was willing to extend them to a kindred tribe. That was a great step forward in the direction of peace. This extension of good will to a kindred tribe was admirable. How long will it take the world to learn that we are all brethren. Jesus would extend the good-will to all the people of the earth. "Our Father, who art in heaven;" thus prayed Jesus and so we should pray. Sometime the peoples of the earth may learn the way of peace and good-will among men.

Lot's Choice.

Abram allowed Lot to choose the territory for the grazing of his flocks and herds. He chose

THE NEW RELIGIOUS EDUCATION, by Leon C. Palmer. Morehouse Publishing Co. 130 pp. $1.50.

Written to interpret the newer trends in religious education to Church School workers of the Episcopal Church, this book is of interest to all. The positions are accepted that the Church is a school of Christian living, that the Bible is source material to aid the learner to understand and evaluate his experience, that experience is the curriculum. These are basic concepts of the new religious education. So far, so good. But we read: "The study of an assigned lesson, the memorizing of a passage of Scripture or catechism, is an experience," and again reference is made to "the experiences through which they (the learners) will be led." But modern religious education by experience means the life experiences that the learners are having, not those they are guided into. We must take learners where they are and inspire them to find Christian outcomes for the problems that confront them in actual living. Perhaps the author goes as far as he can toward mediating the "new" to the "old," but he has some distance yet to go, or they do.

the more fertile and well-watered Jordan valley. He could see a good bargain when it was offered him. He took it. Abram had been generous. Lot was willing that Abram be generous. There are many people who are very anxious for the other fellow to be generous and Christian. They like to profit by the generosity of others. Lot went East and moved his tent as far as Sodom. Abram remained in the hills of Canaan.

The Results.

Lot separated himself from his better kinsman and sought the association of the morally corrupt Sodomites. His greed and selfishness led him away from the good life and he perished in the fires of destruction. Selfish material greed burns out the finer virtues. It was true in antiquity—it is true today. Abram chose the way of kindly good-will. He could sacrifice his personal advancement for a friend. The enduring virtues grew in Abram and his tribe remained to bless the world. Faith and righteousness had a chance in Abram's way of life. For nearly four thousand years he has been honored as the father of the faithful. Jesus, a descendant from the Abram tribe, has blessed the world with a more glowing example of good will and kindly love to all the race of men. Abram's way and Jesus' way are far better than the road that Lot took.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

"EARNEST."

"Which is the earnest of our inheritance (possession) until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory."—Eph. 1:14.

The word "earnest" here does not mean that seriousness of purpose, zeal of determination, spirit and enthusiasm of speech, which we understand it to mean in common usage today. Our concordance explains that it means "pledge," "contract," or the first security of possession. Therefore, Paul's use, "the earnest of our possession," we would say today; "the contract," or perhaps, "the deed to our possessions."

This clarifies our understanding of the various reference in which this word is used with this meaning, one of them being 2 Cor. 1:22, "earnest of the spirit," and it also aids us in the interpretation of other passages. For instance, Paul said, "godliness is profitable in the life that now is and that which is to come," which is interpreted to mean that the "earnest" of heaven—the pledge of heaven—or that godliness is vouched unto us as a part of our possession now while here on this earth. The Psalmist sang, "I find my heaven on earth begun." The newness in life which is in Christ Jesus is now. It is our right as well as our privilege to claim this happy possession every day.

Prayer—Dear Father of us all, the Giver of every good gift, the Perfecter of every grace, and the Author and Finisher of our faith, grant unto us a complete understanding of thy blessings and enable us to live day by day so that we may claim thy promises. Amen.

TUESDAY.

LIKING AND LOVING.

"Love your enemies."—Luke 6:35.

Jesus said to Peter, "Get thee behind me Satan. Thou savourest not the things of God." At another time he said, "Satan hath desired thee that he might sift thee as wheat, but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not," and Peter is one of the beloved disciples upon whom he placed the responsibility of the apostolic church.

One may dislike very keenly and yet love with a thoughtful outgoing of one's whole nature. Likes are controlled by emotions and emotions are produced by attitudes, ill-used words, misunderstandings. Love sweeps the emotional powers of men as the whirlwinds sweep down the valley. Yet the valley is still rich with life, fruit, and grand in its beauty. Love is life's background. Love controls the heart. One's good sense gathers up the truth, appraises values of the soul's realities, comprehends the beauty and glory of life with its possibilities, displays them before the heart until its enraptured and completely swept along the way it is meant to go. This is what Jesus teaches us to do when he says, "Love your enemies," and, "If thy enemy compel thee to go with him one mile, go with him two." How wonderful the achievement to love the valley in spite of the disintegrating forces. How much more wonderful to be big enough and see far enough ahead, despite its enemies, or even our enemies.

Prayer—Our Father in Heaven, we confess our weakness and our sins. We are so easily controlled by the forces which effect our feelings. Give us vision to see beyond all this even as thou dost see life, and teach us to be overcomers, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CHRIST'S INHERITANCE IN THE SAINTS.

"That ye may know what is the hope of his calling and what is the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the Saints."—Eph. 1:18.

Did it ever occur to you that Christ has an inheritance in us? Well, there you are, you are his inheritance. We are his inheritance. Sinners are his inheritance.

When Jesus uttered that memorable prayer, (17th chapter of John), he referred to saved souls as his. Elsewhere he also refers to sinners as his. In the 20th verse, "I pray not for these alone, but for them which shall believe on me through their words . . . that the world may believe." This reflects our Saviour's instructions to the disciples when he commissioned them unto the redemptive work of the Kingdom. In the parable of the Feast, he urges them to "get out on the highways and hedges and compel them to come in." In the parable of the Prodigal Son, the Father still had an inheritance in the sinful boy.

What glory there will be when Christ gathers up all his redeemed and exhibits them before the Father! Shall we be in that crowd?

Prayer—Father of all mercies, we are all thine, may we not forget that. Make us thy redeemed ones. May our lives count in thy word so that others may believe and be with him at last. Amen.

THURSDAY.

ONLY ONE REVIVALIST.

"The Lord added such as should be saved."—Acts 2:47.

"There is no other name whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12.

There are many messengers, but only one evangelist—The Holy Spirit. He is the one who was with Peter at Pentecost, who was with Paul, who was with the apostles, who has been with all his true ministers; he it is who has added to the roll of the Lamb's Book of Life, such as were saved throughout all these years. Do what we will it is only he who is always at it and will stay at it forevermore. How? In every prompting to invite others, or bring others in; in every impulse to renounce wrong and take the oath of allegiance to the right—God. It is not by human agencies, nor human wit, nor human organizations, nor by human methods; but by His word. "Ye are clean through the word." The Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost are one. "His name is called the Word of God." (Rev. 19:13.) "Ye are born again by the Word of God." (1 Peter 1:23.)

It is by his Word he will continue until he hath put all enemies under his feet, and all believers together, baptized into one body, Jesus the Saviour, with whom we are joint heirs to the Father's Kingdom.

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, baptize us this day with thy Holy Spirit and adopt us unto thy family. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHY DO CHRISTIANS SUFFER?

"Whom he loveth he chasteneth."—Heb. 12:6.
"As I love, I chasten."—Rev. 3:19.

That is the answer. Suffering is often corrective. Lowell Thomas has pointed out, in his news briefs, how "Old Man Depression" has done good in many ways. An editorial from the Charleston News and Courier under date of March 31st, says that Old Man Depression will teach us to produce necessities instead of those things which may bring us riches. Instead of producing so much tobacco the farmers may turn to cows, swine, sheep, etc., and in time this may result in millions of dollars more than ever was derived from tobacco.

In due course of time the world may realize a great corrective force at work in all the suffering that humanity is undergoing.

If our home burns down while we are at prayer, it is hard for us to understand what it means. But it may mean his kindness. Cannot see it—no? But God sets the course, you know, and we are to follow. He has given us the ability to comprehend what is the length and breadth, the depth and height of his wisdom, and taught us to say, "Not my will, but thine be done." We must rest in the Lord's will in all things.

There is not one of us who does not look back over experiences and laugh now about what he used to cry about. Once a broken hobby-horse brought great distress. It is of no consequence now. So our past troubles—yea, we even laugh at our calamities.

Prayer—O Lord, we thank thee that we are more than conquerors over our troubles through him that redeemed us, Jesus Christ. Teach us to endure, learn the lessons that come in hard times, and come to where we can praise thee forever more. Amen.

SATURDAY.

FILLED WITH THE HOLY SPIRIT.

"Be filled with the Spirit."—Eph. 5:18.

What does it mean to be filled with the Holy Spirit? Were you ever filled with laughter, or with anger? To be filled with the Spirit means the same sort of condition—filled and bubbling over with it.

The fruit of being filled with the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, etc., and against such there is no law.

In him, who is born again, this filling with fullness of the Spirit comes like the fullness of a tree—first the sap, then the capularies, then the buds, then the blossom, then the fruit in the fullness of life. The tree is filled with the power that reaches out to its proper end. So it is with life. Life's product should be "love, joy, peace, etc., . . ." and only by being rooted and grounded in God and by being filled with his Spirit is it possible to produce this fruit.

Prayer—Gracious Lord, teach us how to tarry in patience, calling upon thee until we shall realize that thou art filling us with all thy fulness, and that we are bearing fruit for thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

REMEMBERING ALL THE WAY.

"Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God hath led thee."—Deut. 8:2.

The book of Deuteronomy, we are told, was written to bring the people to remembrance of God in a time of calamity. The aim of the writer was to show the nation what great things the Lord had done for them in days gone by, and, by stirring them in this way to gratitude, to stir them to a nobler and higher service for God, whom many of them had forsaken.

Well, here is another benefit of Old Man Depression. God is calling his people to recollection—to think of the past—to realize what has been done, and out of the past to gather lessons of inspiration and hope for the future.

Prayer—Dear Father of us all, and our Father, help us to remember and to gather from thee a heart of love and wisdom, to know what thou art to us, and grow in grace in the knowledge of the Lord and the beauty of holiness. Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

FOUR CHRISTIAN REALITIES.

Probably this is not a sermon. At least it is not tied to some text of Scripture. Perhaps we should just call it a testimony, and remember the words, "Ye are my witnesses." As I try humbly to express in some four-fold measure my love for the Lord Jesus, may it be a witness of the faith that is within me.

In life there are many things to be desired. Some of them may be desired above others, some of them may be desired for one reason, and some for another; and yet, however many or few they are, and for whatever purpose they may be wanted there are four things I should hate very much to miss. Having seen life as I have seen it, having developed the desires and motives it has been my lot to develop, and having formed the fabric of Christian faith as I experience and feel it, I should think my own conduct sorely amiss if I should come up lacking in either of the four things I am about to mention.

In the first place, knowing Jesus as I do, and feeling toward him as I feel, I should hate to miss the privilege of confessing him publicly and privately as my Lord and Saviour. It is a very simple thing externally. It is as simple as going into the River Jordan and dipping seven times, and I can easily see how an uninitiated heart would hesitate to do it, but there is a soul-satisfaction in it when done in simple obedience and faith that no words of tongue or pen can portray! I read concerning Jesus that he says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." So his word is sure. And he says, "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven." I look on Jesus, his life, his pity, his mercy, his forgiveness, his love, his prayers, his death, his resurrection, his disciples, his fruits; and I desire mightily that I should fulfill my humble part in a contract binding still when heaven and earth should pass away! To make a public confession of the Lord Jesus is not a whole Christian life, indeed, it may be thought to be but a small part of it; ah! but it is a part—a first part and a most powerful first step in the right direction. I believe in Jesus, and I believe on Jesus as being the world's Saviour, and my Saviour. I should greatly hate to miss standing up and being counted for him.

When I behold the gentleness and glory set forth in that final Upper Room, when I see the agony and pain of that darkened garden, when I see the longsuffering and pity of that unrighteous court, and the ignominy of that awful cross, I feel like my Friend is found going all the way for me, and I desire with all my heart to confess my faith and love in him, and cast my lot and fortune on his side. It looks, at times, like a losing side. Judas chose the other. It looks, at times, like the strength of mighty armies, and powerful ecclesiasticism are on the other side, but seeing the fate of Pilate and the failure of Caiaphas, I would choose to fall prostrated at the feet of Jesus rather than to stand by the crown of the Caesars!

But more, when I follow that humble Galilean down across the centuries and over the continents, when I see that he has done more than all the kings that ever reigned, and more than all the parliaments that ever sat, I begin to feel that there is no taking the scepter of love from his lordly hand, nor wresting from him the right to rule in every heart. But more still, when I see what changes he has wrought in the lives of my loved ones, friends and neighbors; and when I recognize that they would be grossly unlike unlimited numbers of others who have lain their lives down before they would retract their confession of Him, I, too, desire with all my heart to say "yes" to his masterful call to that within my soul which seeks perfect peace, and poise, and purity.

The second thing is just as simple, namely, that of having my name inscribed upon a church book. That, too, may be said to be a very little thing, and that in so doing I place my name alongside the names of hypocrites and hoodlums. Maybe! But I want it there. I read words fully as strange from the lips of Jesus as he himself has been marvelous and mighty concerning the church. He says, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." What a haven! What a refuge, when his words have not yet been found false, and when for now nearly two thousand years the great pages of the world's history have been greater pages of witness to the worth and permanency of the true body of his believers on earth.

I further read that he says, when speaking to a first representative of that church, "I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." If all the human misunderstanding and human bitterness found from time to time in that church has not been able to wreck it long ago and wrest it from the face of the earth, I feel sure that the gates of hell shall not be able to overcome it from the outside, and I feel just as sure that that man who places his name in all humble faith upon its paltry pages here shall not find that the Lord's words were untrue about the certainty of that same earth-bound name being heavenbound in the Lamb's Book of Life above. Nor do I want to deserve to have my brethren in Christ erase my name from that page here lest the words of Jesus be found to be true about its being erased up There!

I cannot, except by sometimes very dim faith, see that Book up There, but I am sure about this one down here, and I would hate to miss both by specific act and consequent conduct knowing that at least my name is on the pages of the church roll here and now. My experience has taught me to have quite some faith in the little old earthly church! I have read many pages of its history from Pentecost to the present, but even more faith-begetting have been the things I have seen with my own eyes about the church. How it transformed a little, humble family of which I am a part! How it made over possibilities and sent from log walls and illiteracy children of humble parents to places of usefulness and happiness and lifted the veil of anxiety and agony from a poor, hardworking mother's face and placed the glow of hope and peace in its stead! Words fail me to tell what I think of the church, but one thing I can say, I want to be sure my name is on its roll, for somehow, I believe it holds in its hands the "keys of the Kingdom of Heaven!"

The third thing I should hate to miss is that of being baptized. I am not so interested in the outward mode as I am of the inward measure of faith that prompts this obedience to a direct command of my Lord and Saviour. Some of my brothers were baptized by immersion, some by sprinkling; and two of them who were baptized by immersion are preaching in denominations

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

"When can I go barefooted," is a question that is asked and answered many times at the Christian Orphanage at this season of the year. Every little fellow we meet on the campus wants to know when he can go barefooted. We have always required the children to bring us some wide-open real white dogwood blossoms before we would agree to let them lay aside their shoes. They search the forest until they find the first to open. Little fellows are always anxious to lay aside their shoes in the spring of the year and go barefooted. We will remember when we were little boys that we would beg our fathers and mothers in the early days of April until they would allow us to lay aside our old shoes and go barefooted. I find that little boys now are just like they were then in that particular.

The warm spring days have given us garden fever, and it has been a nice time to make garden and plant vegetables. We have planted a large crop of Irish potatoes this season—more than usual. Our garden peas are up nicely, cabbage growing, and we are looking forward to the time when we will have plenty of nice vegetables right out of the garden. It takes a lot of vegetables, and they are fine food for children.

Don't forget, we want 150,000 soap coupons by May 1st.

Eggs are cheap. They are fine food for children. How many churches will send us a crate of eggs? They will be quite a help to us. The good women can do this for us.

which practice baptism by sprinkling. I was baptized, as I say, by sprinkling, and am preaching in a church which recognizes the right of the individual to choose his own mode; but one thing I do want not to miss is that of being baptized. All too many people join the church and neglect this sacrament. Some consider it and choose not to be baptized by man at all. I am not speaking of them, for they have a right to their interpretation, but I am speaking of those who take the matter lightly—so lightly that they simply neglect it. I read that Jesus, after he was resurrected, and could say, "All power is given unto me, both in heaven and in earth," that he also said to his followers, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; and whosoever believes and is baptized shall be saved." If Jesus Christ went down into the River Jordan and was baptized, there is good reason why I, as his follower, should obey his command in accepting this sacrament for myself. At least, as for me, I should feel that without it something was lacking if I did not have some humble servant of God perform the right and say for me as countless millions have it said for them: "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

And now, having spoken of these three things, how I am humbled when I recognize that primarily they have all been for me. What sweet, unmerited blessings, and all for me, and those to whom God may send me; but it rejoices my heart to come to the fourth thing that I should hate to miss for it is the one and only thing in the way of a memorial Jesus has ever asked for himself, namely, partaking of the Lord's Supper. He has not said I should do it frequently, or unfrequently, but whenever I do it I should do it in remembrance of him! It simply brings heaven right down to earth. It is the one thing Jesus so desired to do with his followers, and which he assured them he would not do again until he did it with them in his Father's Kingdom! To me there is more real worship couched in the moments spent about the Lord's table than in hours of other kinds of worship service. It is the high hour of the followers of Christ. It was so in the first group of disciples, and it still is. When Christ has done so infinitely much for me shall I be so ungrateful as to neglect this memorial to him? It is one of the realities of Christian worship, and one which means so much to me that I wish to help provide it for millions who have as yet never tasted its joy or felt its blessing.

MARRIAGES

THOMPSON—DEBAUGH.

At the parsonage of the Webster Community Christian Church on the 3rd of February, I united in marriage Mr. Stanley Thompson and Miss Mary Debaugh, both of Havre de Grace, Md. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Nelson Thompson, and the bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Debaugh.

May blessings attend the union of this excellent young couple, who began life together with the best wishes and prayers of a host of friends.

GARDNER D. UNDERHILL.

TATE—TERRELL.

Miss Pearl Jane Terrell became the charming bride of Mr. Joseph Kennon Tate on the afternoon of March 26, 1932. They were accompanied to Danville by Mr. Preston Allred in company with Miss Matilda Tate, and the writer, at which place they took the vows of holy wedlock.

Miss Terrell is the beautiful daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Terrell, of Caswell County, N. C. Mr. Tate is the son of Mrs. J. C. Tate of Berne County.

This young couple are popular and highly esteemed in their home communities. Mrs. Tate has a position in Burlington, and Mr. Tate is at home on the farm with his mother. They will make their home in Caswell County.

It was the writers' happy privilege to perform the ceremony that made them one.

Their many friends wish them a long and happy married life.

OBITUARIES.

WELCH.

Lydia A. Brown Welch died March 15, 1932, aged 65 years, 1 month and 13 days. She was a member of Pleasant Grove Church, having joined in early life, and was faithful till death. A good woman is gone.

She leaves a husband, a host of relatives and friends to mourn her departure.

May the Heavenly Father bless and comfort the bereaved.

COOLEY.

Miss Harriet Cooley, daughter of Mrs. Carrie and the late Ambrose Cooley, died March 28, 1932. The funeral was conducted by her pastor, the writer, assisted by Rev. Murphy. The exceptionally large congregation and the beautiful floral tribute told of the highest esteem in which she was held.

Besides her 84-year-old mother, she is survived by two sisters, Mesdames Reese Gilbert and J. C. Moulton, and five brothers, John, Wilson, Amos, Oliver and Charles.

Webster Community Christian Church loses one of its most efficient members in the passing of "Miss Hal," and although our heads are bowed in submission, her leadership can never be entirely supplanted.

CLAPP.

We, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society and Earnest Workers' Sunday School Class of Hines' Chapel, do sincerely and earnestly mourn the loss of our friend and co-worker, Mrs. Alice Clapp, who was taken from our midst March 31, 1932.

She was a true and loyal member of our society and class; therefore, be it Resolved, First, that we bow in humble submission to our heavenly Father, who doeth all things well.

Second, That we cherish the memory of her exemplary life and its influence for good.

Third that we extend to the bereaved ones our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the love of God.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy to the local paper, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and a copy be recorded in the minutes of the Society.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

WOOTEN.

Faith Finds Reward.

They are right strange words to place at the head of a little article announcing that a charming young Christian woman, who prayed to get well, has passed on to her heavenly home. In childhood Iona Lee Truitt was bereft of her father and came to live with my father and mother near Mt. Bethel Christian Church. A few years later she was bereft of her mother, but she found happiness, comfort and Christian training in the home of my parents. She caught the buoyant living faith of my mother, and delighted in the church and Sunday School, in which quite actively she did her share.

Many are the errands her childhood feet ran for my mother and father, and sister. She never replied; she obeyed; and showed in unflinching ways that she appreciated her home. Our family offered to send her to college, just as we had gone, but she preferred to take a business course and enter business. She did, and she succeeded. In but a few years she was happily married, and was just beginning to make home when she became ill. How she fought for life! And how eagerly her young husband, Henry Wooten, fought with her, trying to help her win that battle, and although she did not win in the earthly struggle, we can surely believe that her faith has found its reward. JOHN G. TRUITT.

YOUNG.

Arminda Ferrell was born in Randolph County, Alabama, July 18, 1868. She was united in marriage to George L. Young, June 7, 1891. To this union were born seven children five of whom remain to mourn their loss.

She professed faith in Christ and joined New Harmony Christian Church about thirty years ago, and lived a consistent Christian life till the end, which came March 19, 1932. Her health was bad the last few years. The end was not unexpected to herself and loved ones. She expressed her willingness to go at any time the summons might come, because she said she was ready. Five children, a devoted husband, who is a consecrated deacon of the New Harmony Church, twelve grandchildren, two brothers, and two sisters survive her. Her friends were numbered by her acquaintances. Funeral services were held from New Harmony Christian Church, with her pastor, the writer, in charge, assisted by Rev. C. D. Martin of the Baptist Church. Her body was tenderly laid to rest in the cemetery nearby to await the resurrection of the just.

May the Giver of every good and perfect gift comfort the bereaved.

G. H. VEAZEY.

War Not Declared.—

Japan's little friendly war in the Shanghai area cost the Chinese 8,080 lives and $400,000,000 in property loss, according to Wu Ta-chun, chief of the Chinese Department of Statistics. His figures showed that 2,000 Chinese had been wounded and 10,400 were missing. Persons directly affected by the warfare were numbered at 814,084, or 45 per cent of the total Chinese population of Shanghai, while the area occupied by the Japanese forces was estimated at 182 square miles. Ten universities and 222 other schools were forced to close, affecting 39,000 students. The value of school property destroyed was placed at more than $3,000,000. It is estimated that 250,000 persons have been thrown out of employment. But Japan says she was not at war with China at all!

Can't Please Some Folks.—

Sherwood Eddy made a remarkable impression on Chinese youth during his last, and eighth, visit to that country. The Bulletin of the National Christian Council of China has given an enthusiastic report of his work. One paragraph interests exceedingly: "Dr. Eddy's messages are intensely personal and passionately social. He does not hesitate to deal frankly and courageously with issues of real concern, however controversial they may be. This has led on the one hand to criticisms which have dubbed him as 'Red' and to attacks by Communists, who have dubbed him a 'running dog of Capitalism'! While convinced that neither Communism nor current capitalism nor conventional Christianity can save China, or the world, from impending disaster, Dr. Eddy leaves no doubt in the minds of his hearers as to his confidence in Jesus' way as 'the way out'."

"Cheer Up."—

Roger W. Babson, statistician and business prophet of today, says, "Better times are coming." What has happened before will happen again. Periods of depression have always been followed by better times. And yet some people are talking and planning, especially in church work, as if times would never improve. "Ten times during the last ninety years," says Mr. Babson, in his latest book, "the country has been 'ruined.' Yet each time it has risen phoenix-like from its ashes and risen to new heights of power and prosperity. All the 'hard luck' the country is experiencing it has suffered before; and it has a one hundred per cent record for pulling through, not only unimpaired but actually improved." Such people need to read the Philosophy of Times and Seasons as recorded in a section of the Book of Ecclesiastes, from chapter three to chapter four, eighth verse, and this modern volume by Roger Babson, "Cheer Up!"

A Bath With Permanent Qualities.—

Upon being told that his "conversions" were not permanent, Billy Sunday once replied: "Neither is a bath." Out in Turkey, an American hospital found an able Turkish professional man aiding them in a legal transaction which meant much to the success of the hospital and its ministry to people who badly needed it. And a mission bath was the reason for it all. This friend, once in Government service, was taken prisoner in Russia, kept in a filthy prison and finally released to travel, sick, starved and dirty to his home in Turkey, via China. One day on his journey he almost fell at the gates of a mission house. He was seen, taken in, fed, and allowed to take a bath in the family tub! He never forgot this—and 15 years later he finds his chance to do a return kind deed by helping an American mission hospital in his own country.

The Gold Supply.—

About 65 per cent of the world's monetary gold supply, or approximately $7,500,000,000 is held by France and the United States. Economic measures to preserve gold are expected to be adopted should the present annual production of about 20,000,000 fine ounces decrease. Surveys taken by the Department of Commerce show that the Rich Rand mines of South Africa will produce lesser amounts of gold after 1935. These mines, discovered in 1885, are the world's largest producers. United States production has decreased since 1915 when the record production of 4,823,672 ounces was made. The world production in 1930 was 20,460,168 fine ounces as compared with 20,191,478 ounces in 1929. In 1929, 71.4 per cent of the gold mined was produced by the British Empire. The United States was second, producing 10.8 per cent. Next came Russia with 5 per cent; Mexico, 3.8 per cent; Japan, 2.8 per cent, and South America, 2.5 per cent.

Our Church and the Convention.—

Before the next issue of THE SUN shall reach your home, the Southern Christian Convention will be in session at Burlington, N. C. If you are a delegate, make it your business to be present at the Convention. Never has the church in all of its history had more momentous decisions to make. Never has there been a time when these decisions would have a more far-reaching effect than at the present time. Every department of the church calls for your presence, every division calls for your study and support after you shall have come. The various leaders are making every effort to place the facts concerning conditions before you, and they will make every effort to solve the problems that face us. But it is you who will have to decide these issues. It is you who will have to carry the message back home. It is you who will have to see that the program is launched back home. Come with open minds, minds set upon carrying out the things necessary for the continued advancement of your church and its cause. If you are a delegate lay aside other cares and come.

Sky-Writing Causes Strife in England.—

Quite a volume of indignation is raging in England just now over sky-writing. This practice, which seemed to threaten us for some time, passed away for lack of interest in it, as far as can be ascertained. Sky-writing is done by airplanes able to perform "stunts" and write advertisements in smoke. It is no doubt a striking way of advertising, but the sky ought to be free from the invasion of commercialism. Let the sky be left free for the nightly display of beauty. Let the heavens declare the glory of God instead of glory of greed. The Englishman does not take these invasions of his natural rights quite as placidly as the American, but here is our vote for the Englishman who wants to keep the stars from being blotted out by the exploitation of material things, and the love of money. Invention ought to mean progress in human rights, and in better adjustments of civilization. It ought to mean more beauty and joy in the world. It should not mean subjecting the whole population to the desires of a few, who may happen to be able to commit such an imposition.

What Is Success?—

Writing upon the subject of success, Dr. Myerson, of Tufts College, has this to say: "It has become a pet bit of buncombe that anybody can succeed if he wills it; that if a man desires success sufficiently hard it is sure to come to him. Nevertheless was there such foolishness preached since the days of Adam; in a world filled with striving men, success is not to those who strive, but to those who have good luck and ability. . . . So we have the phenomenon of tremendous ambition, indefatigable effort and little natural ability in the make-up of the lives of many Americans, and we have in this disharmony a reason for a collapse of energy when it becomes realized that the success dreamed of and hoped for cannot be reached." This quotation may well give rise to the question, "Is there any need for me to try?" Certainly it does not indicate cowardice to face the fact that one cannot become a wizard in the field of his choice. Why should young people be driven to a sense of inferiority and restlessness by being driven to attempt the impossible? Might they not fare better if encouraged to face life squarely, with the hope of finding a useful and necessary place for themselves, humble though it may be? To recognize one's limitations is far braver than to damn the world because one's alleged abilities are not adequately appreciated.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Robert Lee House, pastor, First Christian Church, Newport News, assisted the pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield in an evangelistic meeting at Ingram Church last week.

Burlington people and churches will welcome with real and sufficient hospitalities the Convention next week. If you attending, write Dr. G. O. Lankford, Burlington, N. C., that he may provide entertainment.

Miss Ernestine Hood, Secretary, writing from Roanoke, Ala., April 12th, says: "We had a great day at the Woman's Missionary Rally, Rock Stand, April 10th. All on the program were there, and took their parts, and the program was well carried out. We owe much to the friendly people of Rock Stand community for taking the Rally at the last moment. They provided nicely for all who attended."

How is this from the pen of a great writer and a faithful man of God? "Hard times are hard times for God as well as for us. His work suffers because, when depression comes, so many cut off first of all their gifts to religion." At any rate, God is testing our souls and trying our faith now. The weak and the faltering will halt, and rather than cut off any comforts or luxuries, they will cut off their gifts to the church and to God.

The Summer School of Leadership Training under the auspices of the Board of Christian Education, Southern Christian Convention, will be held at Elon College, June 20th to 26th this year. This is to be under the joint leadership of Miss Jewell Truitt and Miss Priscilla Chase, respectively, of the Boards of Religious Education in Christian and Congregational Churches. The speakers are representatives of the United Church and are quite promising.

Rev. J. H. Dollar, pastor of the First Congregational-Christian Church, LaGrange, Ga., according to a correspondent from Lanett, Ala., "is beginning a much-needed revival here." Lanett, Ala., is not the only place that very much needs a revival. We are hoping that many places that need a revival shall have their needs supplied. The church now has a real opportunity to reach the people and do its great work of leading people to God and establishing Christ in their lives as their Lord and Redeemer.

The Convention program was presented in last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and is reprinted in this issue. This body meets only once in two years, and every delegate to the Convention should make a determined effort to be present at each session, since matters of great moment are to be considered and disposed of. This is likely to be an epoch-making Convention, and the wisdom of all members is needed. Those who are to attend should notify Dr. G. O. Lankford, if they wish entertainment for the night and breakfast.

A superintendent of one of our small but very much alive Sunday Schools writes as follows: "Dear Bro. Atkinson—I asked you for thirty coin cards and only received eighteen. Please send me twelve more. I am sure this plan is going to go over in a big way in our school." The twelve additional cards went forward. The plan will go over good in any school that will try, as many are finding out by actual experience. There are some superintendents who have not yet called for the coin cards. We sincerely trust they are taking the matter up with their schools and that their orders will come in at an early date.

Rev. J. H. Warren, pastor, gives a good report of the work at Ocean View during March, with an average attendance, morning service, of 82, and at the evening service of 70. The average attendance at the Sunday School was 128, and the total offering at the Sunday School for the four Sundays of the month was $21.41, an average of over $5.00 per Sunday. Fourteen children were baptized and eight new members were received into the church. One of the faithful members at Ocean View, in talking to the Mission Secretary, recently said: "Help us keep our present pastor, Brother Warren, at Ocean View, and you will see a real Christian Church of strength and activity there."

Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor, seeks with zeal to beautify and make inviting the house and the grounds of the churches he serves and to let the people know the names thereof. Hines' Chapel has recently been painted within and without, and shrubbery and evergreens, planted about the door and on the church grounds. Brother Neese thinks that about the meanest person coming within the scope of his experience recently is the one who stole out of Hines' Chapel, about $40.00 worth of paint which was placed in the church to be used for the painting. A new supply had to be secured to replace the stolen goods, and the church had to raise the funds twice. Evidently this thief had little regard for the house of worship or the cause for which the goods of his theft had been purchased.

It should be of special interest to all radio owners and listeners-in to learn that Dr. Chas. L. Goodell, one of the outstanding evangelists of our time, one who preaches a saving gospel with zeal and a passion for souls, and who is chairman of the Commission on Evangelism, will begin a series of fourteen radio sermons on Sunday afternoon, May 1st. These weekly Sunday afternoon radio messages will be broadcast out of New York over WJZ and carried across America over the National Broadcasting system. This radio hour is called "Sabbath Reveries," and comes at 5:00 o'clock, New York Daylight Saving Time, each Sunday afternoon, beginning May 1st, and continuing for fourteen Sundays. According to this radio schedule, Dr. Goodell will be the preacher on Pentecost Sunday. He will deliver a special Pentecost Sermon. It is suggested that ministers and churches give this announcement the widest publicity, urging everyone to listen in. Those church homes that have radios may well invite neighbors in who do not have them, to listen in over their radio, to Dr. Goodell's message.

It is a matter of more than local interest that the First National Bank of Burlington, which closed on December 16th, gives promise of re-opening at an early date. It was announced that the bank could be re-opened by the sale of $150,000 capital stock. This sale has been completed and the capital stock already taken. It is understood also that the waivers of depositors have practically been sufficiently received to guarantee the re-opening. The bank was closed not because of mismanagement or dishonest dealings on the part of any one, so far as the records reveal, but solely from shrinkage of securities, which securities had been regarded as the most reliable. The First National was exceedingly popular and was constantly growing in favor and in volume of business. It is a real triumph of the integrity of its depositors and friends to be able, in this time, to clear the way for the re-opening which will be hailed with gratification and delight. The First National was one of the pillars of the business and civic structure of Burlington and the surrounding community.

NOTICE TO CONVENTION DELEGATES.

The Burlington Church will furnish lodging and breakfast free to the delegates in attendance upon the sessions of the Southern Christian Convention which will meet here April 26th to 29th, provided notice of your coming is sent in advance. It will be necessary, therefore, for all who wish entertainment to act promptly in this matter. If you will notify us, it will be a pleasure to provide for your comfort as suggested above. Please write or wire the undersigned at once.

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

PRESIDENT WILLIAM CAMPBELL, of the Atlanta Theological Seminary Foundation in the Vanderbilt School of Religion, has been receiving gifts for students of the Foundation who lost their clothing, possessions, and books in the fire which destroyed Wesley Hall. President Campbell had the Good Friday service in the First Church of Memphis and was with the church on Easter Sunday morning.

THE MOUNTAIN WORKER'S CONFERENCE, at Knoxville, Tenn., was attended by Rev. and Mrs. George L. Day, Rev. J. M. Trosper and other church leaders, President Hutchins and Miss Dingman, of Berea College, and Mrs. John C. Campbell, of Bearstown, N. C., and leaders of the Conference. Miss Elizabeth R. Hooker, daughter of the founder of Rollins College, has been investigating the conditions of mountain churches and her next book will deal with this situation.

COLLEGESIDE CHURCH of Nashville is a going concern of active and interested people. During the Rural Church School there was an ordination of two students at Collegeside House, a supper was held there, and the group was addressed by Dr. Pendleton of Peabody College for Teachers, and by Dr. Carl C. Taylor, at the church school hour in the morning and at night. Two members of the church who were laboring at a distance were entertained by fellow church members while attending the school. Dr. Jason Noble Pierce has not only introduced music of his own into his services, but his daughter has delighted many by her fine solo singing. The Collegeside Church and Seminary Foundation in Nashville made a good team. The church has been happy in welcoming Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper into the membership. Mrs. Harper is active in the work of the Collegeside Church choir.

REV. JOSEPH E. EACH, of Thorsby, Ala., is a great success as a personal conductor. On the afternoon of Easter Sunday he took a small party out from Thorsby to see a neighborhood devastated by a cyclone on the preceding Monday. About three miles from town the out-of-town visitor on this sight-seeing tour was entertained by the sight of a roaring cyclone sweeping across the fields toward the automobile. The low-hanging black cloud advanced steadily. From it hung a giant twisting and writhing column which swept the ground and wrenched to pieces all in its path, which was not solid. It was a fearful sight. Turning quickly, the car raced two miles before the twister as it roared forward. A turn to the right finally took the car out of reach of the path a thousand feet in the rear. A tempest of rain shook the car and ripped the top from another car nearby. Half a dozen people were killed and many injured, and homes and buildings were destroyed in the storm which followed in the path of its predecessor.

EVARTS, KENTUCKY, has been a center of industrial turmoil and human needs for fifteen months. Mines have been problems to stockholders and workers. Most of them have been unprofitable. Many have been closed, men have been intimidated and killed, special officers have overawed the people. Mine tipples have been blown up and railroad tracks torn up. Stores have been raided. Champions of the workers have been imprisoned and tried in the courts. In recent weeks many of the unemployed have been taken to farms within a radius of fifty, one hundred or two hundred miles by the Relief Association. This country organization has been distributing four or five truck-loads of provisions every Friday. Rev. J. M. Trosper, loved pastor of the Evarts Church, has been active in getting medical attention for the sick and for sufferers from pellagra, and in supplying food and clothing to the needy. While the crusading student investigators have been turned back at county borders, the Quakers have been feeding two hundred to two hundred and thirty people a day in the Hoover Kitchen.

THE VANDERBILT RURAL CHURCH SCHOOL carried on as usual, though with a smaller attendance than usual this year. Pastors were there from Virginia to Texas and from Indiana to Florida, 177 in all. The great Cole lectures dealt with the Rural Church. They were given by a great Congregational layman, Dr. Henzon S. Butterfield, who has been working for rural churches in many lands. Five other leaders of the Congregational-Christian Church, Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. Carl C. Taylor, Dr. E. T. Krueger, Dr. Jason Noble Pierce and Dr. Wm. J. Campbell had courses in the school. Dr. Pierce helped with the music and his daughter sang at an evening lecture. Dr. C. Rexford Raymond gave one of the noon lectures. Denominational meetings were held each day. Secretary Asa M. Parker, of Massachusetts, had the first one, and Dr. Bloom the last two sessions. Dr. Carl C. Taylor and Mr. Don L. West, who had spent six months in study of rural conditions in Denmark, made fine contributions to the discussion of farm tenancy and the reconstruction of rural life. The group decided that it was of first importance to increase the number of farm owners.

MEETINGS IN ATLANTA.

The meeting of the Southeast Regional Committee of the Commission on Missions was held at the Congregational-Christian Church in Atlanta, on April 13th. Only the delegates from the Southwestern section were present as there will be a meeting for other delegates at the Convention in Burlington. There were, however, about thirty in attendance including all members of the staff. Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, Chairman of the Committee, presided and Miss Marguerite Davison was elected Scribe. The officers of the committee were re-elected, as follows: Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, Chairman; Dr. M. L. Stimson, Vice-Chairman, and Dr. Fred P. Ensminger, Registrar. Dr. W. Knighton Bloom was present and directed the consideration of the missionary program, reporting upon the needs of the Boards and the actions taken at the mid-winter meeting. There was the discussion of the Dollar Plan, missionary literature, various summer conferences and general field work promotion. Interesting reports were given of various phases of the work, including the work of colored churches and conferences. Following the discussion of plans and methods was an earnest discussion of the meaning of Christian Missions and the vital spiritual motives inspiring to Christian Missions and to Christian sacrifice. Dr. W. T. McElveen and the people of his church were generous in their hospitality and served a delightful dinner for the delegates.

In connection with this meeting, Dr. Bloom called a meeting of his staff and a day and a half was spent in serious and thorough consideration of many problems and plans involved in the work in the Southeast. Special consideration was given to the selection of students and recommendations for summer service and the assignment of them to particular fields. The summer conferences also came in for special consideration and planning for the staff meeting with the Territorial Committee of the Blue Ridge Conference. Dr. Walter Getty, of the Missionary Educational Movement, of New York, was present and final plans were made for the Blue Ridge Conference. Throughout these meetings the fine leadership of Dr. Bloom was felt and appreciated. Also at the Regional Committee meeting resolutions were passed congratulating Dr. Halliday upon the completion of ten years as Secretary of the Congregational Church Extension Boards and expressing appreciation of his unfailing loyalty and support of the work in the Southeast.

SERVICE IN THE STORM.

One service car in Alabama did some unusual service during the recent tornado. When the series of heavy storms struck middle Alabama the week before Easter, they did great damage all about the little town of Thorsby, but spared it. As soon as the extent of the damage was learned, one of the teachers at the Institute, with Gerald Smith as student, took the Congregational Service Car, which seemed to be the only one available at the school, and drove all over the countryside to give aid to the stricken people. They made many trips that night, getting people out from the wreckage of their homes and transporting them to the nearby hospital and to the temporary relief station which was established at Thorsby. Sometimes they had to saw and cut their way through the fallen trees to reach sections where the people were too badly injured to be moved, and to take doctors and nurses to give immediate relief.

When daylight came it was their privilege to go back to those people with ambulance service for the injured and with food and clothing to those who were left destitute. So the Service Car was pressed into continuous service even after the injured were cared for. Twenty-three gallons of milk were distributed all over the countryside on the second morning after the storm. The milk was donated by Birmingham milk concerns, but the Service Car did the distributing.

For a week it traveled over the country roads distributing supplies of necessities and its only complaints were a broken spring and one flat tire. The car shared the spirit of the people of that little town who forgot all about their own cares and responsibilities in their eager service for their stricken neighbors. It seemed a little more than anyone could bear when the third tornado came six days after the first two, and laid waste all that had been left in the path of the previous storm. After the people had seen the consequences of the first twister which came at night, it was a gruesome sight to watch a third make its disastrous way across the countryside. When it had passed, the Service Car was pressed into duty again and went out to render what help it could to the new sufferers.

The Service Car of Rev. J. E. Each, of Thorsby, was rendering the same kind of service all through the weeks of relief work. Those who were in charge of the cars were thankful that they could help in the great emergency, but they trust that they will never again be called upon to follow in the path of a tornado.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SPRING-TIME.

One does not need to be told that spring is here. A look out of the door or window, or, better still, a stroll through the woods, or a ride along the highway, each and all are faced and glorified with that fact. How rich in color the tulips are! How fresh and fragrant the breath and blossom of the hyacinth! How good, how royal, how divine, the robes of pale purple on the graceful boughs of the "red-bud!" How strong and stalwart the abiding, but now full green of the pine! How pretty and pure the canopy of the spreading dogwood blossoms whose petals are as white as angels' wings, and whose tree-trunks are as strong and stout as the heart and soul of heroes! How full of love and life the unfolding buds and leaves on the good green trees are! A few warm days of spring have done their work perfectly, and nature has robed herself modestly, yet perfectly with becoming richness and the fragrance of fresh life. And the earth is good and green and glorious. The soul of man rejoices and words in such a time fail to express the melody that nature sings into the heart, and melts and magnifies the soul with praise, gratitude and adoration. God in his universe and with infinite variety, and out of an abundant, inexhaustible store-house of paint and plenty, He colors the earth on lawn, bush, tree, in the valley, up the hillside, in field and in forest with all that can delight the vision and cheer the heart of man. It is, indeed, good, great, glorious to be living in such a world and in such a time. The earth joins the heavens now in declaring the glory of God, and the firmament of field and forest shows His handiwork. God is in His world, and through it He is speaking to us, and over and above and in it all He is calling to us to rejoice and be glad, to magnify and to glorify His great name and to love and tend and care for this world He has made. J. O. A.

THE GREATEST QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

The Southern Churchman (Episcopal) asks this pertinent question: "What has become of the power of Christianity?" This is what the Churchman considers the greatest question of the present. The assertion is made, as history shows, that Christianity started out with a power infinitely greater than any or all human power. That power is evidently sadly lacking at the present. Our contemporary wishes to know why this same power is not with us now, and then answers its own question in these words: "Because Christianity has, in a great measure, sunk from the spiritual to the intellectual level. Reason has usurped the throne and faith has either abdicated or been deposed from the supreme place in the human side of religion."

There should be no conflict between reason and revelation. Revelation itself is one of the most reasonable things in all history; and genuine reason, if sustained by logic and insight, is ever and always a real revelation. Reason should be and is the hand-maid of revelation, and revelation is the bright and glorious light in which reason comes to its highest and achieves its best.

One of the most reasonable, certainly the very sanest, soundest, and securest of all lives, of all careers lived out on earth, was that of our Lord, the earthly career of Jesus of Nazareth. In the greatness and glory of his life, he revealed the depths and the highest of reasoning as no other person has in all history. At the same time there was revealed in him that which was supernatural, that which was eminently divine, that which was beyond the grasp of the purely finite mind. It was reason reaching up into and penetrating the realms of revelation, and finding in that realm the glorious climax and the high achievements of its sublimest efforts. His miracles are the most rational, the most comprehensive manifestations of the supernatural breaking through the natural anywhere to be found in history. The first recorded miracle is that of instantaneous change of water into wine. God, through the ages, had been doing just that through the orderly process of the vine, the grape on the vine, and the power in that process. He fed five thousand with a few loaves and fishes. God has ever been taking the little and multiplying it into the much, and feeding multitudes with the product. Those who deny the miracles of our Lord, or question his divinity, forget their reason and deny the power of the laws they call natural. Man never made a natural law. God in heaven made them all. What we call natural law is only our finite reading of the way in which the Creator and the Ruler commonly works, and is accustomed to manifest his mind and measures. Man never enacted a statute creating the Law of Gravitation. The Law of Gravitation is man's reading of the way in which forces and factors in nature are accustomed to act in the wisdom of God. If the God who unfolds himself in the way that we call natural, sees fit, for reasons best known to himself and only fully understood by himself, to make what we call supernatural manifestations of himself, and his power, ours is the privilege of accepting that not as the demonstration of a different nature or a different power, but the same Nature and the same Power as that which writes out our daily alphabet and demonstrates that power constantly before our eyes. God saw fit to reveal himself in marked and marvelous manner through the Man Christ Jesus, his only begotten Son, our elder Brother. In him was the fullness of the Godhead bodily. The manner of his life, while here on earth, and the achievements and consequences of that life since he arose from the dead, have demonstrated these things to any reasoning mind. Those who would take away divinity, subtract from the Deity or belittle the supernaturalness of such a life, know little of that life, and need to experience the warmth, the touch and the personal presence of that blessed life. What has become of the power of Christianity? We agree with our contemporary in saying that there is a loss, a sad lack, of faith. We are not discerning the things of the spirit with the eye of the spiritual. We are trying to bring the whole structure of the supernatural down upon the level of what we term the natural, as if the natural itself was not the very power of God and the revelation of God. Too many of us Christians have controverted that Scripture which says, "We shall walk by faith and not by sight." We are saying, "We walk by sight and not by faith." Man cannot walk by sight alone. He does not get anywhere. If he would achieve, if he would glorify business, if he would glorify the church, if he would glorify life and God, he must walk by faith. The spiritual life is that life that leads us in faith to trust God, to keep up our courage, to go forward to the achievement of the spiritual and, above all, to put the spiritual above the material, and the supernatural above the natural; and to make Jesus Christ not a mere man, as he never was that, but the Son of Man, the Son of God, the one name above every name, and the one to whom every knee must bow, the one natural Son of God, revealing the power and glory of the Father. THE GOOD EARTH.

The above is the title of the "best seller" the past year among the books of fiction. The author is Mrs. Pearl S. Buck, the daughter of a missionary in China. Mrs. Buck was educated at Randolph-Macon College, but has spent the most of her life in China where the scene of her book is laid and the characters are all Chinese. The book reviewers are assigning as the reason for the popularity of the book that it reveals a real genius in literature. The reviewer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer says, "The Good Earth made literary history." The New York Times reviewer says, "The book has style, power, coherence and a persuasive sense of dramatic reality. In its deeper implications it is less a comment upon life in China than upon the meaning and tragedy of life as it is lived in any age in any quarter of the globe."

The editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN brings from a reading of the book three impressions:

1st. We Americans have so far developed a cosmopolitan mind that Chinese of the uncultured, plodding, laboring type might interest us. The main figure of the book, "the hero," is a plodding laborer of the land, and while he can neither read nor write, and seems morally and intellectually stupid, he has a native instinct that leads him to the land and the love of the land. He breathes the odor of the soil, and realizes that he came from the earth and back to earth he must return. He accepts his fate with a certain sort of heroic and stoic determination, and gets comfort and contentment out of what the soil and nature have to offer. He toils with the land and works under handicaps and disadvantages, but rises to some power and influence in his community, and through the love of the land and what the land teaches him, he rises from the humble station of a hireling to the exalted position of landlord and riches.

2nd. The second impression coming from reading the book is that among the Chinese the part of womanhood is, indeed, hard, and that among the laboring classes in China woman is yet but a little more than a beast of burden, and treated as such even by a respectable husband. She accepts her fate as being fixed and submits and works out her destiny and lives out her life with a certain sort of dumb, stoic philosophy which enables her to submit to the fates that are fixed against her, and to drag through her life suffering but not complaining. "The Good Earth" gives one a view of Chinese life in China, since Mrs. Buck has lived there, does live there, and on her pages reveals to the world the life of toiling Chinese as it is lived today.

3rd. The third impression one must carry from reading the book is that one has glimpsed moral turpitude, a sordid existence between man and woman, which is deplorable wherever it exists, and in whatever nationality it may obtain. Such an existence may be led by many in America, but not openly or legally. While the book in no sense is a religious story, or is intended by its writer to be a teacher of morals or religion, its writer reveals with a steady and sure hand the base moral code that obtains openly, legally, respectably, among peoples who have not learned the lessons of morality as taught, say in the Sermon on the Mount, nor erected for themselves standards of righteousness that have at least come into view and vision among peoples more highly civilized, not to say Christianized. Harry Hanson says "it remains the best novel of the season." It may be. It is, at any rate, finding its way into hundreds of thousands of homes since it went through a series of seventeen printings in 1931, and had its eighteenth printing in March, 1932. Since Mrs. Buck has taught in the University of Nanking and lives in Nanking, and knows her Chinese, among whom she has spent her life with the exception of a brief period at college in the United States, we may be certain that she has drawn a picture of Chinese life as it is, and it will help any of us to get a mental grasp of the lives of individuals in China who live and toil and love and get some comfort and joy out of their living, and then die and pass out as men and women of all nations and of all the centuries do and must do.

The book is published by the John Day Company, of New York, and sells for $2.50. If the book presents, as it does present, a rather sordid intellectual and morally obtuse existence, it, at any rate, as one takes it, gives a real picture of life as it is being lived by millions in one part of The Good Earth. J. O. A.

DEFEAT AND SUCCESS.

Defeat or failure may result in success or prosperity. At the cross it looked as if Jesus had been defeated in his purpose and failed in his efforts to save a sinful and lost world. The people who had followed him and believed in him were ready to give up the cause to which they had committed themselves. But the resurrection proved that his defeat was the real beginning of his success. From that day to this his cause has been gaining in numbers and strength. Pentecost and the presence and power of the Holy Spirit ushered in a new day of faith and hope. If Jesus had not been crucified and had not risen from the grave, his work would have waned, if it had not died. What his enemies considered defeat was the beginning of that success that is destined to save the world and to conquer all evil among men.

The close of the Civil War was the failure of secession and the defeat of the armies of the Southern States. There was in the South a state of mind that meant defeat. They had organized a government, and that was overthrown. They had issued money and it had no value. They had laid plans and they were useless. All seemed to be lost by defeat. But years proved that it was the beginning of success in the South. Slavery was gone. Human freedom took its place. Poor people, who had little chance before the war, came into possession of opportunities before unknown, and success followed in the wake of failure. The poor became rich; the illiterate became cultured, prosperity progressed. Both races moved on together in harmony and progress made a New South, and now people see that defeat resulted in success.

Success is more dangerous than defeat. No matter how rich men become, only a generation may find their descendants poor; while a generation of seeming failure may succeed. The church must not lose faith in the hard places through which her institutions pass. It may be the beginning of greater faith, greater effort, and greater success. W. W. S.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Virginia Anti-Saloon League Convention was held in the Broad Street Methodist Church in Richmond, on Thursday and Friday, April 14 and 15, 1932. Two sessions were held on Thursday and three on Friday.

There was a State representative in attendance and a thoughtful and prayerful interest in all the addresses, which were many and good.

Of course, business embraced the appointment of committees on nominations and resolutions, and the election of officers for the coming year. The sessions were opened with devotions conducted by Baptists, Methodists, Christians, Episcopalians and songs by the congregation and the church quartette.

The first-day addresses were delivered by Superintendent E. J. Richardson, and this was a keynote message. Mr. Howard M. Hoge brought greetings from the W. C. T. U. Captain. N. Q. Merrick, Commissioner, spoke on Federal Enforcement in Virginia and nearby States. Mr. Lyle W. Ashby of the National Educational Association of Washington, D. C., spoke on "Youth and the Modern World." "Prohibition and Youth," by Judge James Hoge Ricks, of Richmond. "Some Fundamental Legal Phases of National Prohibition," by Mr. E. Hilton Jackson, of Washington, D. C. "National Prohibition is a Wise and Enforceable Public Policy," by Judge James J. Britt, of Washington, D. C.

The second day was full of information, inspiration and confirmation. "Has Prohibition Made Good?" Judge Martin Williams. "The Moral Aspects of Prohibition," by Dr. William S. Campbell, Editor, Presbyterian of the South. "Congress and Prohibition," Edward B. Dunford, National Attorney for the Anti-Saloon League of America, Washington, D. C. "The Status of Virginia Prohibition Legislation and Its Obligations," a statement from the office of the Attorney General. "National Board of Strategy and Party Platforms," by Bishop James Cannon, Jr. His was a masterpiece, and will be published in The Congressional Record. "Alcohol from the Standpoint of a Physician," by Dr. J. E. Rawls, Chief Surgeon and Superintendent of Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va. "The Relation and Duty of the Church to Prohibition," Dr. J. M. Rowland, Editor Richmond Christian Advocate. "Women and Prohibition," Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, President, Woman's National Committee for Law Enforcement. "Is the South Wet or Dry?" Dr. Arthur J. Barton, Pastor Temple Baptist Church, Wilmington, N. C. His address was great and he praised the address made by Dr. J. E. Rawls, of Suffolk.

Col. Neal Dow, son of the famous Neal Dow, a business man of Portland, Maine, and a member of the State legislature, and his monument being the Maine Liquor Law of 1851, was introduced to the audience, and many of those present shook hands with him at the close of the meeting. The present Neal Dow is also of Maine, where prohibition has had many friends since 1851. The first prohibition law was enacted in Maine in 1846, and it grew and grew until it became a national law in 1920. By the time it reaches its centennial in 1946, the question will be so thoroughly understood that the fight will be ended and the public mind will be loyal to prohibition.

When hundreds of all kinds of business, education, professions, and social life, including men and women, leave their homes and engagements, at their own expense, and spend two days in the Capital of the State, in the interest of prohibition, it means more than profession and talk on the subject. It means that the interest of churches, homes, schools, social life and business, has a moral conviction on this subject that will maintain the prohibition law and the moral interests of American society at any cost and any sacrifice that total abstinence from alcohol may require.

W. W. STALEY.

FACING THE FUTURE IN THE SOUTHEAST CONVENTION.

Next week Christians and Congregationalists of the Southeast will face more problems in church work than they have faced in fifty years. They will meet in convention in Burlington to counsel with each other in the hope that their combined wisdom will discover a solution for our problems. Only Christians who are Christ-like and Congregationalists who are Christians will be worthy to grapple with these problems, for it will take courage, sympathy, sacrifice, and determination like that of Jesus to meet our present needs.

To these Christians and Congregationalists who have had a share in the development of their organizations, it is no easy matter to see their cherished Conferences, Conventions and Associations changed into something new and united. But death is always the cost of growth. There was never an Easter until after a tragic Calvary.

Larger territory and more interests are to be served by the combined church than by either former group. This means radical changes in plans and programs. Every phase of the work should be considered frankly. Nothing should be kept simply as a relic of the past. Neither should anything be lost that will promote the new life which is emerging.

The writer claims no superior wisdom and recognizes his deficiencies. But in order that Convention delegates may be thinking ahead, he makes bold to suggest certain changes.

1. Combine the work now done by the Board of Christian Education, the Mission Board, and the Extension Boards of the Denomination as represented in the office of Dr. Bloom, now located in Washington, D. C., and establish a church office at Elon College. By this combination of three offices considerable money can be saved, a field worker placed in Virginia, and a good editor released from other duties to make THE CHRISTIAN SUN a going concern. All the interests of the church can be promoted by this central office and more efficient work will be the result.

2. Adjust our financial program to correspond with the denominational system. This will mean a change to the budget basis and money for Missions, Christian Education, and other enterprises sent to denominational headquarters. It will mean that each church will know the amount it is expected to raise so it can work its own plans of money-raising, it will eliminate so many special offerings, it will give the South the benefit of denominational promotional literature, and will promote all the enterprises of the church on equal basis as each will receive its proportional part of the funds raised. We have an orphanage and two colleges that must be preserved, but the budget can be adjusted to meet this situation. Even if these institutions are not included in the budget, the others could be, and to great advantage as it appears to me.

We, of the Christian Church, have started on the way of union with Congregationalists. It is too late for us to turn back, even if we wanted to do so. There is only one honorable way for us to go, and that is forward at any cost. Selfishness of any kind will have no place in our coming convention. Personalities and pet plans should not keep us from facing the future with eagerness to accomplish the most. If the plans suggested in this article are not the best they should most certainly be discarded for those that are. It would be pathetic indeed if the glorious history of the Southern Christian Convention should bind itself about the body of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, and thus retard the progress of this new organization. The future of our united church is bright with prospect and this writer believes that the delegates to the coming Convention will face all of the difficult problems courageously, and in the spirit of Christian brotherliness, with the one aim of carrying forward the work of Christ in Congregational and Christian Churches throughout the Southeast. NEW CHURCH BEGINS OPERATIONS.

The newly organized United Congregational-Christian Church, of Winston-Salem, began its full-time church program on Sunday, April 10th. Services were held in the Y. W. C. A., and Rev. William T. Scott, of Salisbury, N. C., formerly of Greensboro, will move his residence to Winston-Salem to become the pastor. The movement which led to the organization of this church was begun two years ago under the direction of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, mission secretary of the Southern Christian Convention, after careful survey of Winston-Salem and numerous requests of Christian church members for a church home in this city. Since last September the congregation has been holding Sunday night services, and on March 20th, formal preliminary organization was effected.

The new project has the support of the home mission and church extension boards of the Congregational Christian denomination, the Piedmont Congregational Christian Ministers' Association and the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, of which Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, is president. W. B. Truitt, prominent Christian church layman of Greensboro, was made chairman of the home mission board, under whose leadership additional financial support will be obtained.

The Congregational and Christian churches of the United States completed their organic union at the general council meeting in Seattle last June, the union representing the largest complete merger of two separate protestant denominations in the world. The move for this "united church" in Winston-Salem in the direct result of the merger. —Greensboro Daily News.

AS TRUE NOW AS IT WAS THEN.

Thomas Paine has often been assailed as an atheist. We wonder if the accusation may not be unjust, when we read the following:

"I love the man who can smile in trouble, who can gather strength from distress, and grow brave by reflection. 'Tis the business of little minds to shrink; but he whose heart is firm, and whose conscience approves his conduct, will pursue his principles and deserves reward. Wherefore, instead of gazing at each other with suspicions or doubtful curiosity, let each of us hold out to our neighbor the hearty hand of friendship, and unite in drawing a line, which, like an act of oblivion, shall bury in forgetfulness every former disappointment and dissension. Throw not the burden of the Day upon Providence, but 'show your faith by your works,' that God may bless you!"

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

Plans for Elon College Commencement are taking definite shape. It is the hope of everyone interested that Elon College Day, May 24th, may be the greatest day in the history of the college and one of the greatest days in the history of the church. Will every member of the church begin now to plan to be present for that day?

It is our hope that together we may remove all question as regards the financial support of the college. No one person in the church can, or should, do this. No particular group of persons should undertake such a task, but every member should face this as a privilege and realize that together it is impossible for us to fail. We are depending on you to be present. It will take time and a bit of expense, but Elon College is worth every minute and every dollar that you can possibly put in it. We are depending on you to be present and to do your part. Nothing more. The following letters have been mailed to the churches in North Carolina and Virginia:

"Dear Brother:

"We are hoping to make Elon College Day, May 24th, the greatest day in the history of our church. We want every member and friend of the church who possibly can to be present for that day.

"We are proposing to serve to those who come a free barbecue dinner. This means that we will have to have a large number of pigs, calves, etc.

"You understand, of course, that we do not have the money with which to buy. We are asking every pastor to get his church to either send us a pig or a calf, or send the price that we may buy. This will be easier for you than to try to bring your dinner and will be cheaper in the end.

"Will you please take this matter up with your church at once, and let us know if we may depend upon a pig from your church?

"Will the ones to whom these letters have gone please take them seriously and reply at once?"

"April 7, 1932.

"My dear Brethren:

"I am addressing you regarding Elon College. Our college is, in my judgment, the greatest asset of the church. It is largely the mother of our institutions and is certainly the source from which our leadership for the future must come. Can you think of the Southern Christian Convention without Elon College? I can't!

"The college is in great financial need. I know that we are in a period of depression the like of which this country has seldom known, but with conditions as they are, if every individual who belongs to the Christian Church in North Carolina and Virginia would do their best, would do their duty, we would be secure. Of course, the college cannot be supported out of spare money. This day calls for real sacrifice. Are you willing to make it?

"We have come a long way in the field of education, and Elon College stands abreast with the best educational institutions in the South. Our equipment is second to none. It would be worse than tragic for us to sit down, fold our hands, and allow the greatest asset that we have to slip away. We can come to the rescue if we will.

"The purpose of this letter is to invite you, all of the members of your church, to come visit the college on May 24th, Elon College Day. We are planning an attractive program for this occasion. A free barbecue dinner will be served on the campus. Of necessity, we will want to know approximately how many to prepare for. We are asking every church to send a minimum of ten representative members. Will you take the matter up and write me at once if, ten will be here from your church?

"This meeting is primarily called in the interest of the college for 1932-1933. We will make an effort to underwrite the budget for next year. The time has come when we must face our responsibilities and together bear them. Please let me hear from you.

"Yours truly,

"April 9, 1932.

"My dear Brethren:

"In planning for Elon College Day, May 24th, we are hoping to have a large attendance. I am sorry that it will be impossible for us to take care of everybody at the college. Of course, you will understand this. Perhaps some of you will want to go to Greensboro for the night. I have arranged with the O'Henry Hotel to give all who attend Elon College Day, and who may wish to spend the night in Greensboro, special rates.

"The O'Henry Hotel, through its President, Mr. J. M. Darden, authorizes me to insert the following quotation in my letter to you, and to the friends of the college.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Jesus, how futile our following if it be not all the way! Halting is losing. We may test the footing and circumnavigate the steep, but Golgotha may not be lost to view, nor its enactment unrealized. Thou, blessed Lord, didst not seek to escape from the rugged climb. It was the Father's will to bring thee to the pinnacle of divine power, and we thank thee that in thy victory is our sufficiency for gaining the summit of eternal light. To thy name be praise forever. Amen.

THE MISSIONARY RALLIES.

The women of our day are taking seriously the supreme task of the church. If the men were interested as the women are in giving the bread of life to hungry souls, in making known to a sin-sick world that Name which is above every other name, this would be a different world and ours a different church. The missionary work is the biggest single work on earth; its task, the greatest task ever undertaken by man, or ever carried on by the efforts and energies and consecration of man. "The March of the Eleven" down through the centuries has now resounded through the earth and millions are enlisted in that army on the march. The missionary enterprise has sent more men and women into more parts of the earth to do more work than any other single enterprise known of man. The women comprehend this and are working away at the task, the biggest task ever conceived for the undertaking of humanity. The women of our Christian Church are meeting in their Rallies, or "One-Day Schools of Missions." They do so gladly, cheerfully, hopefully. It may seem small and insignificant to the world, but it is large and very significant.

The North Carolina Conference has seven district rallies—three of these were held last week—one at Burlington, one at Danville, one at New Lebanon in Rockingham County. In all of them there was the spirit of hope, determination, and above all, the power of faith. They have for their theme this year, "Facing the Facts With Faith." This seems providential, for what the world needs most of all now is faith. Business lags, industry suffers, from lack of faith. Stagnation in business simply means loss of faith. The women are trying to carry the message of faith to the heart of the church, to the minds of members, to a world that is suffering from the lack of faith. The women in their Missionary Rallies are talking about faith, they are praying for more faith and they are going forward in faith. Nearly all of the societies in the several districts are represented in their Rallies. Mrs. J. W. Patton presided at Burlington. The program was carried out with interest, and the outstanding feature of the day, "The Open Forum," conducted by Mrs. W. R. Sellars, faced the women with their problems and difficulties, and helped to solve many of them and gave suggestions that many societies will use.

It was deeply regretted that Mrs. L. E. Carlton was unable to attend and preside over the meeting at Danville. She had worked for a good day and her work is in evidence by the delegations from the various churches and the ministers present, but she was confined to her room during the week of the meeting, and her physician advised against her attempting the trip. Mrs. C. V. Dunn presided at the morning service and Mrs. D. J. Sipe at the afternoon service. Rev.

M. T. Sorrell, pastor of Danville, told of the interest of his people in Missions, and encouraged the women by his enthusiastic interest. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president of the Conference, was present and gave the address, "How Our Women are Facing the Situation," which was suggestive and helpful. The round-table discussion, conducted by Mrs. Sipe, was very helpful and developed much enthusiastic interest. The women of the church spread a great and good luncheon, and the day was delightful.

The Guilford District Rally was held with New Lebanon. Rev. J. L. Neese, the pastor, was present to welcome the delegation, to lead the meeting in song and to inspire all with his generous enthusiasm. Mrs. D. E. Mitchell, of Reidsville, presided, and because of her deep interest in missionary work, had wrought faithfully to bring together a good delegation, and the entire program was carried out with interest and helpfulness. Dr. C. H. Rowland conducted the round-table very helpfully, and the women of the various societies took part in the discussion which was lively throughout.

All the Rallies thus far have been well attended and are creating interest and show a growing concern on the part of the women for their missionary work.

IN JAPAN.

Kobe College, Kobe, Japan.

Dear Friends:

If only one's good intentions would materialize and go out as letters to friends, how lovely it would be! I neglect my friends until the mailman brings me any messages from America, and then I remember the old proverb, "If one would have friends he must show himself friendly," or, in other words, if I want to receive letters, I must write some once in a while. I'll not attempt to go back where I left off last, but will begin with the past summer.

Perhaps some of you already know that I didn't really enjoy my summer vacation, but I suppose I ought to be thankful I had one and had a chance to get mended up. I doctored all summer and at the end had to have a slight operation. I have had to go slow all fall, but now I'm feeling fine again. I'm taking this rather unsatisfactory method of answering my friends' letters, and hope you'll pardon me for doing so.

I think you all know about Glenna's coming. Of course, I was ever so glad to have her, but was disappointed when the doctor refused to allow me to go to the boat to meet her, as I had not quite recovered from the operation. Mr. Garman was kind enough to go instead, and he brought Glenna and the other new teacher to see me and then we all went to Karuizwa, a summer resort where many of our missionaries were. Unfortunately, Karuizwa was in a bad mood—it rained every day the girls were there, and so they didn't have a very interesting time. We were all "tickled to pieces" to come to Kobe and were so glad to get away from Karuizwa's cold and dampness, that we never cheeped a word about Kobe's heat. In fact, we were glad for it.

School began with a bang the 9th of September. I have a pretty full schedule, and at first I got pretty tired, but I'm getting used to things and am so much stronger now and so I don't mind it. I love my teaching in the first and second years of the Academy. The girls are the dearest things. You should hear the little tikes talk English. They are practicing on us American teachers. Every time I step out I'm surrounded by a bevy of girls asking, "How are you? It's cool, isn't it?" And some of them jostle me just to have an excuse to say, "Excuse me."

Glenna seems to like Kobe College just fine, and so far as I can tell, she is fitting in splendidly. Teaching isn't her specialty, but I think she is doing fine. Of course, she is in love with the girls, just as all the rest of us are.

The 12th of October was a memorable day in Kobe College history. We laid the cornerstone for the new buildings that are to be erected on the new site. We hope to be able to move out next summer, but can't tell how near done the work will be. I'm afraid we won't get to move that early, but hope I'm mistaken.

The new campus is a beautiful site on top of a hill which used to be the estate of a viscount. Nearby mountains on one side and the sea on the other make lovely scenery for us. A big boys' school across the fields from us will add interest, I think. One lady, who was being shown over the campus, when she saw the boys' college so near and an orange grove between, remarked: "Girls' college here; boys' college there; orange blossoms between. How lovely!"

Today we had the first public performance of three dramas, given by three of the graduation classes. The first, given by the academy, was Joan of Arc translated into Japanese and very well acted. The next, by our college seniors, was Shakespeare's "Coriolanus." Being in English, it was quite difficult, but the girls did it creditably. The last was a dramatization of a famous Japanese story (of a mother who sacrificed her son to save her young prince) was most moving, judging from the sniffles that were audible all over the hall.

Cold weather is upon us again. It amused me to see how many clothes Glenna bundles around her. I remember how I was laughed at when I told home-folks how much I wore in cold weather. It really isn't a laughing matter, though. I'm numb with the cold most of the time during the winter.

No doubt you were all excited over the Japan-China affair. We here in Japan certainly were, and still are. We all hope things are coming out all right. We love Japan too much to have her make war on China, and in fact, on the whole world. We all feel that the military regime got the upper hand, and the government had to give into them. I can't believe, though, that Japan will disregard the whole world and go on fighting.

Blessings on you all,

Sincerely,

ANGIE CREW.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS LETTER.

Cagayan. Misamis, P. I.

February 12, 1932.

Dear Friends:

We find it necessary to make some changes in our daily programs since we have a baby in the house and she is our first consideration. I have to do most of my calling early in the morning now. Miss Fox and I started out last Saturday to one of the barrios where we have a small Sunday School. A short cut through the coconut grove led us to the Cagayan River where we had to cross in a small barrota. There are many houses all along this river and we watched the women as we passed who were pounding out their day's supply of rice. And what a colorful sight along the banks—hundreds of women already busy with their washing, which they pound out on a rock with a short wooden paddle. This sound, mingled with the shouts of little children who were splashing in the water near their mothers. Father was often seen in the water too, but he would be busy with bathing his rooster, for the cock-pit fighters are given a daily bath. What a good scene for a "talkie" could be gotten along this river bank.

After quite a wait the little boat reached this side and about a dozen women got out carrying large flat baskets of fish on their heads. Some of them had come five miles to sell their catch at the market.

When we reached the other side and paid our fare of one-half centavo each, we followed a narrow trail through another coconut grove and as we passed many small nipa houses the children ran out to stare at us, for they do not see many "Americanos." About two miles back we found the house we were looking for. We were cordially welcomed and enjoyed a chat partly in Visayan and partly in English. The mother promised to help with the Sunday School in that barrio, which several of our Bible School girls had started.

A few days after we started out again at 6:00 A. M. This time going much further until we reached the barrio of Bon Bon, a little settlement by the sea. The inhabitants live off fish and tuba (sap from the coconut tree which has the same effect as moonshine liquor). The only people we saw doing anything at all were several young fellows sitting strumming their banjos. At the first house we visited the woman was saying her morning prayers and would not be disturbed. Three of our Bible School girls hold Sunday School for about 50 children in this home every Sunday. We visited in five or six other homes, all of which were bare of the very necessities of life. Only one home, I believe, where there was even a chair. Nearly all the Filipino homes have plants of some kind growing in their windows, but these were barren of even a plant and there were no vines or shrubs of any kind growing in the sandy soil outside. We asked the women we visited if they would be willing to meet together once a week for a Bible lesson and sewing hour. They expressed their willingness, but showed no enthusiasm. This Sunday School is the only work of any kind done there, but we feel that nothing permanent will be accomplished without some work among the older people. I often think of the barren existence of these people, and how much they need to feel the love of Christ.

MISSIONARY RALLY.

The Vance-Franklin-Warren Missionary Rally will be held with the Mt. Auburn Christian Church in Warren County, near Manson, N. C., Tuesday, May 10th, beginning at 10:30 A. M.

There are fourteen churches in the district, as follows: Antioch, Beulah, Bethlehem, Fuller's Chapel, Franklinton, Good Hope, Henderson, Liberty, Mt. Auburn, Mt. Gilead, New Hope, Oak Level, Pope's Chapel and Youngsville. I hope that each church in the district will have representatives at the Rally, whether the church has a Missionary Society or not.

We need cooperation and interest in Missions more now than ever before. So, let us strive to have every church in the district represented at the Rally at Mt. Auburn, and make this the greatest Rally we have ever held.

If I fail to get to each church before the Rally please bear in mind the time and place, Mt. Auburn, Tuesday, May 10th.

"GOD HAD STEPPED IN."

In Africa if the first baby dies the woman is always blamed—that is, among the non-Christians. One mother, reports Rev. Richard S. Webb, of Dondi, West Africa, became a Christian and then decided to visit her home which was in a heathen village. On the way her baby fell ill and died soon after her arrival. Family and friends reproached her, saying that it was a punishment by the evil spirits for accepting Christianity. But this lone mother, grief-stricken and surrounded by heathen customs and the pressure of relatives and friends, insisted upon a Christian burial for her baby. Some of the men consented to dig a grave and carry the small body to its resting place. The mother, being the only Christian, led her own little service. "It was not I that did it," she said later. "It was not I that spoke and sang. I seemed to have left my body. God had stepped in and taken possession of me." But the hardest test was to return childless to her heathen husband, from whom she expected the utmost condemnation and abuse. But strangely half-way to her home she met him and found him sympathetic. "God had prepared his heart," she declared.—Missionary Herald.

A church congregation of 1,500 at each service, is the report of Rev. Richard S. Webb, industrial missionary in Dondi, West Africa, who adds that the church is in the great out-doors and the people come from the student body at Dondi schools and from villages as far as five miles away. These five miles must be walked, of course. The people are feeling the depression even in that part of Africa. But a new school will soon be started at Dondi, if it is not already under way, for which Mr. Webb and his boys made 395,000 bricks last year. Webb, by the way, reports having heard the Harvard-Yale football game broadcast from Boston.

THE JOY OF THE GIVER.

(A Story for a Worship Service.)

"I'm just disgusted with Mrs. Grant, mother; she's the richest woman in our church, and won't give us a cake for our class missionary supper."

"Why, daughter, I never heard of Mrs. Grant being selfish."

"Well, she is. All the girls say the same thing."

"What reason did she give for not helping?"

"Oh, she does not believe in raising money for church work in that way. She believes in tithing. Tithing! What would I give if I tithed?"

"Let us see," suggested her mother, "Your father allows you $10 a month for pin money. Did you ever think of tithing that amount?"

Ella flushed scarlet. "No mother, I never did. Sometimes I've given a quarter and some times a dime, but more often nothing. There are always girls to treat and extras to buy."

"Well, that is $1 you could give each month. Then there was the $25 Aunt Amy sent for a birthday gift."

Ella's face was redder than ever.

"And then the $5 that the boys gave you. That makes $4 you might have given."

A few days later Ella and a young friend were calling at the Old Ladies' Home, where they carried flowers, fruit, and magazines, when they heard the noise of several automobiles, and looking from the window, they saw a line of them drawn up in front.

"Oh!" chirped an old lady, "the cars have come. Mrs. Grant has sent her cars again."

"Mrs. Grant!" gasped Ella.

"Yes. She sends 'em every week. She don't know we know who sends 'em. She doesn't want us to know."

Ella and her friend walked thoughtfully away, and presently stopped at the home of a young girl who did beautiful embroidery work for sale.

"Oh, girls," she exclaimed enthusiastically, "do come in. I've some money for the class circle. I've been tithing. Mrs. Grant, she's my best customer, you know, told me about it. When I make a sale I put in a little book what a tenth of it is, and I have a little jar that I slip it into, and the very thought of trying to fill that jar makes me happy. I can't keep any in it though, for I hear so many calls for help from different places."

The two girls thanked her for her donation, and started on their way.

"Suppose we try tithing, too, Ella," suggested Edith. "We both spend lots of money on little foolish things. My allowance comes tonight. I'm going to put by a tenth the balance of the year. Won't you, too?"

Six months later the girls of the class circle were gathered in their room at the church.

"Who'd ever dreamed such a pile of money could come from a few tithes?" laughed Ella. "And here's a check from Mrs. Grant, and this one line: 'Don't you like the new way better than the old?'"

"Well, I should say we do," chirped another girl.

"And I never was so happy in my life," said another girl.

The next Sabbath the minister preached from the text: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now, herewith, saith the Lord of hosts if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out such a blessing that there shall not be room enough to hold it."

Then he told the story of the circle girls, and urged his people to begin the system of tithing, as only such giving can bring the greatest joy to the giver, as being most acceptable to the Lord. —Selected.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE CHURCH.

Certainly it is proper and right for young people in the church to meet at any convenient time to study the word of God or engage in any legitimate religious activity. The right of Christian women to meet, study the Bible, sew for the poor, or discuss matters that they are particularly and properly interested in, should not be questioned. But if these same young people are under the impression that the regular services of the church are not for them, that something "special" must be done for them to "hold" them, then somebody has made them victims of a group psychology which is harmful both to them and the church. And if they become a society, with a president, secretary, treasurer, etc., they will naturally come to feel that they don't need to "stay for church," and will resent any criticism of, or interference with, their "society" by elders of the church or anybody else outside the circle. They will develop a friendly feeling for the missionary-society idea—why not?—and the B. Y. P. U.'s and Y. P. S. C. E.'s of sectarianism. And if Christian women cannot be happy unless they become as much like some sectarian ladies' aid society as possible, it would be better for the church for them to stay at home and confine their activities to their individual domestic problems. When anybody in the church, young or old, male or female, cannot be satisfied to work as a member of the church and give the Lord "the glory in the church," some adjustments are needed.—C. E. Wallace in Gospel Advocate.

NOTICE.

The 38th Annual Virginia State Christian Endeavor Union Convention will begin Thursday, June 23rd, and will continue through Sunday, June 26th.

A very attractive program has been arranged by the Convention Committee. Mr. Harold Cheyney, Field Secretary of the Maryland C. E. Union, Mr. Warren Hoopes, General Secretary of the Pennsylvania C. E. Union, and other outstanding denominational leaders have been secured for the occasion.

The Convention Church is the Christian Temple, 34th St. and Llewellyn Ave., Norfolk, Va. Registration fee for the Senior group is $1.00, and for the Intermediate, 50c. Send your registration now to Miss Dora Martin, 1430 Seaboard Ave., South Norfolk, Va.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION SESSION.

Announcements have already gone to each church in the Convention outlining the program for the Youth Session to be held at Burlington, N. C., on April 29th, as the concluding part of the program of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches. A business session, which will include reports and the election of officers for the Youth Fellowship for the biennium, will be held from 2:30 P. M., to 5:00 P. M. A banquet will be held in the church dining hall at 6:00 P. M., for the Youth delegates. An attractive banquet program has been planned. The evening program will be in charge of the Youth Fellowship officers, with an outstanding speaker. As this goes to press it is impossible to make definite announcement as to the speaker.

Those expecting to attend the banquet should send fifty cents for reservation to Miss Virginia Morton, 201 Sellers St., Burlington, N. C., as soon as possible.

"APPRECIATING OUR PARENTS."

Instrumental Prelude—"Home, Sweet Home."

Opening Sentences—"Jehovah is my strength and song, and He is become my salvation: This is my God, and I will praise Him. My father's God, and I will exalt him."—Exodus 15:2.

Hymn—"Come, Thou Almighty King."

Scripture—Ephesians 6:1-3.

Hymn—"Faith of Our Fathers."

Prayer—"Father, we praise thee for the joys and privileges of our homes. We thank thee for the comradeship of mother, father, brothers and sisters. We feel a deep sense of gratitude toward our parents for their tender, patient care, their sacrificial devotion, their great expectations for us. We are thankful for the training in life which we have received from them, and for the Christian idealism they have implanted in our souls. Joyfully do we enter into this service of appreciation with thousands of other sons and daughters throughout the land. Amen."

Presentation of the Topic—

Talk—"The Kind of Relationship I'd Like With My Son if I Were a Father," by a young man.

Talk—"The Kind of Relationship I'd Like With My Daughter if I Were a Mother," by a young woman.

Talk—"Trying to Understand Our Parents."

Talk—"Ways to Show Our Appreciation of Our Parents."

Period of Meditation—"How Can I Show My Appreciation for My Parents?" Each person facing this question frankly and sincerely, and forming some purposes and plans.

Closing Thought—"The greatest gifts parents are privileged to bequeath to their children are not in the realm of material things. They are things of the body such as health, and training in clean habits of living; and things of the Spirit—faith, hope, love, reverence, high ideals, and noble purposes. These are the heritage of Christian youth. There is no greater way to show our appreciation of our parents than to cherish this heritage in our daily living."

Hymn—"I Would Be True." (Sung in the spirit of dedication.)

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. S. A. BENNETT, Elon College, N. C.

ISAAC AND HIS WELLS.

LESSON V—MAY 1, 1932.

LESSON TEXT: Genesis 26:12-25.

GOLDEN TEXT: "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but a grievous word stirreth up anger."

TIME: B. C. 1903 to 1826.

PLACE: Hebron, Beer-lahai-roi, Gerar, Beer-sheba.

Abraham was an old man when Isaac, the son of promise, was born. Indeed, his very name, meaning the "Laughing One," was given because of the incredulous laughter of Sarah, when the angel announced that she, an old woman though she was, would give birth to a son. When at the age of ninety, the promise was fulfilled, she said in a different vein, "God hath made me to laugh." It was then the laugh of praise and thanksgiving.

Later we have the story of the command to Abraham to sacrifice Isaac, and of the substitution of the sacrificial ram. Isaac was at that time about twenty-five years of age.

At the age of forty, Isaac was a man of retiring habits and thoughtful disposition. It is characteristic of him that when the time approached when he should marry, that instead of going in search of a wife himself, an old servant should be sent. This faithful servant went to Haran in Mesopotamia, and there found Rebekah, the granddaughter of Abraham's brother, Nahor. Laban, her brother, when he saw the rich presents Abraham had sent, was more than willing that she should go to the far-away land of Canaan to become the bride of Isaac.

After Abraham's death, Isaac was confronted by the terror of famine, and removed to Gerar, a Philistine city. From there he started to Egypt, but was warned of God in a vision not to go. At this time the Lord renewed the promises he had made Abraham, telling Isaac that his posterity should become a great nation, and that he should be greatly blessed. Our lesson opens with the beginning of the fulfillment of these promises.

And Isaac sowed in that land near Gerar, and found sustenance for his family and his servants and his herds and flocks; for he found in that year an hundredfold. And Jehovah blessed him in the enterprises he undertook, until he waxed great, and grew more and more until he became very great.

We are told that he had man-servants and maid-servants to take care of his vast possessions. No one man could take care of the great wealth he possessed. Another thing was necessary indeed—water for his flocks and for his people. The Philistines had become envious and had filled up the wells which Abraham digged, so Isaac digged again the wells of water. Isaac was a quiet, unaggressive man, but he had a persistency which won its way where a more aggressive type might have failed. He dug first a well in the valley near Gerar, but the herdsmen there strove with him for its possession, so he named it "Contention," and then proceeded to dig another and they strove for that also. If goodness perseveres, so also does evil—so long as the world exists there will be conflict between the two. And he called this well "Enmity," recognizing as he did the hostile spirit back of the Philistines' contention. Abraham would have fought for his rights, so, too, would have Jacob, but Isaac won by giving in.

Final victory was his, for he removed from thence, and digged another well; and for that they strove not. His patience had won at last. The Philistines had not the nerve to disturb him a third time. And he called the name of the well "The Well of the Broad Places." God had at last given him a place of rest, and it was better than the first places. How often does God withhold that which we may desire, that he may give us a better gift.

Later on Isaac left this well and went to Beer-sheba. "Although the strife over the wells had ceased, Isaac withdrew, probably to ensue peace, to the place where his father had made a treaty with the chief of Gerar for the possession of the wells." His action seems to have been appreciated, for Abimelech, the king of the Philistines, came to him there to renew the treaty. It is here we get the name, for the well of Beer-sheba, may well mean, "The Well of the Oath."

And on that first night God appeared to Isaac and adjured him to "Fear not," and said, "I am with thee, and will bless thee, and multiply thy seed for my servant Abraham's sake." The possession of many children was the greatest blessing God could bestow upon Isaac. He had only two sons, but their descendants were numerous even in his lifetime. So Isaac builded there an altar to God and called upon his name. And he pitched his tent there—made it his home—and caused his servants to re-dig the "Well of the Oath."

WHAT IS THE COMPENSATION?

The full story will never be told of what missionaries have endured. Much of it has been borne in secret with that silent patience that seeks recompense only from God. They have said good-bye to parents and friends, many of whom they have never seen again on earth. Often on their return, they have only memories of father or mother and a marble slab or a plot of green in the graveyard. They send their children home and, having committed them to God, settle down again to bear without complaint their wistful loneliness. The past few months have revealed all too poignantly the sufferings and the heartaches of our missionaries despite the courage with which they have endured. Some are beset by dangers untold, by flood and famine and banditry and war. Their hearts are broken by the sight of the need and suffering around them. They are burdened with the overwhelming weight of crass superstition and idolatry.

A missionary was asked what compensation he had found in his work for all the sacrifices he had made. He took from his pocket a letter, worn with much handling, and read this sentence from an Oriental student:

"But for you, I would not have known Jesus Christ, our Saviour. Every morning as I kneel down before God, I think of you and I pray."

"That," said the missionary, "is my compensation."—Rev. C. Darby Fulton, D. D.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

FOREWORD:

The entire week's lessons this week are Biblical teachings in what it means to be a Christian. A review of the New Testament stories will yield a very fruitful revelation of the emphasis Jesus and the apostles placed on "How to be a Christian." It is necessary for you to use your Bible and read the lessons in order to derive the greatest benefit.

MONDAY.

A CERTAIN MAN.

LESSON: Luke 9:57-62.

"I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest," said a "certain man." That man comes upon the scene and steps into the limelight of apostleship like a flashing meteor, and his words ring like a trumpet across the centuries. But he disappears as suddenly as he came, and he has never been heard from since. It is an incident opened and closed in a moment. We may fairly ask, "Was he saved?" There is no answer. Only God knows. But the lesson leaves with us one of the many teachings of our Lord as to "What it means to be a Christian." It is perfectly clear, from what Jesus said, that to follow Him meant hardship and social sacrifice. It was more than this, it was a restatement of the prophetic challenge "choose ye this day whom ye will serve." To follow Jesus means choice.

That has always been so. God never enforces his will; He never drafts us. Our following must be voluntary. We must say, "I will follow," and, in doing so, be willing to forego a lot in order to follow.

The reply of Jesus was as if to say, "My way is a way of self-denial and privation. My way may take you away from those and from things you love very much. Understanding that, will you follow me now?"

Prayer.—Dear Father. Endow our souls with the sterling worth of following our Lord Jesus Christ, willing to all the sacrifices necessary. Amen.

TUESDAY.

JESUS' FULL DESCRIPTION OF A CHRISTIAN.

LESSON: Matt. 5:2-11.

This chapter is a part of Jesus' first utterances when he began his ministry. It has been called "his inaugural address." It has been called also the magna charta of his kingdom. These expressions are not adequate, to be sure, but, in that they do embrace largely the fundamentals of the kingdom and the traits of Christian character, his teachings are easily remembered by these familiar terms.

Jesus says the chief characteristics of a true child of God are: Poor in spirit, meek, hunger after righteousness, merciful, pure in heart, peacemakers, persecuted for righteousness' sake, rewarded for Jesus' sake—all such shall see God and inherit the Kingdom of God.

This reminds us of Paul's description of a Christian: "The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, meekness, against such there is no law."

This also reminds us of the description of a Christian as given in Micah 6:8. "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good." That is he hath given us minds and hearts, and a capacity to understand for ourselves what is good," and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly."

As we review these things, we observe that humility is the chiefest of these traits. Just so far as we can be just, just so far as we can be humble, just so far as we can be merciful, just so far as we can be pure, and no further, are we Christians.

Prayer.—Our Father, thou art our Lord, and great is thy name. What we cannot be ourselves, thou wilt be for us. Inspire us to be all we can. We lean on thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DAVID DESCRIBETH A CITIZEN OF THE KINGDOM.

LESSON: Psalm 15.

"He that walketh uprightly, worketh righteousness, is truthful, not a backbiter nor gossip, who doeth no evil to a neighbor, who hates sin and vileness, who honoreth those who fear the Lord." "Whosoever doeth these things shall not be moved." Against such things there is no law. Do these things and thou art a Christian.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou and only Thou canst save us. Keep Thy way ever before us. Help us to walk therein forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

PETER.

LESSON: St John 13:33-38.

Jesus said, . . . love one another." By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples.

Peter wanted to know where his master was going that he could not go with him, asserting vehemently that he would die for Him. And Jesus said, "You die for me? The cock shall not crow till thou hast denied me thrice."

Jesus would teach us that to follow Him is not so easy. He puts it as if to say, "the Christian way is a hard way beset with many temptations in which one may find the spirit willing but the flesh weak."

Prayer.—Our Father, we are weaker than Peter often. We fall to temptations to protect ourselves easily. Do thou save us and keep us true, forever. Amen.

FRIDAY.

HOW A LAWYER COULD BE A CHRISTIAN.

LESSON: Luke 10:25-37.

This young man asked Jesus how he could be a Christian. Jesus asked, "What says the law?" He replied: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and thy neighbor as thyself?"

Jesus said, "Thou hast answered aright. Do this and you will be a Christian." But the young lawyer was tempting Jesus, and was ready to argue, so he asks, "Who is my neighbor?"

Thereupon Jesus gave him the story of the Good Samaritan helping the man who was down by the roadside who had been beaten by robbers and left for dead, and then he asked the lawyer, "Who do you think was the neighbor?"

He replied, "The Samaritan, of course." Jesus replied, "Thou answerest aright. Go thou, and do likewise."

How often has he taught us that doing good unto others is Christianity, "inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

Prayer.—Here we are, dear Lord, make us all thy messengers of mercy and grace unto all people whom we meet, and may the world see in us, thy righteousness. Amen.

SATURDAY.

CHRISTIANITY IS A CHOICE.

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."—Joshua 24:13-18.

This is the invitation and challenge of God in olden days. It is now repeated. It is handed down to us just that way, forever the same invitation. Jesus said, "Come unto me." "Follow me." And it has ever been so that following him or coming unto him is absolutely voluntary. God never forces his will upon us. God never makes us Christians against our wills. We must say, "I will follow thee." "I am coming Lord." And he has not left us without a knowledge of the difficulty of the road, neither has he left us without that blessed assurance that he will be with us in the sixth trouble and in the seventh he will not forsake us. Yea, he will never leave us nor forsake us. The Christian life, however hard and with whatever sacrifices, is within the possibility of all, from the lowest to the highest.

Prayer.—Dear Father, as we sing, "I am thine O Lord, I have heard thy voice," may it not be said under the influence of a moment's inspiration and enthusiasm, but may we mean it body and soul and spirit, and make thee our choice every day. Amen.

SUNDAY.

FLYING AND HEARING.

"I will hear what God Jehovah will speak."—Psalm 85:4-11.

Do you live near a high-powered electric plant, and have you tried to operate a radio receiving set? You will find that it is impossible.

Aviators are sitting within a few feet of a high-power plant, the engine of their plane. For months an aviator was unable to use radio and thus keep up communication with the land while in the air. But now he can do it, because a protective metallic covering has been devised for the engine and all wires connected with it, so that it is effectively cut off from the radio apparatus.

This is an excellent illustration of a well-managed religious life. Worldliness presses in upon it, with its constant clamor, its allurements, its fancied necessities. Soon we find that the world-voices drown out the voice of God. We must get a sound-proof closet of prayer. And it must go with us as we speed upon our tasks.

Prayer.—Speak to our souls and we will listen, O God of our souls. Give us wisdom to select the best. And keep us from distraction with less than the best. Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES.

Little Aiko San comes from a gay home and is often taken with her parents to places hardly suitable for children. She came to Glory Kindergarten in Kobe, and there learned to pray. The mother regarded this as somewhat of an accomplishment. One night Aiko San was taken to a jazzy restaurant. Laughingly, the mother said to the little girl: "Why don't you make the prayer that you always say at home before meal-time?" Aiko San looked about the noisy, blaring place with her quiet black eyes and then replied thoughtfully, "This doesn't seem like a place to pray. I think it has to be quieter."

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

THOMAS.

"And there were together Simon Peter, and Thomas."—John 21:3.

Four times the windows are opened and we look on Thomas. Four times we see him just as he is. And these four times are enough to convince us that Thomas was a close follower of Jesus. Perhaps we have been accustomed to think of Thomas as one of the lesser ones. At least we have called him names right down across the centuries, and we have said he was the doubter. I rather must think of him as a man whose hopes are not sanguine and bouyant. Thomas was a man with the "I-fear-it-will-never-come-to-pass" complex. But nevertheless we find him in that small band who followed Jesus.

Why did men follow Jesus? Jesus must have often asked himself that question. We are told that he was at times all night in prayer and meditation. He must have asked God about each of his disciples. And one of the things he surely asked was: "Why do men follow me?" Experience gave him many reasons. Some followed him for bread and fish. They believed that with Jesus there was food; that prosperity followed in his wake; that it was worth-while to follow him in order that they might fill their stomachs. May their tribe decrease, although it is a fact of history that wherever Jesus' "bread of heaven" story has been told a larger abundance of the bread of earth has prevailed.

Others followed him for place. It is an age-old craving. Men and nations still hunger for their places in the sun. Map lines on the earth still move on account of that craving. James and John wanted to sit next to Jesus in his kingdom. And their mother, indeed, eagerly sought to secure for them these seats. I guess I take an opposite view from many on that point. I think, being human as they were, they did well to so seek. Would more sons sought places near to Jesus! Would more mothers sought as good places for their sons! Even the seeking of bread and fish is not such an evil thing, and the seeking of seats near the Saviour of men is much less so. But there was a third motive far higher than either of these: Some sought to follow him in order that they might become fishers of men! And there you have the command of Jesus, and the high motive for following him. The lowest motive on record is that of filching from the bag what was contained therein! That motive is too dangerously near like that of exploiting human lives in the sweatshops of toil for the personal gain of a few men in pompous control to be comfortable! It has a seeming in like the laying up for self of millions made from the manufacture of weapons and materials of war when it is known that those same materials will rob the treasure chests of humanity of its fairest gems and fondest hopes! Inordinate and ungodly gain is still filching from the holiest treasures of earth that which will doom their souls in self-destruction, and place the cross of suffering on earth's highest hill!

But neither of these motives was what held Thomas. And just here Thomas was different from all the rest. Why did Thomas follow Jesus? Jesus himself must have asked that question, for Jesus could well see that Thomas' hopes of any success coming from the enterprise in which they were engaged were very small. As I say, Thomas was not much of the hoping kind! He had seen the crowds follow Jesus. He had seen Jesus very popular. He had seen them little by little, and little by little, drop away. He had been in the meeting when all but the few disciples forsook him and turned away. He had been near when they took up stones in Jerusalem to stone him to death, and had seen Jesus slip away. It was following that situation that we get a look at Thomas.

Jesus' friend, Lazarus, lay a-dying. A messenger seeks him with an urgent message for his return to the Bethany home near Jerusalem. Each of the disciples that he surely endangers his life by going back into the Jerusalem country. They protest. When their protestations prevail not, Thomas shines, and how he shines! "Then said Thomas, which is called Didymus, Let us go also, that we may die with him." Here opens wide the window for a view of Thomas, and what a view! Why does Thomas follow Jesus? Because he loves him so! He sees little hope of dying for him, but he is quite ready to die with him! After that speech I can never feel toward Thomas as I have often felt toward him before. Thomas followed Jesus not for his surroundings—as George Matheson would put it—but for his self! To die with Jesus was far better than living without him, having once known and loved him!

A second time the window opens and we see Thomas. They are in that Upper Room. Jesus is talking in a low, quiet, steady voice. They are hanging on his words. Something awful is pending. In the midst of his speech Jesus says: "Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know," and our man Thomas says, "Lord, we know not whither thou goest, and how can we know the way?" I see a smile, a trifle of a sweet, secret smile play on the face of Jesus, for he knows what Thomas is surely going to learn; he knows that Thomas' love is going to lead Thomas to see more than the Way—Thomas will see God! This view of Thomas shows him anxiously trying to find his hope fastened in something tangible, and ready to bring his doubts and perplexities to Jesus. Thomas, lead on. Let all who have their doubts be frank enough and fair enough to bring them to Jesus. Let them not summarily cast away Jesus and keep their unanswered question. If they must have unanswered questions let them keep near to Jesus, too; and they may have, like Thomas, another opportunity to learn a larger lesson.

A third window opens on Thomas. Jesus has been crucified. Thomas' worst dreams have come all too true. Thomas has seen with his eyes what his fears prophesied. Truly for Thomas the Movement had ceased to move. Jesus had neither lived, nor had Thomas had the privilege of dying with him. He can find little hope in the broken fellowship of the disciples and absents himself from the group. But Jesus is resurrected. He meets them! They tell Thomas, and Thomas says: "Unless I see the scars I shall not believe!" Later Thomas is with them. Jesus enters their midst, and walking up to Thomas he bids him look at the scars with his eyes, and touch them with his hands. Thomas sees with his soul! And falling at the feet of Jesus in perfected love, he cries: "My Lord, and my God!" What a view of Thomas; yes, and ah! what a view of Christ!

The fourth window opens, and it is only a peep; but it is a significant one. It is couched in the words of the text: "And there were to-

Dear Friends:

When Mr. Edwin Gould, of New York, visited our institution some months ago, he suggested that we adopt the honor system, and the child that made "A" grade be given an "A-1" grade button; the child that made an "A-2" grade be given an "A-2" grade button, and so on down the line.

We decided that a child who got "A" grade on deportment in school would be entitled to an "A-1" grade button, and so on down the line. Last month we had forty-two children in school who got "A" grade in deportment and received and "A-1" button. We had thirty-eight who got "B" on deportment, and got "A-2" buttons. Fifteen got "A-3" buttons, and only five out of 100 children got "A-4" buttons.

We are expecting the "A-1" grade to largely increase during the month and the other buttons to decrease. Our children have an ambition to do their best.

One of our buildings has a prize lamp, and the little girls who keep the nicest and most tidy room for a whole month get the lamp. If during the next month some other girls keep a better room they get the lamp.

The first two girls who won the lamp have been able to keep it as none have been able to keep a nicer room. I never saw a child but that it always felt happy when it does things just right.

We have five little girls who live in the same room in the Johnston Hall, but who sleep on the sleeping porch. Last Saturday they cleared up their room and put it in order and came to the office and asked me to go and inspect it. Of course, I went to please them, and I have not been in a room anywhere that was more tastily fixed up than theirs. It was clean as a new pin—everything in its place. The little articles on the dresser were neatly and tastily arranged. Nice little pictures on the walls. A big doll sitting on each side of the window and a beautiful little celluloid doll sitting on a little pillow in the middle of the bed. They were very happy that they had it so nice and I told them how I appreciated their beautiful room being kept so well. The children do try to keep the buildings clean and presentable all the time. We had a lady visitor last week who travels, and she said she visited all orphanages in the State, and we had the nicest and best kept orphanage she had visited. The little girls appreciated her compliment very much.

Don't forget the eggs and the soap wrappers.

gether Simon Peter, and Thomas." Heretofore, whenever the list of the disciples has been made, other names have stood next to Peter. But now they are lining up that greatest of all groups of those who have gone out for God, to begin their trek, alongside him who leads all the rest stands Thomas! Our hearts still warm mightily within us as we see poor old Simon Peter still holding his place in spite of all his failings—shifting, wind-blown Peter has become Cephas, a rock—and the man who followed for love's sake alone stands by his side. Heretofore it has read, "Peter, James and John. Now it reads, "And there were together Simon Peter, and Thomas, called Didymus, and Nathaniel, of Cana in Galilee, and the sons of Zebedee, and two other of his disciples," and it is beautiful because it is John, himself, who records the shift in names. We honor John for that and see why Jesus loved him.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4¼ inches x¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together. The size, 2½x4¼ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

THEN spake Je'sus to the multitude, and to his disciples,

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3¾x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

W. A. HARPER, Editor.

(Any book reviewed in this Department may be had of THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the publisher's price.)

WHAT NEXT? by John E. Calfee. Fleming H. Revell Co. 148 pp. $1.50.

Dr. Calfee, President of the Asheville Normal and Teachers College, who has lived an eventful and helpful life of sympathy and understanding for young people, has collected in this volume twenty choice messages which he has delivered to them. The reader is impressed with the sanity of the author, and with his penetrating insight.

DIAGNOSING TODAY, by M. S. Rice. Abingdon Press. 195 pp. $1.50.

Dr. Rice finds seven deadly sins in our present-day life and "meditates" upon them in the effort to discover underlying causes rather than surface symptoms. These sins are policies without principles, wealth without work, pleasure without conscience, knowledge without character, industry without morality, science without humanity, and worship without sacrifice. The distinguished pastor of the Metropolitan Church of Detroit in this volume maintains his high standard of eloquence as he pleads individual and social righteousness. Here is a prophetic message for our day.

MAKING RELIGION REAL, by Elisha A. King. Personal Help Library. 48 pp. 50c.

Rev. Elisha A. King, D. D., pastor of the Community Church of Miami Beach, Fla., preaches to his congregation on Sunday mornings sermons that are repeated Sunday afternoons to a much larger congregation of the air over Station WIOD. In this delightful book he has presented four of these dually-delivered sermons: "The Approach to God," "The Availability of God," "Communion With God," "Prayer in an Age of Science." These are his themes, and he treats them most satisfyingly. It would be hardly possible to invest 50c more profitably for the spiritual uplifting of life than to purchase this book.

IN A COLLEGE CHAPEL, by G. W. Fiske. Harper & Brothers. 126 pp. $1.25.

Prof. Fiske dedicates this volume of soul-stirring chapel talks to "Oberlin College in gratitude for a quarter-century of opportunity." The twenty addresses which make up the book are all animated by the concept that the real purpose of the college experience is two-fold—education and worth-while friendships. The author of many books having to do with religious education, the family, and worship, in no one of them does the distinguished teacher lay bare his soul as in these intimate talks. The reader finds himself saying that chapel ought to be compulsory where such addresses as these enrich the minds and hearts of the youth who are there to hear and heed.

THE TAPROOT OF RELIGION AND ITS FRUITAGE, by Charles F. Sanders. The Macmillan Co. 266 pp. $2.00.

A professor of philosophy faces our modern world in this thoughtful book. Our marvelous scientific achievements do not abash him in the least. Religion can get along without science, but it can't be said vice-versa. Science discovers facts. Religion interprets facts. Matter gravitates. Plants germinate. Personal life, the realm of religion, aspires.

Religion evaluates experience. The research agent of religion is mysticism, its proving ground is reason, science is, or should be, its ally in the mechanical order, metaphysics is its unifying agent, the church furnishes it its institutional power, while faith is shown to be the master of civilization. Civilization is based on three faiths—faith in God (Hebraic), faith in man (Grecian), and faith in social organization (Roman). Consecrated personal life and brotherhood expressed in institutional organization are its fruitage.

But what is the taproot of religion? On page 121 we are assured that "the taproot of religion is found in the fact of personality," which is defined as "being that which formulates ideals and moves toward their realization." Again, on page 208, the writer is speaking of "the immediate experience of God," and adds, "This is the taproot of religion." Does religion have two taproots? It is regrettable that so good a book of the dualistic philosophical type should be marred by such careless expressions as these. And besides others find the taproot of religion neither in personality nor in the mystical apprehension of God. Nevertheless, it is a book worth reading.

ELON COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

OBITUARIES.

BRADY.

Mrs. Caroline Brady, widow of the late O. W. Brady, and member of Pleasant Grove Church, passed to her reward on March 9, 1932, at the age of 78 years, 7 months and 12 days. She leaves to her four children and many other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held by her pastor at Pleasant Grove, where she had long held her membership, and burial was in the church cemetery.

May the Heavenly Father comfort the bereaved.

T. J. GREEN.

EDWARDS.

Mr. George Calhoun Edwards, born 18, 1861, died March 8, 1932. In 1881 he professed faith in Christ and with the Union Chapel Methodist Church. In 1901, when Full Christian Church was established his membership to it and faithful member until the wards is survived by his wife, one daughter, Mrs. R. E. Moss, one granddaughter, Miss Vera Moss, one brother, Mr. C. T. Edwards, and two sisters, Mrs. C. C. Woodlief and Mrs. Lewis Clayton.

Mr Edwards was a good neighbor and was respected by all. He was a lover of children and flowers, and while the casket was being lowered, at his request, several children marched by the grave, each dropping a flower on the casket. Services were conducted by the writer. Interment was in Fuller's Chapel Church cemetery.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

H. E. CRUTCHFIELD

APPLE.

Andrew Apple was born in Guilford County, March 28, 1857, and died March 31, 1932, age 75 years and 3 days. He is survived by his widow and four children and twenty-six grand-children and twenty-one great-grandchildren.

For many years Mr. Apple was a member of Apple's Chapel and was a devout Christian.

Funeral services for the deceased were held in his church Saturday afternoon, April, 2nd, in charge of the writer and Rev. J. F. Apple. A large congregation assembled to pay a last tribute of respect to the passing of a devoted friend, loving companion, beloved father and a Christian gentleman.

VOLUME LXXXIV.

NUMBER 17.

.. THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ..

By DR. W. C. WICKER.

How It Spreads.—

The astounding piece of work by Dr. Frank C. Laubach in Lanao, Philippine Islands when he invented an alphabet so that the Moros could learn to read, is spreading over all the Philippine Islands. The Bataibal Christian Council had Dr. Laubach spend several weeks in Manila, and north of that city, training teachers for formulating "keys" for the various dialects. Charts are now ready for the Tagalog, Llocan, Pompango, Pangasinan, Llonggo, Cebuano, Ifugaw, Kalinga, Bicol, Ibanag, Joloano, and Maranaw dialects.

Improving (?) On the Bible.—

This writer heard a minister say a while ago that the Twenty-third Psalm had in it too much "I" and "me." It was on that account rather self-centered and might be improved. The editor of the National Christian Advocate relates that recently a speaker startled a listener with his thought about the imagery of the shepherd in the Twenty-third Psalm, saying that this was entirely out of time and order now, since so few of us know about the work of a shepherd, the life of sheep-tending. He, therefore, would want to reconstruct the Twenty-third Psalm to read: "The Lord is my psychoanalyst; he will lead my libido aright and guide me in my complexes." And a bright young man in the group suggested that he would add: "And deliver me from my fixations." That may sound rather ludicrous, but no more so than many of the suggestions of those who would change our religious terminology and rewrite our Bible and bring it "up-to-date."

Who Holds the Balance of Power?—

Over 7,000,000 unnaturalized foreigners for twenty years have had nearly thirty-five congressmen. Over 6,000,000 will have nearly twenty-five for the next ten years. Although they cannot vote legally in any state, they hold the voting balance of power in national legislation and in the nomination and election of president. While citizens of the United States who live in Alaska and the District of Columbia have no voting representation in congress, the more than a million unnaturalized foreigners in New York City, unassimilated, huddled in racial groups, have had five or six voting members of congress whom Tammany names and votes. The obvious thing is to secure the adoption of the Sparks-Capper anti-alien representation amendment. This will break the power of alienism in American politics functioning through the Tammany sort of corrupt political organization. It will serve notice that the American people have decided that the great moral experiment of prohibition shall be determined by representatives of American citizenship only.—Wm. H. Anderson.

The Pope Gets His Check.—

American Catholics recently presented to Pope Pius XI in the Vatican at Rome a check for $1,100,000.00. This check the Pope is to use "for the propagation of the faith." Since Catholics hold that only the Catholic Church is a church at all, and that Catholics only have faith, this good, fat, American check goes to the Pope for him to use in the propagation of the Catholic faith throughout the world. This check, we are told, was increased by other checks "for the propagation of the faith," amounting to $1,500,000.00, thus giving His Holiness the good sum of $2,600,000.00, which is 42 per cent of the Catholic world's donation to Catholic Missions. This is 28 per cent less than the Pope received last year, though some countries are yet to be heard from, which it is thought, will represent a decline of 15 per cent of this year's contributions "for the propagation of the faith." Even with this decreased fund the Pope will be able to carry on considerable propaganda throughout the world "for the faith." Nor have we seen it suggested from any quarter that this fund of $1,100,000.00 should have been "kept at home to feed the hungry and give employment to the unemployed."

Institutions Versus Individuals.—

The Southern Churchman raises the question as to whether the church is developing institutionalism at the expense of individualism. There is some point here worth considering:

"The church has been passing through a period when the limitations of organization and institutionalism have been laid bare. Organization has never before been carried to such a high level of efficiency; expert business men have been called in to give the church a thoroughly business-like administration; but some how or other, the system has failed to function in the efficient way that might have been expected, though many improvements have been made along some lines.

"It raises the question whether this is the particular way in which God wishes His church to work. Israel was told by Isaiah: 'For your ways are not my ways, neither are my ways your ways, saith the Lord; For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts.' This being so, it is quite possible that running the church as a business concern is not the way that God wishes it to be carried on; or, at any rate, that machinery should not completely dominate the situation. Christianity reveals the power of personality."

Shakespeare Memorial.—

Last week's Nashville Christian Advocate carried on its front cover a cut of the ancient baptismal font used at the baptism of the infant

William Shakespeare, in Holy Trinity Church, Stratford-on-Avon, April 26, 1564. Shakespeare's birthday is unknown, but he died on April 23rd, and the 368th anniversary of his death was marked by a new memorial theater at Stratford, opened by the Prince of Wales. This memorial was built by contributions from all parts of the world and cost something over $1,250,000.00. The Manchester Guardian says of the memorial: "It stands as a world tribute to Shakespeare. Much of the money which has been spent upon it has come from outside this country—$600,000.00 from America alone. Many parts of the world are represented in the subscription lists. The opening ceremony should, therefore, be an international one before an international audience."

We are told that the county in which Shakespeare was born over three hundred years ago is noted for its fertile lands which yield an abundance of grain. And yet all the grain crops of the entire county each year do not yield as much revenue to the county as the tourists do who come to view the place where Shakespeare lived and died. Genius is valuable as well as immortal.

Canadian Wets Clamor.—

By putting liquor under government control, Canada has no more settled the liquor problem than has the United States. Five years ago the Canadian wets carried on a great campaign, and so successfully, that they brought liquor back, but under government control. But it seems that the government can no more control the sale of liquor than it can prevent the illegal sale of it. Ontario liquor interests are now clamoring for an increase of the traffic through licensed hotels and beer shops. The further facts are related by the National Christian Advocate in these words:

"The hotels are asking for permission to return to the retailing of liquors. They say there are many "blind pigs" and bootleggers still operating in the province. Besides, consumption of beer is now only three gallons per head of population. In 1913 it was nine gallons. By permitting private enterprises to push the sale of beer, more would be consumed, and the brewers would have larger incomes. Five years ago the Canadian voters were told the same story now being circulated in this country. They were assured that under government control there would be no saloons, but increased taxes from the sale of beer, an end of the bootleggers and "tigers," and decreased drinking. Now the Canadian "wolf," having inserted its head in the house, is struggling to squeeze his whole body in. The return of the saloon is as truly the goal of the agitators of prohibition reform as is national prohibition that of the Anti-Saloon Leaguers."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Has any one offered you, or asked you to use, the "coin card" and thus in ten weeks save and give to Missions one dollar?

This week the Convention is in session at Burlington—the Southern Convention of Christians and the Convention of the Southeast of the Congregationalists and Christians.

Rev. J. Lee Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C., recovers slowly from a recent break-down that prevents his preaching. He fondly hopes, and in that hope we heartily join, to be back soon at his work.

Pres. L. E. Smith, of Elon College, is a busy man and is in much demand as commencement preacher and speaker these days. He delivered two baccalaureate sermons last Sunday before high schools of Charlotte, N. C.

Rev. A. R. Van Cleave, of the Elon College faculty, preached at the First Christian Church, at 11:00 A. M., Sunday, April 24th. Dr. C. H. Rowland, the pastor, occupied the pulpit of the Congregational-Christian Church at Salisbury.

Prof. A. R. Flowers, Sims, N. C., delivered an address in the auditorium of the Archer Lodge High School, near Clayton, N. C., Sunday evening, April 17th, his remarks being addressed for the most part to the young people in whom Prof. Flowers is deeply interested.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, pastor, rejoices over a recent successful and great revival in our Danville Church. Rev. McKindie Loving, of Statesville, was the evangelist. The meetings lasted two weeks and grew in interest throughout. The church was greatly awakened, some fifty or more being received into fellowship and the spiritual life of the community was quickened.

Here is a line of wisdom and good sense from a very reliable source: "Wait a week to buy something you think you want. Then buy for use rather than for appearance or luxury value." If all of us will take that advice and learn to live by it, this time of financial stringency will have helped wonderfully in establishing in us a mighty good habit and a rule to live by.

"I haven't as much to live on as I had before the depression, but I have just as much to live for. My friends and neighbors are as near and dear to me as ever, and I am finding this experience not a catastrophe, but a challenge. The crisis and the crash came, but we have courage and character left." Now there is philosophical faith for you.

Why not get your Sunday School, Church or Missionary Society interested in the "coin card?" These cards have ten pockets made to hold a dime. By denying ourselves a dime each week for ten weeks, we fill the card and, presto, a dollar for giving the Gospel of our Lord to those who are not blessed as we are with its life and they afford an opportunity and an invitation to help the cause of our Lord, through Missions, now while that cause needs help so much.

Elon College community welcomes back to Elon as residents and neighbors, Dr. E. L. Moffitt and family. They reside in the house occupied by Dr. W. A. Harper. Dr. Moffitt is a former president of Elon College, and is at present chairman of the Board of Trustees of the College. He is now in the insurance business, with offices in Asheboro and Burlington, and a business in Burlington. The people of our village and college are happy at the return among us of this esteemed neighbor and good citizen.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, N. C., who furnishes copy for the first page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, has been confined to his bed from illness for the past ten days, and his physician advises that he remain in bed and have absolute rest and relaxation for some days to come. He is slowly improving and we hope for his speedy recovery. This human frame of ours can only stand so much work, so much mental and nervous strain, and when our energies lead us too far, nature calls a halt.

One of our churches, whose missionary offering has increased rather than decreased this year over last year in spite of the fact that many of its members are out of employment, writes as follows: "You have no conception of what these offerings entail—the sacrifice, the personal privation, the love of Christ being the contributing factor thereto. Our people, like all the rest, are facing real poverty and privation, yet they 'carry on' for Christ. These things should be of tremendous encouragement to us in this great undertaking for God. I know that time and time again I have been tempted to cut down on my mission giving—and I give more than any one else in my church, which is stated only for the glory of God, and I have realized that such temptation was of the devil—knowing, too, that like 'priest like people.' That folks just won't go any further than you are willing to lead them. There is only one answer to the failure of the missionary program in churches, it is the lack of interest on the part of the ministry."

This note in a letter from Dr. A. D. Woodworth, one of our veteran and most beloved missionaries in Japan, reveals a fact that should be taken home to our own hearts, since all nations find war burdensome and the most costly way of settling any question: "Japan is feeling deeply the burden of the war and the financial stringency. When the government offered bonds to finance the war, the people who had money drew it from the banks and bought bonds so that there is not so much money for circulation and the banks have not so much to carry on with. The papers state that in spite of this financial move, there is still a deficit of five hundred million yen ($250,000,000.00). Remembering that Japan proper is less than the size of Texas by about a hundred thousand square miles, that is some deficit, the national debt at the present time being about six billion yen ($3,000,000,000). I feel like the militarists have dragged the country into a deep hole. In the Shanghai matter the Chinese feel that they have held their own and can do it again. As I see it, Japan cannot continue the war because of a lack of money. Her foreign trade is at a standstill, that with China being diminished by 51 per cent."

Mr. Hermon Eldredge, associate editor, in his "Christian Points of View," in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, says: "We hear of one pastor who suggested to his people on Easter Sunday that the local church is in great need of funds, but if they feel like it, they should help out on the Mission offering. Do we wonder that such an appeal gets little results?" Doubtless that news reached Mr. Eldredge from some pastor here in the South where our Convention and Conferences and churches have agreed to take an Easter offering for Missions. Of one thing we are sure, and this is as inevitable as fate. The pastor who said that to his people will find the local church even in greater need of funds than at present if his people felt as he did about Missions. There are pastors who are afraid to touch the Mission problem because their own salaries have not been paid. And one big reason why their salaries are not paid is because they are more concerned in their salaries than they are in advancing the kingdom of their Lord through a consecrated effort to make him known to the unfortunate and to those who do not know him at home and abroad. A non-missionary church is always a non-paying church, and the best way to get a church to be a paying church is to get it to be missionary-minded, to be willing to deny, not for the sake of themselves, but for the sake of their Lord. Was it Phillips Brooks, or another of equal experience and wisdom who, when the pastor of a church far behind with the pastor's salary and other local needs, asked him what he would do in such a situation, replied, "Go back to your church and preach on Missions until your church becomes missionary-minded, until your people have a fervor and zeal for giving the gospel to others, and they will then pay off their local needs and the pastor's salary, too."

THE WELLONS MEMORIAL.

The contract has been let for the granite memorial to be erected at the grave of the late "Uncle" (J. W.) Wellons, of blessed name and memory. The Palmer Stone Works, of Albemarle, N. C., who erected the O'Kelley Memorial on the Elon College campus, has the contract, and promises to have the beautiful granite complete and erected at a very early date. They are giving us a regular $500.00 job for $450.00, thus bringing the price down to within $35.00 of the amount of hand. Does any SUN reader wish to contribute? If so, send your donation to Mrs. Luther E. Carlton, Treasures, Paces, Va. Mrs. Carlton and her husband are making a cash donation of $75.00. Who will help with a donation? We want to pay cash for the job.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

JUPITER, FLORIDA. A new Scout Troop has been organized with seventeen boys from the Congregational and Methodist Churches, with Rev. Frederick Held, Congregational pastor, as Scoutmaster. It is sponsored by the Community Men's Club, of which Mr. Held has been elected president for the second year.

REV. EDWARD M. NOYES, D. D., has completed another successful season as pastor of the Tourist Church at Seabreeze, and left for his home at Newton Centre, Mass., April 25th. The Tourist Church has invited him to return next season. The superintendent of the church school is Rev. L. A. Pierson, a retired Presbyterian minister.

WINTER PARK, FLORIDA. Recently the Congregational Church gave a dinner to the members of the choir at the Perrydell Tea Room in Orlando. Besides the pastor, Dr. C. A. Vincent, and Mrs. Vincent, there were thirty members present. A jolly time was enjoyed. The Woman's Union of the church held its monthly missionary meeting, Tuesday, April 12th. Mrs. J. D. Randall, of Orlando, told of her recent trip to South Africa, and her visit to the schools and hospitals of the American Board at Johannesburg.

"THE CONFIDENT EXPECTATION," is the title of a sermon preached on Easter Sunday by Rev. J. Delman Kuykendall, D. D., pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church in Coconut Grove, Fla. This sermon has been published by the church, and is a fine presentation of the assurance of immortality. Another pamphlet published is entitled "The Church in a Garden," the story of Plymouth Church, and is a reprint of an article by Guy S. Cunliffe, which appeared in The Miami Herald. This church is a gem of rare beauty in its semi-tropical setting.

"A PHILOSOPHY OF LIFE THAT WORKS," is the title of a pamphlet published by the Student Volunteer Movement and written by Walter H. Judd, M. D., a young missionary of the American Board in China. It is a very strong and fine pamphlet to put in the hands of young people—or old ones, for that matter. It was an address delivered before the Student Volunteer Movement Conference in Buffalo. Of this man and his speech one reporter wrote as follows: "Iridescent with humor and creative love, he went right into the inner chambers of our life in the first few minutes. We, too, began to realize with him that all peoples are essentially alike, that we stand or fall together, that the only solution of the problem lies in persons, and that it is the way of love that works. When would it have been possible in the last generation for one to have been so self-revealing without being self-conscious, and when could one have overcome the inhibitions which barred the way to such free traffic in the things of the spirit?"

ST. PETERSBURG CALLS ASSISTANT.

The church at St. Petersburg, Fla., which recently voted to call Dr. Charles H. Beale to return as acting minister for another season, has recently called as assistant pastor, Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke, of Stillman Valley, Ill. Mr. Gedcke graduated from Chicago Seminary two years ago, and was then ordained and has for two years been in his present pastorate. He comes highly recommended, especially by President Palmer of the Seminary. He begins his service at St. Petersburg at once and will be in full charge of the work during the summer months.

This church recently had a fine meeting of all the members of the choir, the ushers, trustees, deacons and heads of departments, at a hotel dinner. The gathering was marked by a fine spirit of unity and enthusiasm.

NEW MEMBERS.

The Easter season brought additions to many churches. The writer has heard from a few of the pastors with regard to the accessions. At Lake Helen, Fla., Dr. Arthur G. Lyon welcomed twenty-four into church membership, all on confession of faith and three of them were baptized. He reports that several whole families united, nine of the new members being young people. Three infants were baptized. At Ormond, Fla., Rev. George D. Owen received ten new members and there were also ten christenings. At Holly Hill, Dr. Lewis H. Keller received three from his Instruction Class. The class had other members, and in order further to prepare the young people a Junior Church has been organized, with a membership limited to twenty-five. At Palm City, Rev. James E. Parker reports one addition to the church on confession, coming from the pastor's class. Rev. O. H. Denney, of North Miami, reports that he has received ten from his Scout Troop into church membership. We do not know that they were received at Easter time, but it is worth recording and is a testimony of the fine leadership not only of the pastor, but of Earl Henshaw, the Scoutmaster.

CHAIN OF MISSIONARY ASSEMBLIES.

By LEE VROOMAN.

The depression in Florida does not include missions. The world-wide enterprises of the church were on the front pages of the daily newspapers of the state through January and February of this year. They were presented before colleges, high schools, and junior schools with student bodies ranging upward to two thousand young people; they were the theme of the weekly meetings of the luncheon clubs; they were discussed at noon gatherings of women; the story was told before park forums, mass meetings in auditoriums, and the regular Sunday congregations. Many people became so interested that they paid a dollar to attend a regular course on missions running mornings and afternoons during a series of days.

How was it possible to focus the attention of a State on the work of Christ in all lands? The reply is—a few personalities with a vision, plus the cooperation of the Protestant churches of the leading cities.

The Florida Chain of Missionary Assemblies was promoted by the women's church organizations of nine communities. For the last three years the leaders in a number of large centers have asked the church people to support them in a city-wide program presenting missions. The speakers have come from the leading denominations, and have represented the various mission areas, both home and foreign.

The program is operated somewhat like a Chau-tauqua. This year, we began in Miami. When things were well under way, some of the faculty departed to get the meetings started in Palm Beach, and so on. The leaders made from two to five addresses a day, covering the churches, schools, and all sorts of clubs, as well as the regular Assembly meetings. Most of the newspapers both printed liberal advance notices and covered the addresses.

The result was to put missions in the forefront of the consciousness of the entire community. Through the press, the message was carried to most of the people in the peninsula. As a result of last year's campaign, one church doubled its giving. In another city the leaders of the churches acquired a solidarity which was worth all that the meetings cost.

The impact of the Missionary Assemblies is cumulative. Where they have been held for a number of years the imagination of the people has been gripped increasingly. One could feel a marked difference between a city where we were pioneering for the first time, another place where it was the second year, and the communities where the program has been established for three years or more.

To bring fifteen speakers to a distant corner of the country such as Florida, and then to send them all over the State, is an expensive matter, not to mention local bills, and yet the dollar registration fees, together with the evening collections and a few individual contributions, covered the costs. The mission boards contributed the time of the speakers, but there was no other expense.

Under a proper leadership, a similar cooperative program could be duplicated in other sections of the country. In Florida it has been largely due to the imagination and executive ability of two women—Mrs. H. W. Peabody and Miss B. L. Woodford. Missions are on the map in Florida—and the same result can be attained elsewhere.—Reprinted from the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

YOUNG PEOPLES' RALLIES.

Two fine Young People's Rallies were held in Florida recently under the direction of Miss Coghill, Extension Worker. The first one held at Jupiter on Friday evening, April 1st, was largely attended by young people from the four Congregational Churches in that area: Lake Worth, West Palm Beach, Jupiter and Palm City. After a fellowship supper together the following program was given. Worship, conducted by the Palm City young people; welcome by Karma Bassett, of the local society, with response by the president of each visiting society, reporting on activities of the past year. Announcements of Camp Immokalee and the young people's evening of the State Conference were made by Miss Coghill. Betty Held played a violin solo. The address of the evening was made by Rev. Frank Addison, of West Palm Beach, and closed with an interesting discussion on interests of youth today. Following the program games and songs were led by Rev. Frederick Held and Jerry Jacobs.

The Sanford Rally was held on Friday evening, April 8th, for young people of the Sanford, Winter Park, Orange City and Lake Helen Congregational Churches. The program began with a social hour conducted by the local young people, followed by a picnic supper with yells and songs. The address of the evening was made by Rev. Arthur G. Lyons, of Lake Helen.

Whatever else may be scarce, opportunities for doing good are not so. Open doors to helpful service can always be found, and the wisest man is he who makes these possibilities count for the most.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

GOD AND THE PHILOSOPHERS.

A contemporary religious journal, undenominational and, on that account, claiming to be "modern and liberal," is giving its readers what seems to be a rather strange performance. It has invited three men known as philosophers to discuss "The Existence of God." The journal in apologizing to its readers for putting on this performance argues that "truth cannot suffer from the most critical investigation;" and so of the three philosophers (?) debating, only one believes in a personal God, the God of Christianity. The second claims to believe in the existence of a being worthy of devotion, but does not believe that He is a personal being. The third does not believe that there is a God at all. So here is a triangular debate about the existence of God. It is useless to say that nothing will come of the debate, except help to strengthen the disbelief in the minds of many who were already disbelieving.

From the foundation of the world up to this good hour, the existence of God has never been proven by logic, debate, argument. There isn't any logic strong enough to carry the burden of such proof. In all literature there has never been a line written to improve upon the first line of the Bible: "In the beginning God created." There isn't any logic there; there isn't any argument there; there isn't any convincing reason there. God created the hand that wrote those words, the scroll on which they were written, the mind that conceived them, and the soul that inspired the Truth.

"Truth cannot suffer from the most critical investigation." Neither can a rose whose existence, with its freshness and fragrance no one can deny, and yet when the teacher of botany gets through displaying that rose to his class, picking its petals and all the rest of it to pieces to prove its origin, development and growth, he hasn't a rose. He hasn't anything by which he can explain either the line of life that developed from the seed to the bush that bore the rose, nor to explain how the dormant life in the seed has the power of coming to be a blossom of fragrance. He may explain in a way its life, but he certainly can't explain the power and the possibility of it. It is too late in the world's history to talk about the existence of a personal God. We cannot quite comprehend why a journal calling itself religious should wish to parade on its pages the wrangling and the prattling of fools. The ablest philosopher this scribe ever heard, in our day, declared before his pupils in Harvard University, "that the Bible was right in saying 'The fool hath said in his heart there is no God,' for nobody but a fool would say it or could say it." Either we must think of roses and dogwood blossoms, flowers and fruit-trees, of all hues and colors, the stars of the heavens, the solid earth, the sun and the moon and all the rest creating themselves, and then placing themselves in orderly process, and carrying on the several functions of themselves, or we must think of an Intelligent Mind who could conceive them, a living Soul that could breathe life into them, and a hand of infinite skill and wisdom that could form and fashion them and an infinite Personality that could guide and govern them.

Those who have believed in a personal God have shaped institutions, governments, civilizations that are orderly, constructive, helpful. The non-believers have not yet constructed anything, not even a scaffold on which a single building is safe for human habitation, and they are still wrangling and giving to the world the display of their folly.

The reasoning of this independent journal spreads before its readers not truth but folly, not even the facts of sound philosophy, for no philosophy can be sound unless it has solid basis and footing. Of the readers of this journal, we presume there are many pastors in charge of churches. We wonder if they will invite into their pulpits atheists and non-believers so that their congregations on the Sabbath may hear "both sides" and thus get at the truth? That, indeed, would be a spectacle. There may be a place where irreligion, disbelief in God, and the philosophy of fools may be displayed, but we hardly think the pulpit may be exhibited. The world of our day needs the comforting assurance that God is, and in order for the human mind to conceive His existence as one who cares and loves and saves, it must think of Him as a Person, as a real existing Personality. For it is impossible for the human mind to conceive of "an existence" raised even to nth power which it may fall down and worship. We cannot worship principles, influences, existences. We can only adore, worship, praise One whom we believe and feel can hear, can comprehend our infirmities, share our burdens and sorrows and know our needs. And the highest being known to the human mind, and the noblest conception, is personality. J. O. A.

WHENCE CONFIDENCE.

Confidence has been struck down, and industry is prostrate. The economist was not far wrong when he said ten per cent of business is carried on by sight, ninety per cent by faith. And so the reason why the wheels of industry and enterprise revolve so slowly now is because the driving power of confidence is wanting—faith is lacking. Our country lost confidence in the ability of other countries to pay, and so foreign securities shrunk and our banks which held these foreign securities, many of them, closed their doors. A lack of confidence in other people locked up our money and brought dismay and discomfort to our homes and hearts.

The Kingdom of our Lord is being built solely on faith, and that is why men and women of the Kingdom have confidence and press forward. "We," says Paul, "walk by faith; we are confident." Or as the modern version has it, "We have courage." The inspired writer is thus teaching us that which we realize in experience, viz: That when we walk by faith, and as we walk by faith, we are confident, we have courage. The kingdom of heaven faileth not. It is built not on sight, but on faith, and faith looks onward into the future, and upward to Him who is able. Our salvation of body and soul depends upon faith. All the powers of the Son of God avail us little or nothing unless we believe—have faith. "And he did not many works there because of their unbelief." All things are possible to him that believeth. And our belief must be fixed and secure in three directions: First, in God. Second, in our fellow-man. Third, in ourselves.

Such a belief gives confidence, produces courage. "We walk by faith," therefore, "we have courage." Out of faith comes a courage that cannot be conquered. People, not a few, began ten years ago to lose faith in God. "Humanism," a mild name for atheism, sprang up like a blight, and swept the intellectual horizon, saying "Humanity is God; we believe in human beings; there is no higher being than humanity." Then we began to lose faith in human beings, in one another. Faith went down.

Before confidence is restored, before courage is begotten, before hope is renewed, we have got to get back to a firm, fixed, abiding faith in God. "We walk by faith and," declares an inspired writer (I. Peter 1:9) "the end of your faith is even the salvation of your souls." The need of the hour is faith. The pulpits need to proclaim faith. The Sunday School and the day school need to teach faith, and all of us need to practice faith, until we shall be able to say with Paul, "We walk by faith, not by sight; we have courage," or confidence. Confidence, courage, salvation will be restored when we recover our faith. J. O. A.

A CHURCH PAPER.

There are many things that enter into the value of a church paper. The area it covers, the subjects it treats, the persons it represents, and the appeal it makes to members of the church. Even newspapers are measured by these conditions. Metropolitan papers are, in a large sense, local in the large cities where they are published. The average reader prefers his own local paper; and only a few persons in any small center subscribe for the great city dailies. The average person is local in his geography and in his reading of papers. A church paper published in a great city and edited by great writers cannot reach, and cannot interest the average church; it reaches and interests church leaders and thus through them the church membership. There is much difference between a great religious paper and a real church paper. Geography has much to do with people in their personal and religious contacts.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has a greater appeal to members of a village or country church than it would have if printed in New York City and edited by great shut-in scholars. Personal touch counts in print as well as in visits. If the reader knows the writer it increases his interest in what is written. That is why more ministers and more laymen should write for THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Subjects familiar to readers, and writers known to them, increase interest for the average subscriber and reader. Dr. Burnett said a common fact, when asked if he read the Herald of Gospel Liberty. He replied by saying, "If there is anything in it that I have written, I do." If anything is in THE SUN about a local Missionary Society, the women in that church will want to read the paper. All men are more or less local and personal in their feelings and attitudes, and a nearby paper will reach more people than a far-off paper. The Southern Christian Convention covers an area large enough for a live church paper. The Conferences, local churches, pastors and members in the Southern Christian Convention should rally to the support of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and increase its subscription list and readers.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGES.

It is time for denominational colleges to stop limping between their choices, to avow their fundamental Christianity, disregard the requirements of standardizing agencies and the pressure of the huge universities, and go their own way, according to Dr. Harold McAfee Robinson of the Presbyterian Board of Christian Education in an address before the Council of Church Boards of Education.

"If the Christian colleges cannot remain Christian in the sense that they use every resource of and at the same time be accredited by standardizing agencies, and compete with huge universities which have no inescapable, organic concern for a Christian view of the world and the Christian experience and vocation of youth, then is it not time for Christian colleges to set up their own standards, control their own curricula, and go their own way?" asked Dr. Robinson. "Is it not better to be accredited by Christ as Christian than be accredited by the standardizing agencies as high class but be rejected by Christ as being behind and beside his purpose in the world?"

"If the church cannot finance and man colleges that seek above every worldly advantage to be distinctively Christian, making culture the servant of Christ, then the church is without function in a world where intellectual integrity must be maintained. But the church has financed such colleges in the past, and will finance such colleges in the future. When the denominational colleges decide the church will decide."

In advising church boards of education of ways in which they might serve these denominational institutions most effectively, Dr. Robinson made a number of specific suggestions. He emphasized the necessity of insisting that there is an intellectual problem of the first magnitude involved in the relationship between education and religion.

"Give the colleges technical assistance in the development of a total curriculum which shall be distinctively Christian in that it is so arranged that every impact of the curriculum on experience is made in the light of the Christian view of the world and of the Christian vocation!" he urged. "If the curriculum of a Christian college is not different in its desired outcomes and its procedures from the curriculum of an institution which is indifferent to Christianity, what is the justification for the existence of a so-called Christian college?"—Exchange.

We should live and pray for the same thing. We pray against the world, but live in it. We pray against pride and ambition, but nurture them all the day long; against appetite, but pamper it; against temptation, but brave it. This is in fact, an insult upon God, and acting as if we thought we could impose upon Him.—Exchange.

ON THE BUILDING OF BRIDGES.

By ROBERT T. KERLIN.

In the long, long march to the Country Entrancing,
Stretch plains, rise plateaus, roll ridges:
Each man to his task in the brave host advancing—
Mine be the building of bridges.

—Old Ballad.

Some thirty years ago I chanced to be living in Liberty, Missouri, and my duties called me frequently to Kansas City, which spread out on the hills just beyond the Missouri River. Two or three times every week I crossed the river by train on the Rock Island road.

One summer I observed that workmen were engaged in what seemed to be repairs upon the bridge. On inquiry I learned that they were not repairing the old bridge as I supposed but were building a new one. "What! building a new bridge, and trains crossing every day?" "That is exactly what they are doing." And so it was. A new bridge on the old piers was taking the place of the old.

In some months the bridge was finished. There it stood, new—every steel shaft and girder, every rod, every bolt of it, was new. And—here is the wonder of it—not a train but had crossed on schedule time!

How had it been done? In the answer to that question lies the point of this article. And that answer is in a sentence: The building of the new bridge had kept pace with the destruction of the old.

For thirty years this engineering feat has been present in my thoughts. It has constantly suggested to me what could be done in social rebuilding, had we only the skilled social engineers.

When our old institutions give unmistakable signs of decay and are becoming dangerous, like decayed bridges, could we not, without a halt in the business of government, supersede them with social structures that should meet the strain of new burdens and the demands of new times? If the mind of the youth of the nation, in our public schools, our colleges and our universities, were as constantly incited to social achievement as to the achievement of money-making careers we might be able at the present time to give a different account of ourselves. It seems that Russia by social planning and social enthusiasm is able to do so. It would not hurt our nation if for a time it became fanatical for social renovation, with the intention of securing the good and abundant life for all its citizens.

To be definite and bring a specific adventure as a challenge to the reader's mind: Could we as a people build a bridge from the present capitalistic system across the chasm to the mildly Utopian city of Socialism; as the Rock Island company built its bridge—without halting traffic?

But a practically-minded listener will object: "Not so fast. Men don't build bridges over the streams they do not wish to cross. They build bridges only to places to which they wish to travel. Who said we were ready to trek?" There must then be proposed a social scheme that is more desirable than the present one, to induce practically-minded men to construct this bridge. Let us look for a moment then at what sort of country should lie beyond the river, what sort of a city should stand at the other end of the bridge.

In the first place—and this is about all that needs to be said here—it should truly and in very fact be a commonwealth. We are trying to live in so-called commonwealths in which the common wealth—lands, forests, mines, rivers (for power), and such natural resources—is being grabbed, only a little less ruthlessly than in the days of the robber barons, by a greedy barbarian tribe of go-getters. Hence, instead of a real commonwealth we have a plutocracy; plenty and poverty close neighbors. This cut-throat competitive capitalism—. Here our genial-minded listener good-naturedly interrupts, "We have heard enough of that. We all know the tune. Go ahead and tell us about your commonwealth. Bring it down out of the clouds. Declare its principle, unfold its constitution."

I answer: "That has been done in book after book, pamphlet after pamphlet. It is asking too much, I protest, to demand it here in ten sentences. I will provide a reading list, if you are interested. But this much can be said: The society that must supersede this will be based on Christian principles. Its constitution, in brief—don't be too impatient, my friend; for everything else has failed: your system based on mammonism has collapsed—its constitution, I say, will be nothing else but the Sermon on the Mount formulated into Articles."

"The early Christians' communism—which failed." Not so simple quite; but in that spirit and with that principle. And I am not sure about the failure. Of course, it came to an end, but that is different from failure. Read again those words, Acts 4:32-35:

"And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common."

"And with great power gave the apostles' witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all."

"Neither was there any among them that lacked for as many as were possessors of land or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need."

Note particularly these words: "And with great power gave the apostles their witness . . . and great grace was upon them all."

There was a connection between that communism and that power and that grace.

Grace and power can hardly—though all things are possible with God—belong to the best-intentioned believer in a cut-throat society based on money-getting and exploitation of one's fellow-men for the sake of money; and that is an exact description of our present capitalistic system.

"But the building of the bridge—can it be done peaceably? Can it be done without social convulsions that might result in anarchy for a time? Can this bridge be built as the Rock Island railroad bridge was built?"

On the repetition of the question another speaker joined the discussion. For we were in the smoking compartment of a Pullman, on which we were riding through the greatest insults civilized man has flung into the face of God—the coal-mine towns of West Virginia. The interlocutor was a bushy-headed, stocky young fellow with glowing black eyes. He might have been named Blatonsky, Graigilunis, Bitonti, or some such outlandish name of ominous sound. He turned upon me with this, brandishing a towel as he spoke:

"That is just what we are doing, brother, without the people, even intelligent people—like you—knowing it." His look was benignant, and I took no offense, but opened my eyes and did not stop my ears. The road was clear and he went forward with vigor:

"Look at the property owned by your city, your State, your national government: schools, roads, forest-lands—why begin to enumerate? Look at the activities of the people in their collective capacity. How many people do you suppose are employed by the Federal Government to transact the common business? How many by your State government? How many by your city? Extend this work until you have the telegraph and telephone operated as the postoffice is; until the rail-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Christian Church was founded at Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., in 1794, the motion having been offered by Rev. Rice Haggard.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN was established by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr in 1844. The Southern Christian Convention was organized at Union Chapel, Alamance County, N. C., in 1856. Foreign Missions in 1887. Elon College was founded by the Southern Christian Convention in 1890. The Christian Orphanage was founded at Elon College in 1905, and opened its doors as a Home for Orphan Children in 1907.

The Christian Church, as a denomination, is 138 years old; THE CHRISTIAN SUN, 88 years old; the Southern Christian Convention, 76 years old; Elon College, 42 years old; and the Orphanage, 25 years old.

The Christian Church occupies a unique and historic position among denominations in the Protestant world, and is in harmony with the common thought and expression of all denominations. All denominations think and speak in terms of Christian life, Christian faith, and Christian obligations. It is the only name that is common and it should not be changed or modified. It expresses the relation of the church to Jesus Christ, who is the head of the church. Regeneration makes the newborn soul a Christian and, if the behavior becomes anything else, it is by an intellectual choice. This name is the only name that can possibly unite all denominations and all believers. It is not our church, but His church.

The Southern Christian Convention in session in Burlington, N. C., April 26-29, will have many important questions for decision; but it must not surrender its historic and legal name and institutions.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the Convention, Missions, Elon College, and the Christian Orphanage not only have claims upon the Convention, but the Convention has assumed obligations of support that cannot be neglected without blame. In this day, THE CHRISTIAN SUN is essential to the information necessary for growth and official relations of educational and missionary contacts. We are members one of another and we need to know what others think and what they are doing. The church paper is the medium through which church information is distributed and by which activity is inspired. Imagine a church without a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN in the congregation, no idea of Elon College, and the successful ministers who have gone out from it within the last forty years, and have never heard of nor contributed to the Christian Orphanage during the twenty years of its great work, and then try to think of that church as a live church in the work of the Kingdom.

No pastor does his full duty unless he urges the support of these institutions without whose help his work could not prosper, in helping the Kingdom in the salvation of souls.

The church, through THE SUN, the Convention, the College, the Orphanage, Missions and the Sunday School can carry out the commission of Jesus in sending out his disciples to make disciples of all nations.

W. W. STALEY.

Young man, my advice to you is that you cultivate an acquaintance with, and a firm belief in, the Holy Scriptures. This is to your certain interest.—Benjamin Franklin,

AT THE PRAYER MEETING.

Perhaps forty years ago a splendid pleasure boat went out from Chicago with four hundred passengers on a picnic excursion. In their enjoyment some of them danced, they ate, they drank, they smoked and played cards, and some made love to one another. But a fearful storm suddenly arose. The rudder was broken and the boat drifted to the shore a wreck. But the wind was so strong and the waves so high that no boat could be launched to rescue the passengers. Believe it or not, there was a strong man on shore who swam out to the boat and brought back one passenger. He went again and again until he was exhausted. Then rising up he went again and again until he had rescued twenty-three. So great were his exertions that afterwards he became an invalid for life. Of the passengers who were saved, how many returned to give him thanks? Not one. Why? Because they did not appreciate the greatness of their safety, and they did not appreciate the devotion and the great risk which allowed them to go to their homes in peace. Of the other passengers, it is said that their dead bodies were picked up on the shore the next day.

Of the ten lepers whom Jesus healed, only one returned to give thanks, and in wonder Jesus asks, "And where are the nine?" Tell me, is it not a fact that the most common sin which people commit against their fellowmen is the sin of covetousness? And the most common sin which men commit against the Almighty, the sin of unthankfulness? In II. Timothy 3:2, where Paul mentions the common sins of the last days, he says of the people, "Unthankful, unholy."

In my French Bible, I noticed in the 103rd Psalm where our English version says, "And forget not all his benefits." The French says, "And forget not one of his benefits." The French seems to me to be stronger than the English. It may be easy to say, "Remember all the people of Japan." It is another thing to say, "And don't forget one of them."

William M. Evarts was considered by some people a great lawyer and statesman of his day. One time he made a statement that he had reached a point where he no longer wanted to deal with individuals, but with the people in large groups. We remember that some of the finest work of our Lord was done with individuals such as with the woman at the well and with Nicodemus. It was in his heart not to forget one of the millions of the human race, even to remembering unworthy people such as you and me. So should we be in regard to the unspeakable mercies of God, not forget one of them and to appreciate them at their face value.

It was a Jew who said to a Christian, "If I believed what you say you do, I would go out on the street and shout the glad tidings at the top of my voice, and nothing but death could stop me."

In one of D. L. Moody's sermons he says that if a man has only a little milk in his bucket, he is in no danger of spilling a drop. But if his bucket is full, it is bound to spill. Perhaps some of us would have known that if he had not said it. Is it that we have so little religion as not to appreciate what we have, that we seem so lukewarm and unthankful.

When I first came to Japan an address was delivered in Tsukiji in which the pastor told of a Christian in his church, a poor man, but tremendously appreciative of the gifts of God. He was a hallelujah Christian. When the pastor talked of the love of God this man could not restrain his hallelujah. If it was the forgiveness of sin, hallelujah. If it was about the precious blood, hallelujah. This man once visited the home of the pastor, and the pastor, being busy for a few minutes, gave him a book on physical geography, thinking that surely in that he would find no occasion for shouting hallelujah. But in a few minutes he was shouting hallelujah as usual. So the pastor said to him, "What did you find in that dry book to make you so glad?"

"I have found," said the visitor, "that the ocean is five miles deep. And the Bible says that God has buried our sins in the depths of the sea, where he can never find them any more. Hallelujah!"

May we not in our prayers and testimonies tonight magnify the great goodness and mercy of the Saviour, who loved us and gave himself for us. I have a vivid recollection of the prayer-meetings I attended when I was a small boy at the little red brick church in the country where the aged fathers and mothers in Israel gave their testimony with the tears streaming down their cheeks, recounting one by one the ways in which God had been good to them. May it be with us daily that in our lives we may so live as not to forget one of the benefits which God has so richly bestowed upon us.

AN AFTER-EASTER MEDITATION.

It is the aftermath of Easter, but the Christian world is still visualizing the scene. After the storm of life and the agony of the cross, Jesus sleeping in the tomb, God the Father, expecting the resurrection. And through these silent hours one soul keep vigil, too. Notwithstanding the sorrow of it all, there was an expectant hope, for some remembered that he had said "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up." Then up from the grave he arose triumphant over all. No longer the despised Nazarine, but now the King of Glory. And as He stands at the door of our hearts and knocks shall we not bid Him enter, not as a guest, but as one who came to rule and reign.

Mary Magdalene, not knowing to whom she was speaking, said, "Sir, they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." Then Jesus said, "Mary!" She turned and said, "Rabboni." And in the exultation of that recognition darkness fled like chaff before the wind, while sorrow and sighing folded their wings and quietly stole away. For He has indeed risen and ascended into Heaven, where He sitteth at the right hand of God the Father, from whence He shall come to judge the living and the dead. So come quickly.

A UNITED PENTECOST ANNIVERSARY OBSERVANCE.

Pentecost each year occurs fifty days after Easter. It is the anniversary of the birthday of the church and of the special advent of the Holy Spirit. This year Pentecost comes on May 15th.

The first Christian Pentecost changed things. On this day the new power, promised by Jesus when he said, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you," was experienced. The timid became bold; the discouraged became aggressive and the disbelieving were gripped by unshakable convictions. The record says, "with great power gave the apostles their witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus."

Christianity began its militant march across the centuries on this day and it should be remembered that this beginning was in the same city where Christ was crucified. It was here and on this day that the disciples started to carry out the great commission for world evangelization which their Lord had recently given them. This commission from him was to them a divine imperative. Their King had spoken.

This day was the birthday of the church. Simon Peter preached the first sermon after the resurrection, on Pentecost. The multitude cried out, "What shall we do?" Three thousand of them accepted Christ, taking their stand with the 120. It was a day of vindication and victory.

Pentecost gave the disciples a new sky. They experienced new horizons and far-reaching visions. They were through with the little and the inconsequential. Henceforth theirs was to be a world mission and the following of a world Christ.

Pentecost was a day of unity for they were "all together, in one place." Following the crucifixion, when the cross ran through their hopes and dreams like a plowshare, they were scattered. Now they are brought together in an unbroken fellowship and cemented into a Christian Brotherhood. The prayer of Jesus for the unity of his disciples was here realized.

How observe Pentecost? There are many ways but a few suggestions may be in order just here. The period leading up to this great day may well be characterized by a new concern for church attendance. Many churches are falling down at this point in their work. On the first Pentecost and the days preceding they met together. There was a fellowship and a oneness that was beautiful. There is no revival that the church needs more these days than a genuine revival of church attendance. The average congregation has about 35 per cent. of its resident membership attending each Sunday. It is not only a pleasure and a privilege to worship with others, but it is a duty. The most expensive piece of furniture in any church is an empty pew. Why not try on May 15th—Pentecost Sunday—to have every resident member of the church present for the services?

The days leading up to Pentecost should be days of evangelistic effort. Failure to add new members to the church on Pentecost is a greater failure than not to have additions to the church on Easter. The first Christian Pentecost was a day of great evangelism. If the Church would keep the anniversary appropriately then the day should be characterized by evangelistic results. Read the second chapter of Acts again. Note the preacher and his evangelistic preaching. Note the inquiry of the multitude and the preacher's answer. A faithful observance of Pentecost will help to bring back the evangelistic fervor and spirit that was present on the first Pentecost. Just as the evangelistic results were predicted upon personal and group preparation nineteen hundred years ago, so now. Evangelistic results do not just happen. Somebody must work, pray preach and win.

Again, the emphasis should be place these days on the spiritual preparation of the church preceding this coming Pentecost. The Upper Room in Jerusalem and the daily gathering of the 120 together for prayer and fellowship is part of the reason for the power and the results of the first Pentecost. To ask the members of the churches to practice daily devotions and offer to them suggestions on how this may be done would bring surprising results. Many are anxious to be led in this matter.

Some ministers and congregations may want to make much of the ten days preceding Pentecost. The weekly prayer meeting programs may well center themselves about the thought of Pentecost. A room may be prepared and set apart for prayer and meditation in the church building. If the church in not already open daily, plan to keep the building open for those who care to come in to "rest and pray awhile."

It is hoped that every Protestant Church throughout the nation will fittingly observe Pentecost on May 15th. By special decoration of the church worship auditorium, by appropriate hymns, Scripture and sermon, and by evangelistic results, let the day be observed everywhere. By making this significant day one of great church attendance on the part of every resident member and by a worthy evangelistic ingathering, the anniversary may be one of the greatest experience in the history of any congregation. Let us go on to Pentecost, May 15th, in the spirit and passion of the first Pentecost.

A KING WHO WAS A SAINT.

When we read history we discover that more sinners than saints have sat on thrones. Once France had a saint for a king. He reigned during the very stormy years of the thirteenth century, and was a true lover of peace and a peacemaker. His courtiers used to remonstrate that he should give so much time to devotions. In good nature he replied: "If I spent twice as much time in dice playing and drink none would rebuke me." He would not agree that a kingdom suffered because its ruler prayed. Luther, it is said, when very busy, spent double time in prayer. The name of this king of France was Louis. His name is chiefly connected with the Crusades. He became ill, at the age of thirty and was near death. One of the watchers by his bed thought he was dead and drew a cover over his face. His mother refused to believe he was dead and uncovered his face. The king faintly asked for a crucifix. In that hour of weakness Louis had "taken the cross." As he recovered, his mother tried to dissuade him, and the Bishop of Paris suggested that his vow made in a weak moment was not binding. "You think I was not myself," he said. "Here is my cross, take it," and he put it into the hands of the Bishop. "Now you will not say I am not in my senses. Give back my cross to me, for before God I declare that food shall not pass my lips till I am marked again with the holy sign." He paid his vow. This is ancient news, but it is good news.

True humility bows lower as prosperity rises higher.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Jesus, how futile our following if it be not all the way! Halting is losing. We may test the footing and circumnavigate the steeps, but Golgotha may not be lost to view, nor its enactment unrealized. Thou, blessed Lord, didst not seek to escape from the rugged climb. It was the Father's will to bring thee to the pinnacle of divine power, and we thank thee that in thy victory is our sufficiency for gaining the summit of eternal light. To thy name be praise forever. Amen.

THE MISSIONARY RALLIES.

The women of our churches who are in the missionary societies are undaunted. In the last three weeks they have met in their District Rallies—ten of them: three last week, three the week before, four the week prior to that. In these ten district missionary meetings over 1,200 (estimated) of our women have met and spent the day, giving and seeking information and inspiration for Missions, the spiritual task of the church. Some of the groups were not largely attended, but every group manifested the deepest and most abiding concern for and interest in the work that the local societies were doing. One is perfectly safe in saying that the Missionary Rallies this year have been the best attended, the most enthusiastic, and the most interesting of any previous year.

Last Tuesday, the Lee-Chatham District met at Sanford. All deplored the illness of the superintendent, Mrs. R. L. Ross, from an attack of pneumonia which prevented her attendance. But prior to her illness, she had wrought well, and those appointed by her for parts on the program were present and a most wholesome and happy day was spent in the Sanford Christian Church. Five societies were represented. There were special musical numbers. Mrs. McFarland, the temporary superintendent, presided with grace and efficiency, and the local society entertained the body with splendid courtesy and abundant hospitality.

The Rally of the Randolph District was at Shiloh Church, and though the attendance was small, at no place did we find closer attention, more enthusiasm and deeper interest in the cause of Missions. Six churches were represented. A full day was spent and much light was obtained on the many questions coming before the Missionary Societies, and the women present showed the deepest concern for the welfare of their societies and the work. The superintendent, Mrs. G. Ed. York, could not be present, but her place was ably filled by Mrs. I. H. Faust, and various items of the program were discussed with intelligence and enthusiasm. It was a great day for Missions at Shiloh, and the women present, from expressions of many, returned to their homes more determined than ever to help put over the missionary program. This was the only Rally we attended at which there were no pastors of the district present. In this case the pastors were the losers, as it would have done their hearts good to see and hear the women in their intelligent discussion of the vital problems of Missions and the Kingdom.

The Rally of the Durham-Wake District was in the Raleigh Church, April 22nd. Mrs. R. M. Rothgeb, who had been on short notice requested to act as superintendent and presiding officer, carried intelligent enthusiasm into the work of the day and certainly encouraged all present by the fine spirit manifested and the deep desire evidenced for the work of Missions, both in the societies and in the church. The meeting was deeply interesting, conducted with great intelligence, while the fellowship of the day, as well as the addresses and discussions, were wholesome and delightful. Mrs. Rothgeb and her associates feel that there is much work to be done in this District, in interesting so many of the churches of the district that do not now have Missionary Societies, and they feel that efforts must be made this year not only to encourage the societies that now obtain, but to organize societies in churches that do not have them.

The Rallies this year are real One-Day Schools of Missions, have proven their weight and worth, and have shown beyond all question or doubt that they are worth more than all the efforts put together in their behalf, and cannot be dispensed with without great loss in interest and power to the Mission cause.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Sec'y.

COIN CARDS AND THE DOLLAR PLAN.

An extra dollar from every member and friend, young and old, of the Congregational and Christian Churches during May has been asked in order to balance the missionary budget.

To make the giving easy, coin cards with places for ten dimes have been furnished to churches in all States for distribution to members, attendants and supporters, to Sunday School pupils and to young people.

A thousand coin cards were requested by Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, noted radio minister, for the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., of which he is pastor. Requests for a thousand or more have been received by the united denomination's Commission on Missions from other large churches while lesser numbers have been asked for by smaller churches down to the tiniest rural churches, the weakest city missions and the most remote parishes in the Rocky Mountains.

The Rev. Dr. Walter H. Rollins, superintendent of the churches in New York State, is chairman of the Dollar Plan Committee.

It is pointed out that what a dollar can do depends upon "the company it keeps," and that ten dimes saved from sodas, movies and candy will in the aggregate with other dollars, be equivalent of widely extended helpfulness in religious ministry, medical service and schooling in the places where Christianity is little known.

The presentation of the coin cards filled with dimes or with a folded dollar bill is to be a feature in the programs of the annual State conferences which meet in May. The cards from each church are to be brought to the platform by a delegate and a consecration service held for the united offering.

The regular contributions for the missionary work decreased $459,000, or 16 per cent, last year as compared with the year before, and a further decline of 11 per cent is reported for the first quarter of this year. Salaries have been reduced, foreign missionaries on furlough in this country have had their stay indefinitely extended, pensions have been trimmed, certain mission stations in this country and abroad have been left unmanned and budgets have been cut everywhere.

The receipts from the Dollar Plan will be used to help maintain the mission work on the present reduced basis and to meet outstanding deficits due to the recent rapid shrinkage of regular contributions.

The mission boards of the Congregational and Christian Churches are the oldest in America, dating back to societies organized in the New England States in the latter part of the 18th century. In the mission work today is engaged a total staff of 8,000.

"Words are carriers, taking us far
With poem, legend or story,
Words are pictures, painting us scenes
Famous with beauty's glory.
Words show us men and women, whose lives
Delight and inspire our achieving
Until we are lifted to noble deeds
Finer than our believing."

—Lena Waldo Deed.

For last month, you remember, we had the first program from the little booklet entitled "India Today," by Genevieve Sargeant Phillips, and what an interesting program it did make. For this month we are to have a poster meeting, and this is one that can be developed into a very unique program. The chief device suggested for this meeting is a poster display. The posters should be prepared in advance and the people to present them should become familiar with them and the comment regarding each one. The quotation may be pasted on the back of each poster and read off as it is held up, allowing sufficient time for the audience to read the poster first. Display them in a conspicuous manner all during the meeting.

The booklet with the suggestions for posters and all material for the programs may be secured from the Commission on Missions, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., for 10c.

Till Mother says they may.
The lambs that skip in meadows sweet
Can't use their nimble, cunning feet
Till Mother shows the way.

Our Father for His creatures cares,
And all His world His dear love shares;
We and our brothers.
So truly God His children knew
That when the world's first cold winds blew
He gave them Mothers.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Glen Raven, N. C.

YOUNG PEOPLE SPEAK AT FORUM.

Young people representing the local Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches, were the speakers at the regular Sunday Evening Forum, at the Ft. Myers Church on a recent Sunday evening. It was attended by one of the largest crowds present for any Forum held in the church this winter, and great interest was manifested by the scores of questions asked by the audience following the talks.

Sidney Davis, speaking for the Methodist Church, stated his belief that denominationalism is not necessary or good for the Protestant Church, and that he did not think Jesus held to such a belief. He also said more effective work would be done "if there were only one Protestant Church because denominations make no difference with young people."

Miss Flora Furren, Presbyterian representative, described the church as an organization "great enough to solve the problems of the world."

Miss Dorothy Allen, Congregationalist, asked for a better understanding between adults and young people, in solving the problems of the church.

PATTIE LEE COGHILL.

GOODNESS AND HIGH JUMPS.

A certain boy known to Dr. Campbell Morgan used to come into his mother's kitchen with a whoop and a flourish, and take jumping leaps over the kitchen table, as one outlet for boyish energy and high spirits.

One day he was received into church membership and on reaching home he indulged in his usual table leap. His mother, however, rebuked him, suggesting that church membership should make a difference and that in future it would be more seemly to refrain from table jumping. On hearing that verdict, he probably—boy-like—wished he had never joined the church.

In the past that spirit has alienated lots of young folks. Goodness has too often seemed to veto the natural and legitimate outlets for youthful energy. So emphatic has that attitude been that in the minds of many the very mention of "goodness" suggests vetoes and prohibitions. To become religious is supposed to involve the surrender of any hope of ever having a good time or of sharing the activities and games of youth. The unnamed fear at the back of the mind, keeping many a youth from any open and definite confession of discipleship, is that religion is mainly a repression. On becoming a church member, so many things, they fear, will be forbidden—not only evil things but healthful and wholesome ones.

A story is told of a Frenchman outside Exeter Hall, London, in the days when the hall was a center of all sorts of religious and philanthropic gatherings. The visitor was greatly interested in the ribbons that people attending the meetings wore, and he asked the significance of them. The wearer of a blue ribbon, it was explained, did not drink; a blue and white ribbon signified abstinence from both tobacco and alcohol. Greatly amused, the Frenchman exclaimed: "Ah, you are the funniest people. If I wore a piece of ribbon for all the vices I do not practice, you would see no coat at all."

Perhaps that is partly what Jesus meant when he denied entrance to the Kingdom to those whose righteousness did not exceed that of the scribe and Pharisee. What stands out in the goodness of Jesus is its positive character. Virtue with him is not abstinence but action. Jesus completely broke with the current ideas and standards of goodness, and with him it became a heroism, something very unconventional and rather revolutionary.

He did not play for safety. He lived dangerously, and the Japanese general was right when after reading the gospels for the first time and being asked what quality in Jesus impressed him most deeply, replied, "His bravery."

Christianity is an expression of something, rather than a repression. It is not the enemy of games and high jumps or any healthy human activity. With youth the only religious approach that has the slightest chance is one that emphasizes expression, that encourages and inspires and guides the activities of boys and girls.

VIRGINIA ENDEAVORERS TO MEET.

The Christian Endeavorers of Virginia are planning for a most wonderful time at Christian Temple in Norfolk when the State Convention meets there. The Endeavorgram says:

"Norfolk will give you the warmest welcome you have ever had. Those who attended the last State Convention in that city remember what a wonderful time was shown the Endeavorers. The warm hospitality of the Endeavorers with the many things of interest in that section should cause you to put everything aside and come to Norfolk June 23, 24, 25, 26, 1932."

SOME VISIONS ARE LOST.

"Be still and know." How can God give us visions when life is hurrying at a precipitate rate? I have stood in the National Gallery and seen people gallop round the chamber and glance at twelve of Turner's paintings in the space of five minutes. Surely we might say to such, "Be still and know Turner! Gaze quietly at one little bit of cloud, or at a ray of the drifting moon. Be still, and know Turner!" But God has difficulty in getting us still. That is perhaps why he has sometimes employed the ministry of dreams. Men have had "visions in the night." In the daytime I have a divine visitor in the shape of some worthy thought, or noble impulse, or hallowed suggestion, but I am in such feverish haste that I do not heed it, and pass along. I do not "turn aside to see this great sight," and so I lose the heavenly vision. If I would know more of God I must relax the strain and moderate the pace. I must be still.—J. H. Jowett.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

HOW MAY WE WORK FOR WORLD GOOD WILL?

MAY 15, 1932.

Acts 10:34, 35.

THOUGHTS ON THE TOPIC.

Discovering our community.—Most of us live such lives of smug complacency within our own small circle that we are not aware of the friction and lack of good will in our community. A close study would probably reveal resentment in the hearts of the poorer classes because of their unequal opportunities; hatred in the hearts of members of other races resulting from discrimination against them; and a feeling of injustice on the part of the farmer toward "town folks."

Adventures in community friendship.—A study of your community will no doubt reveal many families who are hungry for neighbors and numbers of young people who have few friends and very little social and recreational life. There is a marvelous opportunity for Christian Endeavorers to become real friends and neighbors to these people. Visit them in their homes, invite them to yours, and give them a share in your recreational life.

A community center.—Many small cities and towns have community centers, but far too often the privileges and opportunities of such centers belong largely to the class that needs them least. We want to tell you of a community center that is a center of good will.

"In Spartanburg, S. C., one society of Methodist women, conscious of the growing need of some place for children of working mothers, established a small community center. They secured a frame house on a small plot of ground and employed a trained Negro worker. Kindergarten work for pre-school children has been started. The yard has been turned into a playground for boys and girls which is used on holidays and after school hours. A small library has been opened. The young people use the center for social gatherings in the evenings and Sundays. The support comes from the Missionary Society and the Negroes." (Quoted from "The Church Woman Answers," Commission on Interracial Cooperation.)

Children of other races, as well as Negroes, could be provided for in such a community center. —Cultivating community brotherhood.—Christian Endeavor Societies may make an outstanding contribution to their community by sponsoring activities that bring the entire community together and break down the barriers of race and class. Some of the enterprises that may do this are community sings, play festivals, and exhibits to which people of all races bring objects from their native lands. If the community is large and there are several racial groups, it is a fine thing to have each group entertain one evening with songs, stories, and folk games from their land. Young people of all churches may co-operate in these projects and thus promote good will between churches.

Sharing with far-away neighbors.—Support of an orphan or a student in one of our mission schools is always productive of good will. Correspondence with young people of other races and nations is another pathway to world friendship.

Good will and our national government.—Every Christian citizen should demand that those in political power strive to establish policies of government that will contribute to international good will.

ESAU SELLS HIS BIRTHRIGHT.

LESSON VI—MAY 8, 1932.

LESSON TEXT: Genesis 25:27-34.

GOLDEN TEXT: Every man that striveth in the the games exerciseth self-control in all things.—
I. Corinthians 9:25.

Introduction.

There are some problems with which every age must grapple. Some of the personal and social difficulties seem to be universal. The literature, that treats these universal perplexities and difficulties of life, is of permanent worth. Through the ages it endures and is cherished and used to throw its light upon man's pathway. Today we study an old, old story of twin brothers. And in that story are found stubborn facts of human nature and social relations. Some items of the story are of passing interest but others are enduring as the race of mortals.

Twin Brothers.

Esau and Jacob are twin brothers in the land of Canaan. "Esau was a skillful hunter, a man of the field." He was the first-born and liked to roam in the hunt. Jacob was a quiet man dwelling in tents." He was a supplanter—apparently he was quiet and easy to get along with, but he was crafty and designing. The brothers are kindred of the closest type, but are wide apart in their characteristics.

Two Tribes.

In the story each brother stands for a tribe of people. Esau represents the tribe residing in Canaan when the other tribe arrived as emigrants. Naturally the Esau tribe had possession of the land and felt that it belonged to them. Jacob represents the shrewd tribe that came in later and wished to disposses their predecessor tribe. Eventually the shrewd and crafty tribe got control. The practical scheming proved itself justifiable because it worked and paid rich rewards. The characteristics of these two brothers or tribes offer much of practical worth in evaluating life in its relations today.

Self-Gratification.

Every one has strong impulses to gratify the immediate sensual desires. This gives pleasure. Man then tends to repeat the experience and so habit grows. It tends to get worse and worse, until the habit controls the will and self. Then self-control is gone. Intemperance or lack of self-control is the result. Persistent self-gratification plunges the individual into intemperance or indulgence. Self-control is gone and ruin lies ahead. Every age in the history of the race shows the damages and disasters of the various forms of intemperance.

Selling One's Birthright.

When the individual loses the governor of self-control and becomes the victim of his own enlarged desire, he has sold his birthright to a well-balanced social usefulness. The highest degrees of personal sensual pleasure do not return the highest degree of social welfare. Life becomes warped. Desires that may have a worthy place in life become consuming and drive the person to the wreck and ruin of his own life. The individual loses balance and society is endangered.

Intemperate Appetite.

Esau must have his mess of pottage. He had so indulged his appetite that one meal when he wanted it badly was worth more than a rich birthright. How true this story is. The indulged sensual appetites pervert the values of life. Many a youth has sold a rich birthright for a few moments of pleasure. Many a girl has bartered her virtue for the lure of momentary desire. The physical desires all have their rightful places, but what havoc is wrought when there is no self-control. Uncontrolled sensual appetites warp the values of life until man seems to have no reason. He becomes a fool.

Wiley Supplanters.

There are always plenty of Jacobs who stand ready to strike the shrewd bargains with the weak, or with the strong in their moments of weakness. Who would think that the strong hunter, Esau, could be so weak in the presence of his wiley brother and the fragrance of his savory meat. Some people are always watching to gain advantage in the times of weakness. The world needs fewer intriguing Jacobs, and fewer intemperate Esaus. It needs a race of men and women who are trained in self-control. Men too true to sell the valuable for the worthless. And men too fair and upright to drive shrewd bargains in the moments of a brother's weakness.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Friends and members of the Union Christian Church, Union Ridge, N. C., are invited to be present for the Memorial Services of the church the second Sunday in May.

The Pastor, Dr. P. H. Fleming, will be assisted in the 11:00 o'clock services by Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, and in the 2:00 o'clock services by Dr. Hurst, of Elon College. Dinner will be served on the grounds.

All of the members of the church are urged to attend the regular quarterly meeting to be held on Saturday before the second Sunday, at 2:00 o'clock.
J. G.

A CERTAIN CONGREGATIONAL MINISTER SAYS:

"There has been a heavy cut in our church budget. They didn't think they could pay all that was due on benevolences at the end of the year. I simply refused to take a penny more on salary until they did. It all went in. I got them to cut my salary twice, but succeeded in keeping the benevolence budget the same as for last year. It takes a bit of courage sometimes to face these trustees and make them want to throw you out. I hope our preachers will have courage to stand by our world-wide work, our greatest glory and hope. . . . What days these are! I told my people I considered these next six months as important as any in the last one hundred years. There is a great chance for the Church, if she dares, if she has the leadership and prophetic insight. How can a man tell preachers what they should know today? I guess the only way is to let Jesus tell all of us."—Missionary Herald.

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

MOTHER'S DAY THOUGHTS FOR WEEK.

MONDAY.

OUR MOST POTENT WORD.

"Honor thy Father and thy Mother that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."—Deut. 5:16.

"He that speaketh evil of his father or mother, let him die the death."—Matt. 15:4.

"Mother" is a most potent word. It means home-maker, humanities' minister of love, the soul of the family, the refinement of society, the tenderness of education, universal education. She knows how to whisper in sorrow, how to touch weakness without burdening it, how to keep the streams of life sweet, to live in obscurity and bring forth presidents, or sons of great importance to humanity. The future manhood of the country is going to be what she makes it. Motherhood shapes the destiny of nations. Whatever this destiny may turn out to be must be laid largely at her door. So far as it may be sweet and good, so far will it be righteous and blessed.

"A partnership with God is motherhood!

What strength, what purity, what self-control, What love, what wisdom should belong to her, Who helps God fashion an immortal soul."

Prayer—Our Father, who art in heaven, our thoughts on mother this day turn us to higher and nobler things. May we feel the inspiration of the Holy Spirit through the spirit of our good mothers, may we feel the touch of heaven's love and grant us to be inspired to live a life of which we shall not be ashamed. Amen.

TUESDAY.

MOTHER'S COMMISSION.

"Take this child away, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages."—Ex. 2:9.

We hear of a preacher's commission, but little of a mother's commission. She has a divine call also. If she is all that is implied in the above comment, there is no more important calling. When we put all mothers together they reach a far larger number than all the preachers.

Our text, it is true, is taken from pagan motherhood, but it must have been given of God, for God was shaping a man for his use in liberating the people.

A nice little story comes to us and is quoted here because it is so appropos: A woman known as a society woman, called on a neighbor of less social distinction. Intending to embarrass her by reference to her evident lack of literary attainment, she asked: "Mrs. B...., do you ever write any booklets?" "Yes," came the answer, "I am writing two right now. The title of one is John, and the title of the other is Mary, my two children."

As Paul spoke of the disciples of Christ, so we might say of mother, "Ye are our epistles, written upon our hearts, known and read of all men."

Prayer—Our Father and our God, we come to thee to pray for power, not only to rightly honor our mothers, but to bring up our own in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

MOTHER AND THE CROSS.

"When Jesus saw his mother . . . he saith, woman, behold thy son."—Jno. 19:26.

These are the words of Jesus spoken from the cross. By this the cross is a more emblematic symbol of motherhood than the flower. It reveals the motherhood, from the standpoint of the cross. He saw in his own mother the everlasting love of God. The fact of mother's sacrifices in life is an enactment of the cross in daily life. Like Jesus on the cross, she is the imperishable type of divine love.

How strange it is we overlook the virtues and deeds of mothers. It is not strange at all that the Roman Catholics should give the Virgin Mary so large a place in their worship as the next of kin of God. Were it possible for any other but Jesus to plead at the throne of God on behalf of God's children on earth, it would be the mother of Jesus, the Son of God.

Prayer—Dear Father, our God, we pray thee to forgive us all of our sins against our mothers. Imbue us with the spirit of thy Son, to see in our mother all that she means to us and to the world. May we ever honor her by a life of purity, that will not only bring honor to her name, but add happiness to own own lives. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A PICTURE OF MOTHER.

"Father did his best for us, but we were very poor. Christmas was the only season in the life of my boyhood home when candy had a real place in the picture. Life was a struggle—for that I am grateful now. I remember that as a small boy, whenever I was given candy, I carried it home. It was an event. What a great time I had dividing with the other children! I felt like a philanthropist!

"Mother always came first. I can see her now as she would receive it, and then invariably place it high on the clock shelf—to be given to one of us later. It is a lovely memory. It remains as a touch of the hand of her constant sacrifice. It suggests the beautiful words of Joaquin Miller:

"The greatest battle that ever was fought—

Shall I tell you where and when?

On the maps of the world you will find it not; It was fought by the mothers of men."

J. C. PENNEY.

FRIDAY.

THE HERITAGE OF A MOTHER'S FAITH.

"Having been reminded of the unfeigned faith that is in thee; which dwelt first in thy grandmother, Lois, and thy mother, Eunice."—II. Tim. 1:5.

Timothy's faith was occasion of great thanksgiving with Paul. It is significant that he attributes this faith to Timothy's ancestry, as far back as his maternal grandmother.

Faith in the fixed and reliable standards of the word of God, a wise and godly heritage, a good name is the greatest heritage that can be bestowed upon a child. It is "rather to be chosen than riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold."

Such a heritage does not come by laws of nature. What is known as the law of heredity is a mighty force in human life, and many characteristics, both physical and moral, are transmitted in this way. But not so with spiritual qualities that enter the soul. Children are not naturally religious because the mother has faith. This faith must be instilled in the child through the exercise of spiritual instruction and nurture in the religious development of the child. None of us can consecrate ourselves too much to such a bringing up of our children.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank thee for all the Godly mothers of the world. O God, help us to do our part in throwing forward into the oncoming generations a religious faith that is saving to the world. Amen.

SATURDAY.

NOBODY KNOWS.

Nobody knows the work it takes
To keep the home together;
Nobody knows of the steps it takes,
Nobody knows—but Mother.

Nobody listens to childish woes,
Which only kisses smother;
Nobody's pained by naughty blows,
Nobody—only Mother.

Nobody knows of the sleepless care
Bestowed on baby brother;
Nobody knows of the tender prayer,
Nobody—only Mother.

Nobody knows of the lessons taught
Of loving one another;
Nobody knows of the patience sought,
Nobody—only Mother.

Nobody knows of the anxious fears,
Lest darlings may not weather
The storms of life in after years,
Nobody—but Mother.

Nobody kneels at the throne above
To thank the heavenly Father
For the sweetest gift—Mother's love—
Nobody can but Mother.

—Selected.

SUNDAY.

MOTHER.

They laid her away in the afternoon,
She was and she is no more,
But the roses nod and the birds of June
Still sing at her cottage door.
And men and women go laughing by—
And this they will do when the greatest die.

But because she was, who is now no more,
There are numberless lovely things,
She planted the roses by the door,
And the tree where the robin sings.
And who can say that is the same
Old world which it was on the day she came?

Oh, busy and hurried the world goes on,
As it will when the greatest die;
And the few who mourn for the absent one
Are tempted to question why.
But the roses the sweet souls planted here
Still live and blossom from year to year.

—Edgar A. Guest.

DEPRESSION AND SPIRITUAL VALUES.

A friend of missions recently said: "I am interested in Christian stewardship as the only road I can see to a new economic order. Much of the wealth of America is in the hands of church members and certainly enough of it is in these hands to accomplish any purpose for God's Kingdom to which our hearts are set. There is nothing more certain than that the Kingdom of God can never come on this earth until the conscience of the church has been stirred on this matter of property and income. Never has there been a time when membership in a church dedicated to the establishment of the Kingdom of God among men has involved greater responsibilities or has been fraught with more difficulties both of thought and action."—Exchange.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

THE HEAVENS AND THE EARTH.

"In the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth."—Gen. 1:1.

There you have a great text just as it stands. "In the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth." But what a most wonderful text it is when we add to it all the texts written in the sacred Book until we come to that final one in Revelation 22:21, "The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen." My pastor friend in Urbana, Illinois, told me once that one of his seminary teachers said, "Never have two texts; it was like a circus rider riding with one foot on one horse and the other foot on another." However, that may be, to me taking these two texts together is like setting both feet firmly on the Solid Rock, "The Rock that is higher than I." I cannot understand the earth without Him who is in heaven, God; and I can no more understand heaven without Him who lived on earth, Jesus! Both heaven and earth are necessary. And God and Jesus are inseparable. Neither of two extreme views are best. One is held by the ascetic, who believes that the earth is evil and that salvation is to be obtained by the mortification of the flesh; the other is held by the materialist who believes that earth and earthly is all whether it be good or bad.

I. There are many attempts at explaining the material universe, and only an unwise man would throw them overboard without first trying to discover whatever light God has broken in upon the human mind. The Bible tells us that the "fool hath said in his heart there is no God," and we know also that only a fool would say that in his science there is no God. No longer do we quarrel with science, because when our heat of hate is done we cannot get away from the fact that science says two and two make four, or ice will float, or fire will burn, or that seed sown in the soil will germinate and grow and bring forth fruit. Only the unthinking will be scared away from God with the word science. It is a very homely, and honest, and sincere word. Science may be called simple, classified knowledge, and scientific research is simply looking for more knowledge to classify. In the light of that definition the classroom and the pulpit should go hand in hand; the Sacred Book, and the school book should point in the same direction, and they do.

There are some very wise words in the opening verses of Genesis. They give us quickly an account of the creation of the universe. Not all is said in that beautiful, poetic account concerning the world's creation; and far from all has been said by the laboratories of learning up until now. And when all is said I have an idea that we shall not need to laugh at Genesis, nor mock the simple faith of our mothers. We shall perhaps learn to know Genesis better, and love the Lord of our mothers more and more. Princeton Theological Seminary is considered a rather conservative teacher of the Bible, as well as the method and measure of right and holy living. On an adjoining campus is Princeton University which prides itself in having some of the foremost scientific thinkers of our modern learning in its faculty. The wisest of each were together one evening to speak on the first chapter of Genesis. They spoke at length, and when they were done one's conclusion was necessarily that the Sacred Scriptures and Science were like the Saviour and his disciples walking the selfsame road to Emmaus; the one, the revelation of God, and the others, learning all they could in spite of their doubts and perplexities as good students should.

The laboratories tell us of a proterozoic period of the earth more than a billion years ago; of the archeozoic age in which lived spineless creatures like jelly fish; of a paleozoic period in which lived vertebrates or fishes with bones; of a mesozoic era in which were added reptiles, or animals which could navigate both in water and on land; and then finally, the cenozoic period in which were added the mammals. The laboratory has read these things from the strata of the rock, and has dated them according to scientific processes. The beginning of the first period of rock they put back as far as a billion years or more, the beginning of the mammal, or cenozoic period, they place less than a million years ago! Noticeable is the fact that there were great periods of progressive development in the forming of our present earth. In Genesis we will notice likewise periods of creation, and they are called, in our English translation, "days." Perhaps the word "day" has prompted much of our perplexities. But even the word "day" has many meanings in our English dictionary. We talk of a working "day" of five hours, a laborer's "day" of eight hours, a farmer's "day" of fourteen hours in the summertime, of a clock's "day" of twenty-four hours, or the sun's "day" of twelve hours. Thus we have at least five lengths for our "day" already. Or we call a single minute of time "a day," as when a dog snatches a roast off the back porch and we remark "every dog has his 'day'"; or we finish a piece of work, taking perhaps not an hour, and we say, "We will finish this and call it a 'day'"; or we make, in another expression, the word "day" synonymous of thirty years or more, as "in his day and generation." Thus you see our "day" ranges from a single instant of time to a period of many years! And the same thing happens with the Hebrew word for "day." So you see we have perhaps jumped at conclusions when we say the Bible says the world was created in six twenty-four-hour days. Time is limitless with God, for "a thousand years is as one day, and a day is as a thousand years."

II. Again, how could we understand the space about us without God, for if time is limitless, space seems to be even more so. We have an earth a little more than 8,000 miles in diameter, a moon that is comparatively near the earth, a sun 93,000,000 miles distant, and the nearest star is 275,000 times as far away as the sun, or 20,000,000,000 miles away. Light travels 186,000 miles per second, and yet it takes 3½ years for light to reach us from the nearest star. It takes 500 years for the light to come from Orion. The Milky Way is a disk, and we are looking at the edge of it. We are told that that disk is 10,000 "light years" thick. Moreover, we are told that there are countless systems of other worlds in the universe, and that while we can see only between 3,000 and 4,000 stars, there are 1,600,000,000 already known! In other words, the space out there is limitless. How can you imagine the end of it, and when you come to the "end," what is beyond that? The beginning again! Looking on the limitlessness of space when I feel God back of it, I can but wonder how extensive is his love for us! "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the heavens showeth his handiwork."

III. "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" The records of the rocks indicate Pithecanthropus around 500,000 years ago, and our family is said to be about 25,000 years old, which is quite young compared to the figures back of geologic ages. If we had only the philosophy (Continued on page 14.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The weather has been pretty for the last ten days. The activities on the Orphanage farm have been from early morn until late at night. Mr. Wagner, who has charge of our farm, has had two tractors and two mule teams breaking and harrowing land for the entire week. It is just wonderful how much land they have broken in six days. We are expecting to put in a large acreage of beans for hay and also a large acreage of silo corn. Our farm is a fine asset to the Orphanage. We raise all the vegetables we use and always put up a lot of beans and tomatoes for winter and peaches when we can get them. The Orphanage killed thirty-two hogs this last season—about 9,700 lbs.—and while the weather was extremely warm for the winter season, we have been successful in keeping it, and so far have not found a piece that was spoiled.

Octagon soap wrappers have been coming in very nicely for the last week. We now have more than 20,000 on hand. We trust many will come in by the tenth of May. If we can get 75,000 we will purchase the refrigerator and collect the balance afterwards. Let every one who has some on hand mail them in at once. Help us to put this across. You will be happy. We will be happy, and we will all be happy.

The following articles of clothing have been sent in since our last report:

The Ladies' Aid Society, Dendron Christian Church, 11 dresses and 3 boys' suits.

Mrs. R. L. Baker, Newport News, Va., Ladies' Bible Class, Newport News Christian-Congregational Church, 2 quilts.

Ladies of Union Ridge Christian Church, hens, eggs, canned goods, meat and flour.

Mr. William Messick, Winston-Salem, N. C., 3 bushels oysters in shell.

Miss Evie Gross, Burlington, N. C., 17 hats.

Pamlico Guano Co., Washington, N. C., 10 bags fertilizer.

Robertson Chemical Co., Norfolk, Va., 20 bags fertilizer.

O. W. Hines, McLeansville, N. C., 3 bushels peas.

Circle No. 5, Woman's Missionary Society, Burlington, N. C., dresses, shirts, sweaters, pants.

Mrs. T. L. Fulcher, Norfolk, Va., boys' suits, pants, 20 dresses, bloomers, socks, etc.

The Ladies' Aid Society, Waverly Christian Church, 15 dresses, boy's packet, 1 pair ladies' shoes.

We are grateful, indeed for all the above contributions. It is so much help to us in this work.

of the materialist, we would say that our man is but a little higher than the anthropoid ape, but with God in our hearts, we say "He is but a little lower than the angels." It has been taught that man was created on October 26, 4,004 B. C. But nowhere in the Bible is it so stated. We have accused the Bible of something it did not say, and when we begin to find that such a thing was impossible, shall we begin at the same time to say the Bible is false. Only our poor understanding is limited, God is true. If we were but materialists only we would say man is made of certain earthly elements worth about 80c. But when we take heaven into our thinking as well as earth we say, "Now are ye the sons of God," and we realize that the mind of man has builded our great cities, lighted our darkened earth, navigated our seas, sailed our skies, sung our songs to our neighbors 10,000 miles away, erected places of learning and culture, developed ideas of brotherhood, and mercy, until we not only say "Now are ye the sons of God," but we may add, when looking upon the full measure of Jesus Christ, "and it doth not yet appear what ye shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." All earth and no heaven can never bring that about. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."

To sum up. Do you think then that the creation of this earth is marvelous? Do you think that the back-reaches of time are limitless? Do you think that the size of the universe is completely incomprehensible? And that standing in the awe of all this man is a little thing? Then add faith to your sight, add the spiritual to your material, add heaven to your earth, and realize that Jesus Christ came in the form of man, and that compared to him all these marvels pale into insignificance, for he says that the whole material universe is not to be compared in value to one human soul. And what may a man give in exchange for his soul? The man who forsakes Christian culture and worship, the man who burns out his little day scrapping for a few cents in money and a few acres of earth, and fails to invest in the finer, holier, eternal things, is striking "heaven" out of the first text of the Bible, and is rejecting the infinite glory of the last text of the Bible, which is: "May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you everyone. Amen."

I find it easier and easier to find contentment in the riches of the mind. Take from me all the so-called riches of the world and leave me imagination and I shall still be rich; but give me all the wealth of the world and take from me my imagination and you will plunge me deep into the bottomless pit of indescribable misery.—Unknown.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

MYSTICISERE AND DEMOCRACY IN THE ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By Rufus N. Jones. Harvard University Press. pp. 184. $2.00

This book shows that democracy in England and America owes its origin to religious seekers or mystics who found the true apostolic succession in the changed lives of those who had experienced direct knowledge with God. Again and again it has been asserted that democracy is a Christian doctrine. Here is a historical study by a painstaking scholar showing not only that democracy is a Christian doctrine, but that such democracy as we have arose in groups of honest Christian seekers in the 16th and 17th centuries. Those who think that Christianity merely reflects the ruling ideas of the times, but that it does not determine the ideas it embraces and promotes, will have another thought coming to them after reading this Noble Lecture for 1930-1931.

"YES, BUT." By Dean Willard L. Sperry. Harper & Brothers. pp. 185. $2.00.

Apologetics is bankrupt. The Church should close trying to bolster up an impossible world view and learn from science a new and more effective approach to life. Dean Sperry is not the type of man to apologize for anything or any belief. He faces his facts unabashed and draws the conclusions that appeal to him as unable, never afraid to strike a match anywhere in the universe. He is just as positive in dealing with Humanists as with Fundamentalists. His concluding chapter is especially provocative—"The Place of Jesus in His Own Religion." You won't agree with Dean Sperry and he will not be offended. He is a sincere seeker after the way of life and he wants you to be the same.

ON THE BUILDING OF BRIDGES.

roads and bus-lines and trolley-lines are operated as the public highways are; until the movies and radio are thought of as agencies of education and are maintained as our educational system is and as a part of it—extend such work and we shall have Socialism. Extend it to all major industries—mining, manufacturing, transportation—and we'll have planning and social engineering instead of chaos and an army of unemployed workers. And all will have plenty, for it will be distributed to all producers according to need."

The train had arrived at my station. I descended chuckling; for, though I had been told nothing new, some of the other fellows had, I was sure. And they would perhaps do some thinking in consequence.

"So," I murmured to myself, "this Pole, or Lithuanian, or whatever he may be, is a bridge-builder! He is an educator, whatever his trade. He surely understands the process. May his work prosper! For it is education that we need; and education is bridge-building."

Keyser, W. Va.

THE BOOK OF BOOKS.

Born in the East and clothed in Oriental form and imagery, the Bible walks the ways of all the world with familiar feet and enters land after land to find its own everywhere. It has learned to speak in hundreds of languages to the heart of man. It comes into the palace to tell the monarch that he is a servant of the Most High and into the cottage to assure the peasant that he is a son of God. Children listen to its stories with wonder and delight, and wise men ponder them as parables of life. It has a word of peace for the time of peril, a word of comfort for the time of calamity, a word of light for the hour of darkness. Its oracles are repeated in the assembly of the people, and its counsels whispered in the ear of the lonely. The wicked and the proud tremble at its warnings, but to the wounded and the penitent it has a mother's voice. The wilderness and the solitary place have been made glad by it, and the fire on the hearth has lit the reading of its well-worn pages. It has woven itself into our dearest dreams; so that love and friendship, sympathy and devotion, memory and hope, put on the beautiful garments of its treasured speech, breathing of frankincense and myrrh.—Selected.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

OBITUARIES.

SMITH.

Mrs. Nancy Eugenia Smith was born January 28, 1855, died March 15, 1932, age seventy-seven years, one month and sixteen days. On December 23, 1877, she was married to Mr. Smith, who died about twenty years ago. One son, Walter, died in early manhood. There are four surviving children as follows: Mrs. Annie S. Thomasson, Petersburg, Va., Mrs. George W. Noblin, Clarksville, Va., Mrs. H. M. Skelton, La Crosse, Va., and W. W. Smith, Hycos, Va.

Sister Smith joined Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., when young, and remained a faithful member until death. She, with her companion established a real Christian home in which grew up three daughters and two sons, whose lives for usefulness and Christian service are a continuous honor to their parents.

The deceased and her husband for a number of years were engaged in the hotel business. At different times they ran hotels at Jeffress Junction, La Crosse and after the death of the latter, Sister

Smith, with her daughter, Mollie, now Mrs. Noblin, operated a hotel at Clarksville, Va. About ten years ago she was compelled to retire from active work on account of her health. For several years her home was with her children, who were always devoted to her and did their full duty to make her comfortable and happy. While during my pastorate of twenty-five years at her church, she was too far away the greater portion of the time to attend, yet she was a liberal financial supporter and delighted in all progress of her church.

The funeral and burial were at Blue Stone Presbyterian Church near Clarksville, conducted by the writer and Rev. Mr. Kibler of the M. E. Church, pastor of her daughter, Mrs. Skelton of La Crosse, Va.

One who was a faithful companion, an unselfish, devoted mother and in whose

In all the world's history there has been social unrest, the poor surging upward in an attempt to get the good things of life. This urge is part of God's plan. Life is fluid, not static. It moves, does not stand still. It moves upward if it follows the divine guidance. Dam it back and you have unrest and uproar. The cause of social unrest is selfishness.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By DR. W. C. WICKER.

A Miracle.—

Recently a baby was born into an Indian family in Satara, India, but the Welfare Nurse from the Friendship Center was not called until the infant had arrived and, showing no signs of life, had been laid aside for burial, uncovered and neglected. The family wailed. The nurse arrived, found the wee thing and, upon examination, discovered no pulse but faint heart-beats. By means of artificial respiration and hot and cold douches, she revived the timid spark of life and handed over to an astonished family a "perfectly good baby."

Baltimore Repeals Blue Laws.—

On May 2nd, Baltimore, Md., by a majority of more than 83,000, voted to repeal its 200-year-old Sunday observance law, which contained among other prohibitions that of not allowing a man to kiss his wife on Sunday. The law which was wiped from the statute books had been in existence ever since the founding of the State by the Calverts. There were many things contained in the law to make us smile, but its repeal has laid wide open the State of Maryland to the many abuses which those who worship only the god of gold, may foist upon the State.

Elon College Needs Funds.—

Elon College needs the support of our constituency now as never before. There is immediate need for between $20,000 and $25,000. This is not a large sum, when it is remembered that there are over 30,000 people in the Southern Convention, but it is a most prohibitive amount unless all do their part. Won't you deny yourself of something that you have planned to buy, and give that amount to the College now? Then there is an attempt to put the support of the College on a permanent basis. This is through the recently launched "Dollar-a-Month Campaign. When you are called upon, won't you do your part? The church is depending upon you.

Girls and Recreation.—

Movies, dancing and automobiles constitute the chief recreation interests of girls between the ages of 16 and 18, if a survey recently made in a large Western city is typical of the entire country. Miss Ethel Bowers, expert on girls' problems, speaking before the Richmond (Va.) Community Recreation Association this week, challenged the various recreational activities to offer activities attractive enough to compete with them. Outgrowing the need for strenuous physical exercise, girls in their late teens demand constructive creative and social interests to supplant the destructive ones which are tendered so freely, declared Miss Bowers. She said that in supplant recreation, five elements must be considered. Physical, creative, social, mental and service phases must each have a part in a well-rounded recreation program.

The Soldiers' Bonus and Government Expense.—

The flare in Washington over the "soldier's bonus" calls attention anew to the tremendous sums spent by the War Veterans Bureau. From 1917 to February 29, 1932, Federal expenditures in behalf of World War Veterans amounted to $5,475,505,520.29. For the coming fiscal year the Veterans' Administration is allotted $1,072,064,527 out of approximately $4,113,000,000 carried in the budget. The agency in charge of the bureau now spends $10 for every $18 spent for all other purposes of government, including national defense, law enforcement, farm relief, public works, the support of the courts and the entire administrative overhead of ten departments and 29 independent offices. The budget of this agency for next year is 40 per cent more than the entire expenditure of the Federal Government for any peace-time year before the World War.

Finland's Spree.—

Finland has abandoned prohibition. Before the recent referendum wet leaders argued for repeal of dry laws because it would reduce drinking. But on the first day of legalized booze, Finlanders by the thousand stood in line for hours in a storm of sleet and rain awaiting their turn to get into the drinking places. The repeal of prohibition was to take away Finnish appetites for strong drink because when within easy reach the people wouldn't want it. But millions of gallons of the powerful vodka, whiskey and other hard liquors were shipped in in addition to local supplies for the reopening of the dramshops and all soon were exhausted. Finland has gone on a grand spree but the inevitable headache must follow and with it will come the wish that the country had held onto its prohibition law, the only tried and proven way of dealing with strong drink.—Capper's Weekly.

Is It Really Wise?—

Dr. Stephen S. Wise, in observing his twenty-fifth anniversary as rabbi of the Free Synagogue, New York City, said: "Without reservation or equivocation, I say now that this pulpit, while I stand in it will never give its support to war, to any war whatsoever, whether called just or unjust. Though I bore no arms, I gave the fullest measure of my private and public support to the United States and the allied nations in the World War. I will never do so again!" This is a fair sample of the wild statements which are being made by many extreme pacifists in this country today. Surely they cannot realize what such an attitude means. To give such comfort to the potential enemies of our country is certainly not the way to bring about peace. Rather does it tend to invite attack. And if maintained in time of war, it would be considered and dealt with as treason.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

The Convention at Burlington.—

The meeting of the Southern Christian Convention and of the first session of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches at Burlington, N. C., was a most delightful occasion for the various delegates and visitors. Some confusion was caused at times as to whether the Southern or Southeast Convention was in session. All of the routine business was transacted by the Southern Convention, which is to become, as soon as charter changes can be made, the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches. The inspirational work was under the auspices of the Southeast Convention. This body contains within its borders Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee and Florida. The other body, which is incorporated, includes all of the States except the last three named, and it is provided in the changes to be made in the original charter that these State Conferences shall be admitted on the same terms as obtain in the other States upon their signifying their desire to affiliate. It is hoped that they may not long delay their signification of this desire.

Committee of Worship Created.—

The Federal Council of Churches recently announced the personnel of its newly created Committee of Worship, the avowed purpose of which is "the securing of a deeper awareness of the presence of God in public worship." The Rev. Dr. Wilbur Thirkeld, a retired Bishop of the Methodist Church, will serve as chairman. Other members are: Rev. William Chalmers Covert (Presbyterian); Bishop G. D. Batdorf (U. B.); Rev. Ivan Lee Holt (M. E. South); Dr. R. F. Day (M. P.); Rev. Clarence H. Wilson (Congregational); Prof. Wilbur E. Saunders (Baptist); Prof. L. D. Reed (Lutheran); Rev. H. H. Lohans (Evangelical); Prof. Henry Strong Worcester (Reformed); Rev. H. F. Schlegel (Evangelical); Pres. Boothe C. Davis (Seventh Day Baptist); Bishop Robert Westley Peach (Reformed Episcopal); David W. Day (Quaker); Dr. D. B. Atkinson (Christian); Rev. C. H. Tobias (Colored M. E.); Bishop Reverdy Ransom (A. M. E.). Members-at-large are: Prof. Howard C. Robbins, Prof. George Walter Fiske, Rev. Fitzgerald S. Parker, Dean Luther A. Weigle, Rev. Dwight Bradley, Rev. F. L. Fagley, Prof. William Adams Brown, Rev. Oscar T. Olson, Rev. Philip S. Watters and Rev. Oliver Huckel.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. P. H. Fleming, of Burlington, N. C., recovered from a ten-days' illness in time to be in the Convention on the last day or two, for brief periods, and his many friends and associates were glad to greet him.

Dr. L. E. Smith was in Richmond on Monday of this week and spent the night in the home of the managing editor of THE SUN. He left for the College Tuesday afternoon. Dr. Smith has shouldered a tremendous task, but it can be greatly lightened by a united support.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, for eighteen years treasurer of the Southern Convention, was confined to his bed and could not attend the session last week. By vote, expressions of appreciation and interest in his welfare were expressed. Dr. Wicker is improving and hopes to be in full physical strength soon.

The Burlington Church measured up to its usual high standard of royal and abundant hospitality in entertaining the great Convention last week. The body was largely attended. There were many new faces, but all were made to feel at home and most heartily welcomed to all that Burlington had to offer.

Dr. William Moseley Brown, of Virginia Beach, former president of Atlantic University, a most eloquent and able preacher, as well as a great scholar and educator, has accepted the invitation to preach the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of Elon College, at 11:00 A. M., Sunday, May 22nd.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, Chattanooga, Tenn., Dr. Elisha King, Miami Beach, Fla., Dr. W. E. Kedzie, Chicago, Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, of Washington, Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, Nashville, Tenn., were among the outstanding leaders and speakers from our Congregational constituency in the Convention at Burlington last week.

His friends, who are many in the Convention, were delighted to see Bro. V. E. Kitchens, of Roanoke, Ala., in the Convention last week. Bro. Kitchens is a Convention "goer," and besides being an efficient and capable leader in his church and community is a beloved brother in the body to which he comes as delegate every two years.

On all sides there are expressions of gratification and satisfaction at the election of Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., president, who is to become the first president of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, Inc., when the charter for the present Southern Convention is so changed as to include as one, Congregationalists and Christians, in the various Conferences of the South.

Their many friends throughout the Convention were delighted to see and greet at Burlington last week three of the well-known and much beloved ministers from the far South, viz: Rev. J. D. Dollar, Lanett, Ala.; Rev. J. H. Dollar, La Grange, Ga.; Rev. G. H. Veazey, Roanoke, Ala. We have no more faithful or loyal ministers and certainly none more beloved than these three, who are doing great work in their fields of labor.

Dr. Frank G. Coffin, one of the co-moderators of the General Council of Congregational-Christian Churches, Columbus, Ohio, and for many years president of the American Christian Convention, was guest of the Convention at Burlington last week, and on Thursday, at 10:45 A. M., delivered a most thrilling and powerful address on "Practicing Christian Union." This address, by unanimous vote of the Convention, is to appear in full in THE CHRISTIAN SUN at an early date.

Dr. W. W. Staley filled the appointment for Dr. W. C. Wicker at Pleasant Grove the past week, officiating at the quarterly conference Saturday evening and preaching on Sunday morning. He preached for Rev. J. E. McCauley at the Richmond Church Sunday evening, and returned to Suffolk on Monday, having spent Sunday night at the home of Dr. P. J. Kernodle. Dr. Staley is beloved by all who know him, and he was heard with joy and profit at these services.

Miss Priscilla Chase, extension worker of the Congregational Board, Elon College, N. C., held the 11:00 o'clock services at Winston-Salem, N. C., Sunday, May 1st. In addition to her work for the former Congregational Board, she becomes by vote of the Woman's Convention, Burlington, last week, superintendent of Young People's Work of the Woman's Board of the Southern Convention. Miss Chase seems well-equipped for this task, having had not a little experience in working with young people and being very deeply interested in their welfare and progress.

There was general regret at the Convention last week that one of its beloved and honored members, Dr. P. J. Kernodle, of Richmond, Va., was too feeble at this time to be present. For many years Dr. Kernodle was secretary of the body, and for some years has been managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The Convention, by unanimous vote, expressed its appreciation of his faithful services in the past, and regret that he could not be present. The faithful wife, who has shared his labors and services through the years, was present and was officially recognized by the Convention.

Immediately after the resolution, prepared and introduced by Dr. I. W. Johnson, secretary of the Convention, Suffolk, Va., was unanimously adopted by the Convention, uniting in one fellowship the Congregational and Christian Churches of the South, and a hymn of praise had been sung, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, on behalf of the Suffolk Church, arose and invited the first session of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches to meet in the Suffolk Church, Tuesday before the first Sunday in May, 1934. The invitation was unanimously and enthusiastically accepted by the Convention.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, pastor of the church at Danville, Va., reports an evangelistic awakening in his church, resulting in the most remarkable achievements, eighty members being added to the church, seventy-five to the group of tithers, and the offerings increased since the meeting by $20.00 per Sunday, with a very large increase in attendance at prayer service. Such a meeting makes any pastor happy and brings new life to the church. At the end of the first six months of the present year, Bro. Sorrell reports over one hundred members received, and the treasury of the church has $444.00 on hand, with all bills paid.

The Southern Convention and members of the Advisory Board of the Southeast were delighted to have in the Convention at Burlington last week a dozen delegates and representatives from former Christian Conferences in Kentucky. These brethren had never looked in on a Southern Convention and they were anxious to see and learn what the Convention was and did. It was, indeed, a glad welcome that was extended them. They visited the College and the Orphanage at Elon, and were highly gratified at what they found and at the spirit of brotherly love that prevailed at the Convention and at the progress the Convention is making through its institutions and interests.

One of the happy events of the Convention at Burlington last week was the tea given at Elon College, from 5:00 to 6:00 P. M., Thursday, April 28th. Many in the Convention, especially of our former Congregational fellowship, had never visited the College, and some of our Christian constituency at the Convention had never before seen their institution. Many, indeed, were the expressions of wonder and delight at the splendid plant, the beautiful buildings and the thorough equipment of the institution. Mrs. Diehl, dean of women, was in charge of the tea and the social hour, and with becoming grace and dignity received and delighted the more than one hundred visitors who came as her guests and as guests of the College.

Dr. W. P. Minton, secretary of the American Board, who has been visiting and speaking the past two weeks in many of our churches of the South, rendered great service at the Convention last week in explaining many of the details which he seemed to have at finger-tips, in the matter of working out legal and business problems of union. His address on "Pioneering in Christian Union," on the second evening of the session was a most informative and timely utterance. Dr. Minton remained over to be with Rev. G. O. Lankford at Burlington, at 11:00 A. M., Sunday, May 1st, and with Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, at 7:30 P. M. Dr. Minton is one of us in the South and it is always a delight and a joy to have him in our homes and in our pulpits.

New Lebanon Church, of which Rev. J. L. Neese is pastor, has recently planted evergreens and other shrubbery about the door of the church, and a nice signboard in front of the church tells the name of the church and stands to welcome all who come. Then on the road as it comes into the highway the signboard is painted and is in evidence telling the name and pointing the hand to the church. One wonders why churches are so indifferent in making known, even by a modest marker, their names. One sees many churches by the highway in the course of a day, and wonders in vain as to the names or any information about the building or the place. We congratulate Brother Neese and his good people in doing the fitting and proper thing in seeking to make the church attractive, inviting and then telling the people what the name of the church is.

If any readers of THE SUN fail to see and read in this issue the "Churches' Loss of Power," by Dr. J. H. Dillard, they will certainly miss, in our own judgment, the best that THE SUN has to offer this week. Dr. Dillard is one of the outstanding educators of America, president of Jean's Foundation since 1907, also president of the John F. Slater Fund, and a member of the Southern Educational Board, distinguished author of many books, and a man who knows what he is writing about. This distinguished educator, acquainted as he is throughout the country with church and institutional life, says, "The churches seem to me to have lost power because they have surrendered. At least they have made terms with the ways of the world." This is worthy of consideration, and should have the consideration of every thoughtful reader. We trust every SUN reader, our pastors in particular, will avail themselves of this incisive and weighty article by our distinguished contributor, Dr. Dillard.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

THE DeJARNETTES of Soddy, Tenn., are a pastor and wife who have scarcely time to eat and sleep for the calls for service that press in upon them. The report of their activities for a single day make an absorbing narrative.

ROBBINS, TENNESSEE, was in the path of a recent cyclone. Although no lives were lost, people were seriously injured and much property was destroyed. Rev. and Mrs. George L. Day continue their fine helpfulness to the sick and financially distressed.

DUNCON'S CREEK, GEORGIA, entertained a group of Piedmont College people, our full-time Extension Worker in Georgia, and the pastor-at-large on Sunday, April 24th. They came without announcement. Sunday School was in session when they arrived. The church is miles from anything like a city, but a fine school under efficient leadership was evident by the large number present. The auditorium was nearly full of strong and vigorous worshippers of God. Strong men and women, young men women, and children. Doubtless such a crowd might be duplicated in several of our churches, but it seems worth while to note that such things are going on in our rural districts. Such a crowd is very encouraging and satisfying. The college girls sang, the pastor-at-large preached, and everybody worshiped God. The pastor, Rev. W. Carl Parker, announced that an all-day memorial service, an annual affair with these people, would take place Sunday, May 22nd, at which time five hundred people are expected to crowd and surround the building. From scenes like these our rural churches grow. Make them loved at home, revered abroad, so may the Kingdom grow.

A PROMOTIONAL AND INSPIRATIONAL TOUR of Georgia by the pastor-at-large is announced for May. The purposes are: 1. To promote the payment of the annual dues and the apportionment for Missions by monthly payments, the whole amount to be paid by December 15th. 2. The successful use of "The Dollar Plan." 3. To prepare the way for our S. S. S. people, who will begin their work in July. 4. To promote attendance at our "Piedmont Young People's Summer Conference," to be held at Piedmont College, Demorest, August 11th to 18th. 5. To acquaint our people with the progress of the merger, and to prepare them, so far as may be, for action at their annual Association meetings to be held this summer and fall. This will lead direct to our Georgia State Conference the last of October. 6. To give such inspiration and suggestions as may be possible to our various churches. The itinerary will include: Columbus, May 8th; New Light and Poplar Arbor Churches at Doerun, May 9th and 10th; Pearson, Union Hill, May 11th; Whitehall, Waycross, May 12th; Baxley, Friendship or Antioch, May 13th; Meansville, where he will deliver the graduating sermon for the High School Class, May 15th; The Rock, Bethany, May 16th; Crest, Hebron, May 17th; Columbus, for the ordination of Mr. David W. Shepherd, May 18th and 19th; Fredonia, Barnesville, May 20th; Woodbury, May 22nd; Atlanta, May 23rd; Cedartown, May 24th; Oxford, Sardis, May 25th; Bowman, Liberty, May 26th; Hoschton, Macedonia, May 27th, and New Trinity, near Lawrenceville, May 29th, for a great Fifth Sunday Fellowship meeting of the four churches of the Macedonia Parish.

CHATTANOOGA COMRADES ENJOYING COMRADESHIP.

When the Congregational Comrades of Chattanooga District met at Pilgrim Church, February 13th and 14th, they had the largest attendance to date and claimed the best meeting. It was a good meeting, in spite of rain, that cut into the well-laid plans for out-door activities. All of the churches except Grand View and Crossville, were represented and took their share in the program. This was to be expected, for the theme of the Conference was "Sharing." Pilgrim Church was the scene of the organization of the young people of the district, which took place at the State Association in the fall of 1930.

The spring meeting of the comrades was held at Pleasant Hill, April 16th and 17th. All the churches were represented with good delegations, which amounted to sixty-six, not counting the entertaining group. Two groups from Nashville joined us and contributed richly to the program and fellowship. The theme of this Conference was "Peace," and some stirring sessions were held. Many leaders presented the various phases of the peace problem and these presentations were followed by lively discussions. Some of the speakers were: Rev. Abram Nightingale, Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, Mrs. Morris, Mr. Arthur Swartz, Mr. Don West, Rev. A. J. DeJarnette, Dr. W. J. Campbell, Rev. E. E. White, and Dr. F. P. Ensminger. The young people from the churches of the fellowship entered into the discussions and shared splendidly in the various parts of the program. Everyone enjoyed the recreational periods led by Pilgrim Church and Soddy, good, get-acquainted hours. The devotional services conducted by Nashville, Daisy, and East Lake were most inspirational and fitting. It was very hard for the committee of Pleasant Hill people and leaders to decide which of the visiting groups contributed the most to the spirit of the Conference. The new banner, resplendent in purple and white, with the legend, "C. C. C. Comradeship," was finally awarded to Daisy Church.

We cannot praise too highly the splendid hospitality of Pleasant Hill Academy and people. It was no easy task to take in such a large delegation, but our hosts did it graciously. The efficiency of this group of young people studying at Pleasant Hill is remarkable. Most of the planning of meals, lodging and entertainment was done by the student group. The teachers and leaders who cooperated with them are due our sincere appreciation. It is interesting to note that the young people voted to send a copy of their resolutions on peace to the State Congressmen in Washington. Evidently our young people are not going to be satisfied with just talking about these important issues.

DR. COFFIN AT FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

Dr. Frank G. Coffin, of Columbus, Ohio, Co-Moderator of the General Council of Congregational-Christian Churches, was the guest of honor at the forty-ninth annual meeting of the Florida Congregational Conference. The Conference was honored by his presence and greatly appreciated his two splendid addresses. The first address closed the session on Saturday evening, the subject being "Youth and the Christian World." He was preceded by talks by three young people, including one by Rev. Gordon Brokenshire, the new pastor at Orange City. Dr. Coffin spoke on the subject, "What about this Rising Generation?" It was a sympathetic presentation of the problems faced by the young people, who were deeply impressed by his address.

Dr. Coffin's second address was the closing address of the Conference and was a fitting culmination of a great meeting. It was given on Sunday afternoon and the title was "The Religion for Our Day." A searching analysis of present conditions and constructive in its conclusions.

The other address of Sunday afternoon was given by Rev. Frank Atkinson, who has recently become pastor of the Union Church of West Palm Beach. Another address that made a deep impression upon the Conference was given by Dr. Charles H. Beale, pastor of the St. Petersburg Church, on the subject, "Aggressive Christianity." The worship services of the Conference were conducted by Dr. J. Delman Kuykendall, of Coconut Grove, whose general theme was "The Ritual of Reverence." The Conference sermon was delivered by Rev. Walter Metcalf, of Tampa.

One new feature of the Conference this year was a series of group discussion conferences, held Saturday afternoon and led by the chairmen of the various departments of the Conference—Evangelism, Missions, Social Service and Young People's Work.

Interesting phases of the Conference were the presence of the five workers at the West Tampa Mission, who were given a warm welcome as were also a troop of Boy Scouts from North Miami, who encamped near the church and shared in some of the young people's sessions. Mr. E. P. Branch was introduced to the Conference as one of the few laymen who had been Moderator, he having been Moderator just forty years before. Mr. Branch was at the last meeting of the General Council and has attended most of the Councils for many years.

Another interesting feature was the Fellowship Supper at which one hundred and sixty-five guests were present. It was a very delightful affair, and was served by the women of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Rev. Don G. Henshaw, of Coral Gables, was toastmaster. Dr. Lillian B. Fulton, the pastor of the entertaining church, gave an address of welcome, to which response was made by Dr. Clarence A. Vincent, of Winter Park. There were several other speakers. Mr. Robert G. Williams, of Lake Worth, was the Moderator, being the first layman in fourteen years to serve as Moderator. The newly elected Moderator is Rev. Walter Metcalf, of Tampa. The Assistant Moderator elected is Mr. Von Behren, of West Palm Beach. The Conference preacher for next year is Rev. George D. Owen and Rev. J. Bernard Root, of Sanford, was elected alternate. Rev. E. Richard Evans, of Key West, was elected scribe, and Rev. Orville D. Ullom, of Melbourne, assistant scribe. The Conference voted its approval of the merger with the Southeast Congregational-Christian Convention and elected twenty-two delegates.

The annual meeting of the Federation of Congregational women was held in connection with the State Conference, Mrs. Robert G. Williams is president and Mrs. H. C. Jones, secretary. These two were re-elected for the coming year. Mrs. H. J. Feeney, of Tampa, was elected treasurer to take the place of Miss Nettie E. Gault, of St. Petersburg. Miss Gault has served for eleven years, and during that time she has handled over 25,000 contributions from the Woman's Societies of the State for missionary and benevolent causes. Satisfactory reports were made from the various auxiliaries.

The local church made preparations which were almost perfect for the entertainment of the Conference, which was one of the largest attended Conferences ever held and all were enthusiastic.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CONVENTION.

The Southern Christian Convention met in its 30th biennial session with the Burlington Christian Church, Tuesday, April 26th, at 7:30 P. M. The Southern Convention is an incorporated body, having under its control and affiliated with it, subsidiary corporations. Dr. L. E. Smith is the president of the Convention and Dr. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., is its secretary. Meeting with the Southern Convention for the first time was also the united body, the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, unincorporated. Over this body, Dr. L. E. Smith presided as co-moderator with Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, Chattanooga, Tenn., and Dr. I. W. Johnson, secretary, with Dr. F. P. Ensminger, assistant secretary. The Convention of the Southeast covers more territory than that covered by the Southern Christian Convention, but of this unincorporated body the Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, was and is a constituent part.

The business of the Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, was conducted very much as in previous years with the exception that much time was given to discussion leading to the plan of merger and the union with our Congregational fellowship. In the Southern Convention there are institutions and enterprises which have grown up as constituent parts of the organization, and which the organization itself has been created to develop and conserve. On this account any step that the Southern Convention takes has to be taken to conserve, and in no way to impair, these institutions and enterprises. The Convention was seeking in all of its sessions to find a way to take care of the interests and enterprises of the two communions within the territory covered by the Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, and the Convention of the Southeast, unincorporated. Larger territory and an increased number of institutions and enterprises require naturally a larger and a more flexible organization and corporation than the present Southern Convention. The spirit, and really the outcome of deliberation of both bodies, was expressed in a resolution presented to the Southern Convention by Dr. I. W. Johnson, secretary, to the following effect:

"That we the Southern Christian Convention, are ready and willing to do anything reasonable and within our reach which will complete the merger of the two bodies, Congregational and Christian, as already voted in our national assemblies, and that we are ready to go forward along any lines that will conserve the institutions and enterprises of the present and lay the foundations for the development of institutions and enterprises looking toward the enlargement of the Kingdom of God."

These are not the exact words, but a condensation of the resolution presented by Dr. Johnson, and unanimously adopted, first by the Southern Christian Convention, and then most heartily and unanimously adopted in separate session by the Congregational Advisory Board of the Southeast, the name under which the Congregational Conferences of the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee and Kentucky were assembled and were at the same time holding their sessions. This Advisory Board of the Southeast, and the Southern Christian Convention constituted, as has been said, the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, unincorporated. The reader will thus see that there were assembled at Burlington last week three distinct organizations, viz: The Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, unincorporated, which, sitting as one body, was composed of two distinct bodies, to-wit, The Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, and the Congregational Advisory Board of the Southeast. These three bodies were working together to unify not only in name, but in practice, the interests and the efforts of all the institutions heretofore under the control and supervision of each body, whether incorporated or unincorporated. It was no small task, but the fellowship throughout was delightful, and the spirit of every meeting was one of the heartiest cooperation, each body seeking to carry out the command of Scripture, "In honor preferring one another." The outcome of all the deliberations was again expressed in a resolution by Dr. I. W. Johnson who, for twenty years, has been secretary of the Southern Christian Convention, and a member of its Executive Board, and, on that account, knows the detailed and legal requirements of an incorporated body as few others do. The resolution was:

"Resolved, first that the Southern Christian Convention make application for a change of its charter to read as follows: 'The Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, Inc.'"

This name will indicate the character of the body that is to succeed the Southern Christian Convention, and its charter, as indicated, will cover all the needs and requirements, not only of the institutions heretofore under the control of the Southern Convention, but those institutions and enterprises sponsored by and under the direction of the Congregational Advisory Board in the Southeast.

To this there was unanimous agreement, and the officers who were soon afterwards elected were the officers of the Southern Convention, as they now are and have been for the past two years, all of them to hold office until the charter is changed. And when the charter is so changed and the Southern Christian Convention is succeeded by The Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, Inc. (which change it is supposed can be made within ninety days), the following officers were elected to take charge:

President, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C.; first vice-president, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; second vice-president, Dr. G. Britton Clark, Charleston, S. C.; secretary, Dr. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va.; assistant secretary, Dr. Geo. N. Edwards, Charleston, S. C.; treasurer, Dr. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, N. C.; secretaries of Missions, Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, Washington, D. C., J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.; editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, J. O. Atkinson, Elon College; associate editor, Dr. E. C. Gillette, Jacksonville, Fla.; managing editor, J. T. Kernodle, Richmond, Va. Contributing editors include the present list, in part, to which were added the names of Dr. C. Rexford Raymond and M. J. Sweet.

There were some changes in the personnel of the Boards and Committees, and these will be published in the next issue of THE SUN. The next session of the Convention, by the invitation of the pastor, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, is to be held with the Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., two years hence.

We have only attempted in the barest outline to give to our readers some of the more important and fundamental details and far-reaching decisions of the Convention. There were outstanding events, addresses, discussions, which will appear in THE SUN at a later date. There were epoch-making conclusions, as future issues of THE SUN will reveal, and as time will prove. The spirit of the Convention from beginning to end was the spirit of brotherly love, of sweet fellowship, of utmost harmony and concord. Not a few who were present, especially of our Congregational fellowship, declared personally and publicly that they were thrilled, edified, by the spirit in which the Convention met, conducted its affairs and dealt with its problems. All official delegates and representatives and those who took part in the deliberations seemed to be striving for one thing, viz: To build up the Kingdom of God through the principle and power of love, that love that comes only through him who is our Saviour and Redeemer.

When our Southern Christian Convention charter is changed and we become the Southern Convention of the Congregational and Christian Churches, a work of union between two communions here in the South will be demonstrated in such manner as to gladden the sainted souls of James O'Kelly, Rice Haggard and Barton W. Stone, and of others who pioneered more than a hundred years ago in Christian liberty, the right of private judgment, the Bible as their only creed, and Christian character as their one test of fellowship and church membership.

THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONVENTION.

No part, or event, of the Burlington Convention last week was more encouraging and inspiring than the Woman's Missionary Conference of the Southern Christian Convention, April 26th. The reports to this body showed five organized Conferences with each Conference divided into several districts. In each of these districts, annual rallies have been held in the spring, the total attendance at these rallies this spring being reported at over 1,500.

In the North Carolina Conference, there are:

7 Districts with
53 Woman's Missionary Societies, having 1,- 073 members;

Under the consecrated and efficient services of Mrs. J. A. Williams, president, and her co-workers, every department has shown growth and development during the past two years. At this Convention, as at the last Convention, Mrs. Williams insisted that the women relieve her of the duties as president, but this they refused to do, and unanimously insisted that she continue as their president for the next two years. We wish space permitted us to express something of the feeling of gratitude to all the officers of the Convention who have served so faithfully, since every one has seemed to try to exceed the other in enthusiastic effort to make her department and her work successful.

Officers were elected for the next two years, as follows:

President, Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va.; vice-president, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; secretary, Mrs. L. W. Stagg, Norfolk, Va.; treasurer, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. L. Beale, Franklin, Va.; supt. of Young People's Work, Miss Priscilla Chase, Elon College, N. C.; supt. of Cradle Roll, Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va.; supt. of Spiritual Life, Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C.; supt. of Life Membership and Memorial, Mrs. M. J. W. White, Norfolk, Va.; Convention editor, Mrs. W. M. Jay, Holland, Va.; supt. of Literature, Mrs. H. C. Caviness, Portsmouth, Va.

It was regretted that Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell insisted that her resignation as superintendent of the Young People's Work be accepted. Miss Priscilla Chase, heretofore of our Congregational fellowship, was unanimously chosen her successor as superintendent of the Young People's Work for Missions for the biennium. Miss Chase was already deeply interested in the Christian Education work, but the women of the Missionary Convention felt that with her training she would be peculiarly qualified to lead the work for Missions.

We know not better how to conclude this brief sketch of the Woman's work the past two years than with the official report adopted by the convention as follows:

"This is the time for action among our earnest Christian men and women. Let us make our influence felt in the denomination. There are many churches existing without missionary organizations. Our task is yet unfinished, our goal has not been reached. May we realize the glorious privileges and opportunities that are yet before us. Our Lord is leading us toward the mark of the high calling of God through Christ. We have been listening to some of the achievements, accomplishments of the past biennial, and to some of the advances which should be made. I am very conscious of the inability of any church or missionary society to do these things in their own strength. It is not by might nor by power, but through co-operation of pastors and members, led by the Spirit of God, that great things can be accomplished. Our great need today is for the love of humanity in our lives, inspiring us to go out and win our blessed land for our Lord and Saviour.

This alone is the purpose and desire of the Woman's Missionary Convention. We must realize that the greatest joy the world affords is the privilege of service for the extension of the Kingdom, and the most perfectly concerted program possible is necessary. To unite successfully with others, we must first be perfectly united among ourselves. The common task of Missions challenges our best. New days bring new methods, greater emphasis for the purpose of meeting the present need of the rising generation and for the purpose of building the church of the future in a way that will insure its onward march and final conquest."

The Woman's Convention was largely attended, the meeting divinely directed, and it was, indeed, good to be there.

CRIMINALS DO NOT ENJOY HANGING.

Even Harry Powers, who was hanged recently in West Virginia, objected to capital punishment. This notorious criminal, who had a private graveyard in which to bury women and children he had murdered, after all avenues of escape had been closed and he saw the hangman's noose dangling just ahead, railed against the wickedness of the State in allowing capital punishment. And Powers is not alone in his attitude towards the gallows and the electric chair. They are all violently opposed to it.

And that is just the reason for the widespread opposition to capital punishment in this country. The disposition is to consult the wishes of the criminals. This is not only true in regard to capital crime, but to all crime.

If a man is convicted in the courts and sent to prison and happens not to enjoy his incarceration, we must turn him out. If he is content, all well and good, but if not, he hires an attorney, rallies some of his friends, and on ex-parte hearing besieges the executive office for a pardon or parole, and in far too many instances a weak-kneed Governor turns him out.

If we solve the crime problem we must put away maudlin sentiment and observe the behests of justice and righteousness toward all, both the criminal and the innocent victim. As it is now, the innocent victims of another's wrong-dong are forgotten and the criminal becomes a hero in the eyes of the "sob sisters." Some of these so-called "sob sisters" wear dresses and some of them are clad in men's garments, but they all alike bathe the feet of criminals with their tears and wipe them with the bloody garments of the slain.

What we need in this country is an observance of the Ten Commandments. We hear a cry that the 18th Amendment alone is not enforced. We are wrong here. It is the Ten Commandments that have been annulled. We, fortunately, have this decalogue of stone in the court-room of Guilford County. It ought to be in the Governor's mansion at Raleigh. It ought to be in every pulpit of this country and the preacher who did not find his text at least once a month in these commandments should be unfrocked till he learned that the "law is a schoolmaster to bring men to Christ."

In all seriousness, the American people must set themselves to law enforcement on a basis of common justice or else continue to reap the fruits of present attempted law enforcement.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

THE BURLINGTON CONVENTION.

The First Session of the Convention of the Congregational and Christian Churches of the Southeast, including the Southern Christian Convention (Thirtieth Session) and the Advisory Board of the Congregational Church was convened Tuesday evening, April 26th, with the opening addresses by Dr. W. R. Kedzie, Executive Secretary of Educational Institutions for the Educational Society of the Congregational Church, and the writer of this article.

The entire Convention was characterized by noble and profound utterances on the part of those who constituted the Convention. The spirit of the Convention was varied in its intensity. At first there was a spirit of friendliness, cordiality and exceeding hospitality. The second day of the Convention there seemed to be a spirit of restlessness and anxiety. Everybody was concerned greatly about the completion of the merger of the Congregational and Christian Churches of the Southeast. We all wanted it to be done and done rightly, but this was a new step and no one seemed to be certain as to how it should be taken. We were all, Congregationalists and Christians alike, determined on the right ends, and we were all uncertain as to the best means of attaining the right ends. Somebody said that "the clouds were dark and lowering and that a fearful storm was about to break." He was honest, and perhaps it seemed so, but the spirit of Christ overruled and guided, as he always guides and directs his own.

Dr. I. W. Johnson, secretary for the Convention, "under the inspiration of the Spirit," was moved to write a plan for the merger that adequately and rightly expresses the attitude of the Christian Church, facing this great opportunity. His plan was entirely acceptable to the members of the Congregational Church. Both bodies adopted the plan, and then we came together for the merger. It was a high moment for the Convention and in our religious lives.

The one interest that dominated the mind of the Convention and was the object of great concern, was the College. Elon College for the past forty years and more has rendered an unparalleled service to our church and to the cause of education in the South. She is now fighting the battle for continued existence. She needs the love, the respect and the gifts of every one to whose lives she has made a contribution directly or indirectly. Her investments in human life for the past forty years ought to bear sufficient dividends to meet her needs at this time.

Many of the members of the Convention responded with their gifts at Burlington. We want to thank every one. They will be anxious and glad to make further contributions. Those who did not come forward with their gifts, and who were not at the Convention, are urged to send in

THE CHURCHES' LOSS OF POWER.

By J. H. DILLARD
President, Jeanes' Foundation.

I read with deep interest THE CHRISTIAN SUN's editorial dealing with The Southern Churchman's answer to the question concerning the lost power of Christianity. It may be recalled that the answer attributed the loss of power to a "sinking from the spiritual to the intellectual level." The editorial seems to me to show that this solution, at least in the way the thought is stated, is wide of the mark. As the editorial says, "reason is hand-maid of revelation." Reason never hurt anything. The intellect gives one kind of knowledge. Faith gives another kind of knowledge. One deals with the things that are seen, the other deals with things that are unseen. There is no conflict. Faith has no quarrel with intellect. It has a quarrel with pride of intellect, but that is another story.

For an answer to the inquiry as to "what has become of the power of Christianity," I believe we must find a very different solution from that which The Southern Churchman seems to offer. It may be the difference is one of words. The churches seem to me to have lost power because they have surrendered. At least they have made terms with the ways of the world. They have too much lost faith in the reality and the supreme value of the ways that are not of this outward world. The churches are in the world and in the thick of it. But the churches are tending, in our time as at various other times, to be not only in the world but of the world.

In keeping up with the times it would seem that fellowship with the world is more considered than fellowship with God. It often seems so, both in sermons and in the services of charity. See the subjects so frequently advertised in the Sunday newspapers, or read the outlines of sermons sometimes appearing in the Monday papers, and one can hardly escape the impression that the preacher is exploiting some passing sensation or public policy in the cause of notoriety. Many preachers, misapplying the saying of St. Paul about being all things to all men, boldly say that the sermon must be up to date, must catch the modern tone. They think more of adapting their message of Christianity to suit the man in the street than of lifting the ideas of the man in the street to the ideals of Christianity. If one reads what can be known of the early days of Christianity in the world one can see how little the early Christians thought of pleasing the world.

In the matter of what is called social service, which has become a cant phrase, the churches have been guilty of immense loss to themselves and to their communities. They have let the machinery of outside organizations take the place of their personal services among their own people. They have let the Christian service of alms-giving give way to the "scientific" methods of agencies organized apart from Christianity. The difference is tremendous. One way may be "strictly business." The other carries with it the personal touch which hallows the practical help. When I was a boy in old St. Paul's Church in Norfolk, it happened that I came in touch with the work done by the good women of that parish. They may not have been scientific. They probably never heard the phrase, "social service." But since that day I have in contact with the work of "organized charities," and I have seen the difference.

No, the loss of power in the churches is not due to the subjection of spirit to intellect, but to the surrender of the Spirit of the Kingdom of God, which the churches represent in the world, to the ways, thoughts and values which suit and please the world's conceptions.

The world tries, has always been trying, to organize itself without God. The high call of the churches is to plead with and convince the intellects and wills of their people that God's values and ways are better than the values and ways of the world as organized without God. Christ emphasized the difference between the two ways. He insisted in the contrast. He said his way was not the world's way. He made the difference so terribly plain that we can see there had to be the Cross on Calvary. The difference still exists, the ways have not yet converged, and the cross, which brings devotion but is not likely to bring popularity, is as modern now as it was on the first Good Friday.

As a mere layman I can not but have a sense of hesitation in speaking about these high matters. I have, however, watched as closely as I could the trend of religious thought and method, and I hope I am not guilty of pessimism in thinking that the present trend of the leaders is in the wrong direction. It seems to me the churches can hold their power and serve the world not by conforming to the thoughts, morals, or methods of the world, but by strengthening themselves in the conviction of the reality of the unseen world and trusting to the guidance and power that comes with this conviction.

"FACING THE FACTS WITH FAITH."

By MRS. B. D. JONES.

Life is made up of sunshine and shadow, of joy and sorrow, of success and failure, but life continues. History teaches us that men are made or broken in the way they meet success or failure. Just what do we mean by facing? Facing in the right direction, facing with a set purpose, facing with a determination to hold on, to persevere to the end. Some of the old facts we are facing today are (1) a great end; (2) a great commission, and (3) a great task. To change the thinking, the feeling and the conduct of men whose philosophy of life was old when Christ was born, on the one hand; on the other to change men who have no written language and no literature. These are the abiding facts. The same to be faced by us today as to the men and women of the first century, the same stupendous task, impossible task, humanly speaking.

Dr. Oscar Buck says we will have to face facts in this new day that is dawning. We must do more than repair in Christian Missions. We must rebuild, rebuild our attitude and our technique.

Things may be right for what the world has been, but things are not right for what is coming. The women of America are standing in front of an avalanche. The women of the Orient are going to demand higher education. Shall we give them Christian leaders? If you will use your imagination rightly, you may see the invisible, you may see the beauties of the unknown.

In addition to the old facts, there are new facts we must face. They have been thrust upon us. Facts both favorable and unfavorable.

Some of the favorable facts are the non-Christian races in our land where we can more easily reach them without risks, delays and discomforts and danger of taking them the gospel in their native; also by general knowledge and culture, better trained missionaries, broader and better knowledge of our interpretation of the Bible enabling us to understand them better and reach them more easily.

Then there are the present material achievements: speed and comfort of travel, ease of communication, facilities for the work, such as hospitals, schools, doctors and nurses, making greater things possible, and so increase our responsibility, making us more open-minded to the gospel than ever before. This is true of the more cultured people as those of India, China and Japan.

Now some of the unfavorable facts. Not only Mohammedanism and Buddhism, but atheism and false doctrines abound and compete with Christianity for the newly emancipated minds. Two countries in which we have missionary interest have been at war with each other, and continued revolution in China is a serious blow to Missions, killing or driving them out of the country.

The world-wide financial depression perhaps is the most serious fact of all at the present moment. It has meant a great falling off in contributions, which is bound to interfere with the efficiency and extent of our work, both in the home and foreign fields. These are some of the problems we have to face, however grim and tragic.

Then there is the un-Christian attitude of so-called Christian nations and of individuals from Christian nations doing business in non-Christian lands. This difficulty continues to increase. Government of Christian nations has been unjust in many cases, cruel and oppressive. They have been anything but Christian. Both Government and individuals have exploited the less-favored people for their own financial ends, and so have created prejudice and hatred that put a great burden on the missionary. They have been sought out and sent out. They have agreed to do this difficult work for the Lord, and they are doing it with consecration and with success.

Can we now forget them, leave them in discouragement, their work crippled, their hopes defeated? This would mean moral disgrace to our church.

Public opinion seems more concerned about material prosperity than about moral integrity. If employers and employees were all busy in doing the Lord's work, it would bring about a great spiritual change.

Dr. Fred Smith says the sin which we Americans stand in deadly peril of is that of forgetting our Lord. They have lost faith in man whom they have seen and forgotten God whom they have not seen. America today is suffering because of unemployed men, unemployed money, but most of all, from unemployed religion.

Facing facts with faith, what kind of faith do we have to have?

1. A growing faith in God.
2. Faith in mankind.
3. Faith in ourselves.

The world has never needed a higher order of faith than today. To face such world conditions as I have mentioned, no ordinary faith will suffice. It calls for a faith in God, a God who is in all and whose hand guides the destinies of nations, who keeps his promise and is with his people, and whose word cannot fail. A faith in Christ as a living present Lord in the midst of his church in communion and fellowship with his servants; life and inspiration and guidance to them; comfort, strength, power, the one through whom the gospel can be brought to men.

Faith in man; that is, humanity as a whole. This is essential to the missionary and to all other heralds of the gospel. Christ never lost faith in man, despite the world's treatment of him. Faith in man as a creation of God; faith a contribution now. If you can't give but a little, don't withhold that. If you can give more largely, the Lord will bless you in the giving.

This is an appeal to every member of the church and loyal friend of the institution to help now—tomorrow may be too late. What a wonderfully inspiring thing it would be, if on reading this article, every reader would sit down then, and mail the college an offering worthy of the giver. If we should receive a thousand letters in our mail, with gifts, whether large or small, that within itself would seem an evidence that the Spirit of God was living in the hearts of men and influencing them to contribute for the support of the institution of His church, and for the advancement of His Kingdom on earth.

The Board of Trustees of the College, in call session, adopted the Dollar-a-Month plan, already advanced by the Alumni Association of the College.

President Smith announced to the Convention that it would be necessary to secure from some source, or all sources, at least $20,000 on or before June 1st, that the College might be able to continue its fine service. At the request of the Convention those present were given an opportunity to make their contributions. The following pledges and contributions were received:

Pledges and Cash Contributions.

E. B. Roscoe	$ 50.00
Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.	75.00
Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro	50.00
Edward C. Gillette, Jacksonville, Fla.	10.00
A. M. Johnson, Norfolk, Va.	12.00
Margaret Davidson, Thorsby, Ala.	5.00

J. Edward Kirby, Raleigh, N. C.	12.00
C. E. Burton, New York City	50.00
Robert Boyd, Henderson, N. C.	12.00

Are there not others who will join these in their liberal contributions?

A special committee appointed to offer suggestions for the raising of funds for the College, presented the Dollar-a-Month Club idea and asked the members of the Convention to join. The following were enrolled:

H. S. Hardeastle, Suffolk, Va.	$2.00
W. M. Jay, Holland, Va.	1.00
Mrs. Hennie Malone Brannock, Burlington..	1.00
Edith Walker, Burlington, N. C.	1.00

T. F. Wright, Sanford, N. C.	1.00
O. D. Poythress, S. Norfolk, Va.	1.00
J. F. Morgan, Norfolk, Va.	1.00

Would you like to join with them? If so, fill out the blank at the close of this article, and mail it to the College, together with your dollar.

At the evening service, on Thursday, Professor M. L. Patrick, vice-president of the Alumni Association, presented the Dollar-a-Month Club plan to the Convention. Mr. Patrick was the originator of this plan and is tremendously interested in it. The members of this Club nearly reach the one hundred mark now. At the conclusion of Mr. Patrick's address, the following new members of the Alumni Dollar-a-Month Club were received:

Sadie Fonville, Burlington, N. C.	$ 1.00
W. E. Marlette, High Point, N. C.	1.00
G. C. Crutchfield, Colfax, N. C.	1.00
Lucille Johnston, High Point, N. C.	1.00
Mrs. L. R. Johnston, High Point, N. C.	1.00
W. C. King, High Point, N. C.	1.00
F. F. Myrick, Greensboro, N. C.	1.00

Now is your opportunity. You may not be rich in things material, but you are rich in faith and devotion. If a dollar a month constitutes a sacrifice for you, the Lord will greatly bless you for making the sacrifice. Join Elon's Dollar-a-Month Club, and be numbered with those who have joined, that the College may go forward in her service to the church and to this day and generation.

L. E. SMITH.

THRIFT.

By EARL BIGELOW BROWN.

I wonder that God can afford it:

Violets deep in the glen,
Seldom or never discovered
To eyes of adoring men.

I marvel that God is not thrifty:

Last night on the Tappan Zee,
At one in the morning his moonlight
Was spilled, molten silver, for me.

I wonder that God is not saving:

Age after age he will give Lessons to stone-hearted statesmen,
That love is the way to live!

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Our loving Father, thou gavest to man a world of beauty. Sin veils its loveliness. By Satan's hand difficulty and distress abound. In mercy, Father, hasten the day when comfort and gladness shall fill the earth; when avenues of woe shall become channels of holy acclaim. Thine is the power, ours the part of faith and works. May we ever remember that when these are finished, with the swiftness of lightning Satan shall fall to utter destruction. Make our strivings pure. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

OUR MISSIONARY PROGRAM TODAY.

By FRANK MILTON SHELDON.

"Whereas the foreign missionary is, in our judgment, the most reliable interpreter of one nation to another, and the foreign missionary movement is one of the chief agencies for promoting peace and good will among the nations, and—

"Whereas the Seminar on the Gospel and International Life has found that the American Board is effectively interpreting essential Christianity and is adapting methods of work to meet the constantly changing situation abroad and at home, and is generally recognized as in the forefront of modern missionary movements,

"Therefore, be it resolved, that we challenge our churches to sacrificial living to the end that our foreign missionary program may be more aggressively developed."

This resolution received wholly favorable discussion and was adopted, I think, unanimously. Times and conditions changed most radically but the belief in Christian work around the world and in the American Board, our particular agency, abides and grows. There was no dodging. Suggestions, problems, all kinds of criticism were faced with utmost frankness, and answered as frankly by Dr. Goodsell, missionaries from the field, and native Christians from India and Japan.

The missionaries themselves, embodying Jesus Christ, his spirit, his way of life, are the chief contribution. Of course, our Gospel is good news to be lived, not just good advice to be spoken. The motive to missions can be nothing less than God's thought about his children and all life, and his unflinching love which seeks to bring himself and all good to his children.

Christian missions are not based on missionary Bible texts only. They are based in the very nature of Christianity itself, the source of specific texts. Losing every specific missionary text in the Bible would not destroy the motive or urge to missions for any who know the essential nature of our Christianity.

Christianity is God our Father sharing his life with his children. His love seeking all who are ignorant and astray, to bring them home into the family fellowship. Jesus embodied and lived this self-giving, sacrificial love life of God, sharing God's life and love with us. Its very nature is outgoing. To be Christian is to possess this life and love of God. Not to want others, around the world, to know it and share in it, is to convict ourselves of not knowing or possessing it ourselves.

Times of breakup and change within nations and around the world, are times of supreme opportunity for God and his kingdom, if he can find those who can adequately interpret him, in relation to various human needs and particularly the deepest needs. These days of opportunity are upon us. Question the need and opportunity for missions today? Those who do so must have scant appreciation of Christianity as bearing supreme good to man and of the desperate, gripping need of humanity.

Christianity has the international outlook; it believes in genuine world brotherhood; it goes deeper than all differences of nationality, color, race or custom; it makes all one in Christ under the common fatherhood of God.—Missionary Herald.

MISSION RALLIES.

Valley Virginia Missionary Rallies will be held as follows:

Shenandoah District—Sunday, June 12th, at 10:00 A. M., Dry Run Church Superintendent, Miss Alma Boyce, Seven Fountains, Va

Page District—Tuesday, June 14th, at 10:00 A. M., Newport Church. Superintendent, Mrs. Frank Kite, Shenandoah, Va.

Rockingham District—Wednesday, June 15th, at 10:00 A. M., New Hope Church. Superintendent, Mrs. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va.

The Northern District Rally, Miss Rena Matthews, superintendent, Winchester, Va, was held Sunday, May 1st, at Timber Ridge Church.

We trust the Rallies to be held at the above places and dates will be largely attended. Our Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, has been invited to attend and has accepted the invitation. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C., president of the North Carolina Woman's Conference, has also been invited to attend and has promised, if possible, to be present. We sincerely hope she will attend. We are expecting the best Rallies so far held.

"Words are carriers, taking us far
With poem, legend or story,
Words are pictures, painting us scenes
Famous with beauty's glory.
Words show us men and women, whose lives
Delight and inspire our achieving
Until we are lifted to noble deeds
Finer than our believing."

—Lena Waldo Deed.

For last month, you remember, we had the first program from the little booklet entitled "India Today," by Genevieve Sargeant Phillips, and what an interesting program it did make. For this month we are to have a poster meeting, and this is one that can be developed into a very unique program. The chief device suggested for this meeting is a poster display. The posters should be prepared in advance and the people to present them should become familiar with them and the comment regarding each one. The quotation may be pasted on the back of each poster and read off as it is held up, allowing sufficient time for the audience to read the poster first. Display them in a conspicuous manner all during the meeting.

The booklet with the suggestions for posters and all material for the programs may be secured from the Commission on Missions, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., for 10c.

PROGRAM II.

"HOW SHALL WE HELP INDIA?"

Hymn—"In Christ There is No East or West."
Leader's introduction.
Poster display.
Special music.
Report on the Scudder family.
Roll call answered with items of interest about India.

Leader's closing message.
Scripture lesson—Hebrews 11:32, 12:2.
Prayer for our fellow-workers, Indian and American—doctors, nurses, teachers, preachers, social service workers, specialists of many kinds who love India and want to help her.

For us, that seeing them as a "cloud of witnesses" about us, we may lay aside the sins of busy-ness, preoccupation, indifference, negligence and run beside them in the great task of making Christ's spirit felt in America and in India, together.

2. Scripture—"Prov. 31:10-31."
3. Prayer—(Thanking God for our Mothers.)
4. Recitation—(A small child):

We want to help the mothers
Throughout God's lovely earth
And all our little brothers
To know of Jesus birth.

Because we're thankful, truly,
For mothers such as ours—
Oh, help us spread the story
Through all the flying hours.

5. Story of Hannah and Samuel.
6. Song.
7. Recitation—"God Gave them Mothers."

The birdies in the treetops high
Can't sing, can't hop, can't fly
Till Mother says they may.
The lambs that skip in meadows sweet
Can't use their nimble, cunning feet
Till Mother shows the way.

Our Father for His creatures cares,
And all His world His dear love shares;
We and our brothers.
So truly God His children knew
That when the world's first cold winds blew
He gave them Mothers.

8. Offering, closing song, benediction.

A SALESMAN SOLD ON SAMUEL.

A young Japanese salesman was demonstrating some baby foods made by an American concern at a mother's meeting in the Glory kindergarten, Kobe. Before his talk a graduate of the training school told the story of Samuel and showed the picture of the kneeling boy. Afterward the young Japanese salesman told the missionary that years ago, in a foreign magazine, he had seen this famous picture. He cut it out, touched by its obvious meaning, and carried it with him on his commercial journeys, placing it on the wall of his hotel room. For the first time, that evening, he heard the story of the picture. "I ought to have known before," he said, "that the place to find out about a picture like that was among Christians. It is a picture of the spirit, and not simply a scene in nature."

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

JEWEL TRUITT, Editor, Glen Raven, N. C.

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

On Friday afternoon, April 29th, the young people of the Christian and Congregational Churches of the Southeast met in the First Christian Church, at Burlington, to take final steps in the organization of the Youth Fellowship of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches. A large group was presented to the Convention and they then withdrew for a separate session presided over by Herman Truitt, president. Miss Virginia Morton read the report of the Christian Conference and reports were received from the Conference Youth Fellowships. The proposed constitution was read, discussed and accepted. The following officers were elected for the biennium:

President, Herman Truitt, Glen Raven, N. C.; vice-president, Eddie Dubois, Miami Beach, Fla.; secretary, Nell Simonds, Southern Pines, N. C.; assistant secretary, Elizabeth Sharpe, Waverly, Va.; treasurer, Aubrey Todd, Norfolk, Va.; supt. Devotional Life, Mabel Smith, Greensboro, N. C.; supt. Service, Birdie Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; supt. Leadership Training, Annie Campbell, Waycross, Ga.; supt. Publications, Carl Key, Elon College, N. C.

At 6:30 one hundred and one young people with forty-three of their leaders assembled for a banquet. Herman Truitt presided as toastmaster and introduced Dr. Smith, who spoke a word of greeting. Miss Chase spoke about Elon College and the Blue Ridge Conferences.

Rev. George Penn spoke briefly on the theme, "Are Ye Able?" followed by a solo by Miss Jewell Pressnell. Rev. R. L. House spoke on "Forward Together," the two phrases being the watchword and slogan of the Youth Fellowship.

The evening worship service was conducted by Miss Birdie Rowland and the address was given by Rev. Jason Noble Pierce, of Nashville, who took as his text, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

We hope that this is the first of many such enjoyable occasions, when the young people of our churches can get together for inspiration and fellowship.

STATE CONVENTION C. E. SOCIETIES.

The State Convention of the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Congregational-Christian Churches opened Friday night when a group from Piedmont College presented a program of songs and inspirational addresses led by Miss Irma Adams.

The Saturday sessions were discussed. Miss Marguerite Davison, dean of Piedmont College, and Miss Susie Elder, teacher in the public schools at Sneadville, Ga., conducted the courses. An international supper was given Saturday evening when courses from the different countries were served. Miss Annie Lyons Howe, retired missionary from Japan, spoke. After her address the play, "Ordered South," was presented by the LaGrange C. E. Society.

The concluding session was held Sunday morning with Dr. D. B. Atkinson preaching the sermon. The award to the group making the most outstanding contribution to the Convention was also presented at that time; the Vanceville group from South Georgia receiving the banner.

There were 110 registered delegates from the churches in Georgia and East Alabama, besides the visitors who did not register. They were entertained in the homes of Southwest LaGrange.

T. V. Huey was elected president of the State Convention. Miss Marjorie Askins of Barnsville, was elected vice-president and Miss Susie Elder, of Columbus, secretary.

Rev. J. H. Dollar, pastor of the local church, was host to the Convention. W. T. Carpenter, of Ambrose, is the retiring president of the Convention.

I am asking your prayers for our success in gaining, or helping to gain, 1,000,000 new Crusaders for Christ in 1932. That is the goal of our international societies combined.

THOS. V. HUEY.

LaGrange, Ga.

"THIS IS MY FATHER'S WORLD."

This is a hymn which every young person should know well, and it may be sung every Sunday during June as your "Hymn for the Month." Ask your Sunday School Superintendent if the Young People's Class may not take charge of the worship service in the Sunday School one Sunday during the month, and plan your program about this theme. The following material is given to help you plan a worshipful service.

Prelude—"This is My Father's World," played softly.

Call to Worship—"God of the Open Air," by Van Dyke.

"Thou who hast made thy dwelling fair
With flowers below, above with starry lights,
And set thine altars everywhere—

On the mountain heights,
In woodlands dim with many a dream,
In valleys bright with springs,
And on the curving capes of every stream;
Thou hast taken to thyself the wings

Of morning to abide
Upon the secret places of the sea,
And on far islands, where the tide
Visits the beauty of untrodden shores,
Waiting for worshippers to come to thee
In thy great out-of-doors!
To thee I turn, to thee I make my prayer,
God of the open air."

Hymn—"For the Beauty of the Earth."

Scripture Reading—Psalm 19:1-6; Psalm 8:1; Psalm 24:1, 2. (Repeated by young people.)

Prayer, led by president of the class, or by three young people, asked in advance.

Story of the hymn, "This is My Father's World" (as told in the Forward, by Calvin W. Laufer).

"That hymn brings God very near to me," said a boy to his friend as they sat side by side at a vesper service in camp. "Yes," replied his friend, "it makes you feel that all nature wants to sing God right into your heart."

This hymn by Dr. Maltbie D. Babcock presents a confident attitude toward life and expresses buoyant faith in God. The first line of each stanza opens with the words, "This is My Father's World." These words of joy and appreciation of faith, make a good slogan with which to begin and end the day. The hymn is a joyous outburst of faith, in which "rocks and trees," "skies and seas," "birds and flowers"—all nature—embody the voice of God. Nothing could be finer than the lines, "In the rustling grass I hear him pass," and "He speaks to me everywhere."

There is much to be said about Dr. Babcock, author of this hymn. As a boy he was merry and active; as a youth, he was physically perfect, morally clean and fearless. He was a good student, a great athlete, an expert swimmer, an accomplished musician, a good story-teller, a faithful friend, and a great preacher. In appearance, he was masterful and attractive; in action, vibrant and magnetic; in attitude, of overpowering spirit and joyousness; his attitude toward the world was optimistic and confident. One of his friends writes of him, "His laugh, his gestures, his music, his preaching, all sent a warm flow through your body and soul." Dr. Babcock loved young people and they turned to him with confidence for sympathy and counsel.

The words of the hymn are set to an old English melody, simple and light in movement, fluent in progression, and, therefore, readily sung. It was arranged by Franklin L. Shepherd, a business man of Philadelphia, an accomplished musician, and editor of Alleluia, a Sunday School hymnal, of which nearly five hundred thousand copies have been sold. Since its first appearance this hymn and tune have been associated, and appear in all recent hymn books.

Hymn—"This is My Father's World." (If this hymn is not in your hymn book, try to secure the words to be read, or to be sung as a solo, if all cannot sing it.)

Quiet Meditation—(The leader may suggest thoughts for meditation and prayer, as (a) God has given us a beautiful world for which we give him thanks; (b) The world declares the glory and goodness of our Heavenly Father. May we see him through his works; (c) Summer time is a gift from him. May we praise the Father, who has enriched our lives by the gifts of the seasons.)

Leader—

"Grant me, O Lord, the harmony
That I may understand the beauty of the earth,
The sun and the shadow of the wood in spring
And thy great love that dwells in every living thing."

Benediction—

"The Lord bless us and keep us;
The Lord make his face to shine upon us, and be gracious unto us;
The Lord lift up his countenance upon us and give us peace. Amen."

VIRGINIA ENDEAVORERS TO MEET.

The Christian Endeavorers of Virginia are planning for a most wonderful time at Christian Temple in Norfolk when the State Convention meets there. The Endeavorgram says:

"Norfolk will give you/the warmest welcome you have ever had. Those who attended the last State Convention in that city remember what a wonderful time was shown the Endeavorers. The warm hospitality of the Endeavorers with the many things of interest in that section should cause you to put everything aside and come to Norfolk June 23, 24, 25, 26, 1932."

Whenever in its history did the church have a more glorious opportunity? To see it, however, she should first cast the mote out of her own eyes. She should confess that too long the Church has been the handmaid of the secular interests and secular powers, and has failed to maintain her own free and independent position, bringing fearlessly the mind of Christ to bear upon every problem that vexes the mind of the race.

Sunday School Lesson

JACOB AT BETHEL.
LESSON VII—MAY 15, 1932.
LESSON TEXT: Genesis 28:10-17.
GOLDEN TEXT: "I am with thee and will bring thee whithersoever thou goest."—Gen. 28:15.

Introduction.

Jacob was a shrewd bargainer and a supplanter. He had tricked his brother and deceived his father. He had driven a profitable bargain, so he thought, but after all he had lost much. He had gained the supremacy of birthright. He had lost the confidence and respect of his brother. He had estranged the faith of his father. He had lost the balance and composure of his own soul. Trickery, dishonesty and deception offer some short cuts to personal goals, but in the end the social and personal losses are greater than the gains. Today there are many Jacobs who deceive their fellowmen. Supplanters are still abundant in the social order. Individuals and society still pay a high price for their deception.

Out from Beersheba.

Jacob left home. The reasons were many and his motives were mixed. It is so in life. A complex social structure produces a web of intricate weaving. The angry, threatening brother, Esau, the threatened brother, Jacob, and parents who showed favoritism, did not make a happy family. So Jacob left Beersheba and went out to find a wife and make a new home. This was a great adventure. The choice of vocation and life partner are crises in the life of any youth. Would Jacob be successful in the economic struggle? Would he be happy and strengthened by the wife he was to find? Would his old religious motives persist or would he lay aside the best religion he had and become indifferent to its claims? These are questions of supreme importance in the life of any young person.

He Dreamed.

Youth dreams and hopes and plans. This is as it should be. The imagination should project the visions and hope that life's energy seeks to realize. It is unfortunate if a youth finds satisfaction in mere day-dreaming or fantasy. Some do. This is disastrous. The dream should be a projection that is practically realized.

The first night out from home Jacob dreamed. He retired with a stone for a pillow at his head. The ground was his bed and the canopy of heaven was his roof. The stars provided decorations for his room. Here alone the wayward boy lay down to sleep away from friends and foes and, as he thought, outside the land of the God of his worship. And, as he slept, he dreamed.

Ladders to Heaven.

There are many ties that connect man with the Eternal. There are many aspirations that lure the soul of man from the terrestrial to the heavenly. Jacob dreamed and saw a ladder that reached from earth to heaven. Messengers of God ascended and descended on it. The God of his fathers stood above the ladder. Jacob had run away from home and native land. He was out on a great adventure. His whole future lay in the balance. But there were still the messengers of God that could reach lonely Jacob as he rested in a strange land.

I Am Jehovah.

How fortunate it is for man that he cannot drift beyond the love and interest of the God of all spirits. I am Jehovah. The same God whom Jacob had worshipped at Beersheba was here with him in his lonely camp. God was more than a local God. He could give visions to a youth who had done wrong and had run away from home on an adventure in vocation and romance. This vision meant the turning toward a better Jacob. He improved from this time. Three assurances came out of the vision: Jacob would be safe and would return, he would have descendants who would bless and help mankind, and he would have extensive land holdings.

The House of God.

To Jacob it was the house of God. That is the meaning of Bethel. God was there so he consecrated the spot as a shrine. It is well for youth to have a house of God. The church is such, so is the family altar. There may be other sacred spots in the religious aspirations of the individual. Each of us needs his visions at the house of his God.

FACING THE FACTS WITH FAITH.

in his capacity to receive the truth, to know God, to be redeemed from sin, to have fellowship with God and to serve him.

Faith in ourselves. In ourselves as God's own children; as one called and chosen to be faithful, as an instrument in God's hands by which his will and work are to be done—capable of triumphing over sin and standing with Christ in the regeneration of the world.

Such is the faith we need in the present crisis to stand for and face a task whose end can only be the coming of the Kingdom of God among men.

Faith saves, faith heals, faith creates hope. Faith says, "Forward." There is no defeat when Christ leads. He said: "Go ye, give the gospel to all nations."

Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen. Let us build on the sure foundation, that faith which cannot be swept away. The real Christian life is simply a walk by faith.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN,
Richmond, Va.:

In last week's issue there appeared an item stating that a box of dresses was sent to the Orphanage from me. I will thank you very much if you will correct that statement in this week's issue, stating that the box of dresses and clothing was from the ladies of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va.

Thanking you, I am,

Respectfully yours,

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

A BLESSING OF AFFLICTION.

"Who comforteth us in all our affliction, that we may be able to comfort them that are in any affliction, through the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God."—I. Cor. 1:3, 4.

It is well said, "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Thus, Saint Paul begins his letter to the Corinthian people not with compliments as usual, but with reflections on the weight of suffering fallen upon him, what it means and what purpose it serves.

This is the theme of this whole epistle. Read it through with only that in view, and you will have a more comprehensive understanding of the meaning of suffering of Christians, than you may ever have had before.

He tells us how sufferings are turned to joys, how weakness turns to strength and defeat rises to triumph. He tells us, even, how, when friends turn enemies and one is crushed by external calamities, when one is disappointed, humbled and embittered, and is driven to seek defense of personal character, God steps in and turns it all into good account and makes his experience a medium of service. "He doeth all things well to them that love God." In addition to this, if one, through suffering, can sympathize with others and thus reveal God to them, what a blessing! If this reaches the eyes of a sufferer in Jesus, may these thoughts bless you.

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer. Think of each thought and examine yourself to see how much you mean it.

TUESDAY.

WHERE DO YOU STAND?

"Stand thou here."—Deut. 5:31.

The ten commandments had just been delivered to Moses. The mountain was aglow with fire, and Moses drew near to hear all that God should say. And God said, "Stand thou here by me." And behold the Lord showed him his glory and his greatness.

The lamented Dr. Jowett gives us an experience of his in which he describes himself as in a room of wealth of art. He was at a close-up and with fixed gaze upon one of a Highland scene. Someone stepped up to his side and said: "I am afraid you won't get the light on the hill; stand here with me." He did so, and sure enough, he had been looking upon a dark valley, but now the hill was lit up with a wonderful light like a halo about its top.

Prayer—Lord, help us.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A COWARDLY PRAYER.

"Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss."—Jas. 4:3.

It might not be fair to brand all prayers made amiss as "cowardly," because a faithful soul might ask amiss through ignorance or misunderstanding. In fact, it takes a lot of spiritual culture, living close with God, and much guidance of the Holy Spirit, to keep from asking amiss. God forgive our shortcomings and bless us with understanding.

You see, prayers are like the love of life. The wish to keep on living may be full of courage and patience, or it may be nothing but a selfish desire or a cowardly fear of death. We all have probably prayed for something that we would have later scorned. We have all prayed in tones which we would have counted unworthy of ourselves, much less God.

Listen to Jesus: "When thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to the Father in secret." That is it. Shut out the world and shut in God, and Jesus means that when we shut the world out and confront him, we also shut out our selfishness, and first of all seek his will.

Prayer—Amen, O Lord Jesus, come thou and dwell within and may we live in Jesus along this weary road of selfishness. Amen.

THURSDAY.

OUR BIGGEST WORD.

"Let me alone that I may take comfort."—Job 10:20.

What a picture does the word "comfort" convey to our minds! We immediately draw upon the realities of comforts and comfortableness which is one of the chiefest delights of life. The child cuddles in its mother's lap for comfort.

After a weary day's work we put on our smoking jacket and slippers, seat ourselves by the fire in an easy chair and with a book, say, "how comfortable!" After recovery from illness, we stretch ourselves and say, "What a comfort!" After relief from a heavy burden we settle down, and, Oh! how comfortable! Well, it seems that comfort is the objective of most of us.

In all of this, the word comprises more of rest, relief, satisfaction, and pleasure in our immediate feelings, than it does the ultimate of things. When the fact is, if we are to believe in God, this is the smallest part of the real comfort he offers us. He talks about comforting us in all our afflictions! about "walking in the comforts of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 9:31); about "living in the patience and comfort of the Scriptures" (Rom. 15:4); about "God being a God of comfort" (II. Cor. 1:3); about "comfort wherewith we are comforted of God" (verse 4); about the "comforts of love" (Phil. 2:1); etc.

What an active word this is when it comes from God! We are told that the original use of this word conveyed the idea of "communicating strength." This is the word used in connection with Christ's "the child grew and waxed strong in spirit." Isaiah says, "He fastened it with nails." Wycliff says it is the same word as "comfort." "He comforted it with nails."

Blessed thought—He adds strength unto us as with nails. He takes us away from something soothing and pleasant into that comfort which holds us steady when the wind blows strong.

Prayer—Our Father, thou art our portion and strength. We have burdens and cares, sufferings and sorrows, we cannot "hold to" when the winds of adversity blow, unless we have thy strength within to hold us. Give us that power for Jesus sake. Amen.

FRIDAY.

YOKEFELLOWS.

"I beseech thee also, true yokefellow, help these women, for they labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and the rest of my fellow-workers, whose names are in the book of life."—Phil. 4:1-7.

Paul would never labor alone, if he could help it. He found every yoke becoming quite light and easy to carry if some yokefellow slipped his shoulder under the other end.

One of Luther's fellow monks joined the ardent reformer in his convictions, but thought it enough for him to remain in his cell and pray for Luther as he went forth to fight the demons of superstition, bigotry and oppression. In that cell, however, as he prayed, a sense of Luther's lonely struggles came over him, and of his own cowardice and sloth, and he learned that it was not enough to pray, he must also help to carry the yoke.

Are we letting some one else bear our burdens for us, or are we manfully doing our full part of the work, and even more, if we can?

Prayer—Thy yoke is light and easy, O Thou Carpenter, Maker of yokes! We lift it with thee, when we lift it with our brother. May we be thy true yokefellow, being his. Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SATURDAY.

GOOD WORK, GOOD PAY.

"We are unprofitable servants, we have done that which it was our duty to do."—Luke 17:5-10.

The great contribution to the labor world which was made by Frederick W. Taylor, the specialist on shop management, was his insistence that "for their own good it is as important that workmen should not be very much overpaid, as that they should not be underpaid."

Applied to the rewards which we have a right to expect from the Master Workman of the universe, does not Taylor's principle require us to be as solicitous that we should do our full work, in the best possible way, as that we should receive from God an abundant pay in ease of living and peace of soul?

How many of us are satisfied with the doing of ordinary duty when God has made it possible for us to do extraordinarily well!

Prayer—Thou art so patient with us, our heavenly Employer! Thou bestowest upon so much for so little! Make us ashamed of ourselves. And inspire us, we pray thee, that we may please thee and delight thee. Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"Thy faithfulness is round about thee."—Psa. 89:1-8.

Modern architects apply an ancient principle of heating which is a great improvement over steam and hot-water radiators. They place in the ceiling or the upper part of the walls, back of the plaster, hot-water pipes or electric heaters. These warm the rooms so effectively that people are comfortable at much lower temperatures than would suffice with direct heating. The plaster is warmed, and all the enclosure of the room becomes a reservoir of heat, able to meet any sudden variation in outside temperature.

Thus it is with God's children. The lord is round about them. All the universe radiates his love. His faithfulness supports them as the ocean surrounds and supports a ship. His wisdom enlightens them as the sunlight illuminates the earth.

Panel warming costs no more than radiator warming, provided it is kept up steadily; if it is intermittent, it is more costly and less effective. So it is with the love and cheer and power of God. Sunday is not enough; it must go with us every day of the week, and every hour of every day.

Prayer—Surround us and uphold us, O Lord our God. Be thou ever with us. Never leave us nor forsake us. Go with us wherever you will. Uphold us in every trial. Strengthen us for every task. Be to us our All-in-all, for Christ's sake. Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

THE REALITY OF SIN.

"Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden."—Gen. 3:1.

God did not make sin. Sinners have made sin. God made sovereign souls, worthy of being the sons of God, and not automatons, unworthy of being anything. We may argue about this matter, but stretch our logic all along the whole lay of time, but our hearts will never yield. We know ourselves to be sinners, and if we wish we can lay our fingers upon our faults, and lay our love upon God.

Let us put up three sign-posts to emphasize our thinking today. Abundance, Obedience, and Transgression. It is a cruel road, and leads us either to the cross, or worse. If we face the realities of life as they stand we shall find ample need for Jesus, the Saviour of men; and our thoughts must carry us over to him, even as our hearts find in him, hope, and peace, and comfort.

I. Abundance.—Last Sunday morning in our discussion of "Heaven and Earth" we had glimpses into the majesty and glory of God; we looked upon the size of our universe; and we felt something of the goodness and sureness of our world when God is taken into consideration. There is bounty. As little as was known about the abundance of God's provision for man at the time of the writing of the earliest accounts a picture of bounty is beautifully portrayed. To take water alone, while Palestine is a dry and thirsty land and the conveyors of the Sacred Revelation were used to droughts, barren hills, and spare supplies of water in their first picture of the providence of God there was water, and plenty. "And God divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament: and it was so." "And a river went out of Eden to water the garden, and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads—Pison—Gihon—Hiddekel—and Euphrates." Only those who have spent their lives in desert lands, or lay dying on a battlefield where no water was, or have had some such excruciating thirst can fully appreciate the abundant provision for water. Or let our minds pause for a minute on that word, "light." "And God made two great lights—the greater light—and the lesser light, and he made the stars also." They did not know as much then as is known now. Ask the botanist about the need and supply of light! ask the biologist about the need and supply of light; ask the physicist about the need and supply of light; ask the mariner, and the mother; the physician and the chemist; ask the farmer, and the inventor about the need and supply of light; Edison found that God had stored light in the deep, black vaults of the earth, and in the turbulent tides of the Niagaras of the world. At first the physician said, "Yes, Edison, but your light is not sunlight." And again the inventing scientists went to their tasks, and found that they could even unlock God's ultra-violet rays at a midnight hour! Yes, there is abundance of light, "And God saw that it was good."

As we think of God's bounty we find it pictured there, a veritable garden of God's precious provisions—water and light; land and sea; flora and fauna; companionship for the hearts of men and women, and the breath of life for their souls. What lacked they? Made in the image of God, and surrounded by workmanship of his hands. Given mind, and personality; might and power to have dominion over it all. And the years have not lessened the supply, although they have measurably increased the demands! We are just beginning the beginning of finding out what God has supplied us with. God has seen to it that there is lavish abundance. If there is a depression it is not his fault. It may be found in the subject of this sermon: "The Reality of Sin!"

II. Obedience.—If we are not careful when we first approach this sign post, we shall feel that here is some mistake—that there is some concept in the very word that is negative and revolting. But let us not be too fast. We have over-emphasized the negativeness of the first chapters of Genesis at this point. The most daring challenges of the first chapters of Genesis is not "don't," but "do." It is almost all "do," and whatever "don't" there is there is not for the sake of "don't," but most unmistakably for the "do." "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let him have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." "Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet." Well, blessed is our don't? Let us see: "And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." There is the first title deed ever recorded, and the greatest challenge ever issued to the children of men, and without a single "don't" in it!

Back of this great challenge to have dominion over all the earth has been placed in the heart of man the desire to carry it out. Edward Everett Hale has expressed it thus:

"And I?"

Is there some desert or some pathless sea
Where thou, good God of angels, wilt send me?
Some oak for me to rend; some sod,
Some rock for me to break;
Some handful of corn for me to take
And scatter far afield,
Till it, in turn shall yield
Its hundred-fold
Of grains of gold
To feed the waiting children of my God.
Show me the desert, Father, or the sea.
Is it thine enterprise? Great God, send me."

God has placed the desire in our hearts to obey. One of our ancient seers has said, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." If we do not obey the great, inmost challenges of our hearts to the highest within us, we may argue all we please, but our hearts will not yield. Here, too, we shall find the answer to our disobedience in the subject of this sermon: "The Reality of Sin."

III. Transgression.—The writer of Genesis certainly set forth in a wonderful way a line as old as the human race, namely, that line which divides mine and thine. Every happy child soon learns it. Some things are mine, other things are yours. If a child does not learn this trouble lies ahead. Every individual must learn it. It is a law as old as human society, and cannot be broken without disastrous effects. That law was made plain in the first chapters of Genesis. A bountiful heavenly Father gave dominion, but reserved enough in that gift to remind the benefactors of the spiritual needs of their souls. "Eat of these trees, and tend the other tree for Me."

Yours and mine, they are; and partners are we forever! Break down that law, and broken is all that is best in life—broken homes, broken nations, broken hearts, and broken hopes pour like a wild torrent over the Niagara of human society; fortify that first principle and govern—

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

1536 East Broad Street, - - Richmond, Virginia

I wonder if each of you would not like to take a few minutes off with me and visit the Christian Orphanage. If I should ask the question, how many of you have ever visited this institution, I wonder how many could say, "I have!" If you haven't, you have missed a treat. Of course, some of us would say, "I have never been there, but I help support the children." That's fine, but what a great thrill you would each get if you would take off a few hours to go over the institution and see what is really going on inside.

This year I have been assisting Mr. Johnston in the different phases of work here and find it very interesting. We have three dormitories or homes and each is a real home. When you walk into each building, you will find a warm welcome, not only from each matron, but from the children as well. Through the kindness and big-heartedness of some, who are interested in little children, our buildings are being made and kept homelike. Each building has a radio, gold fish and a canary, and with small children in each building, what more is needed to make each one happy?

When we stop to think of the responsibility back of all this, I wonder if we ever stop to think what a great task it is to carry on this great work a task of moulding character, seeing small tots come into the institution as babes and go out in life as young men and women. Could we possibly think this is a life of ease for the head of the institution and the matrons? Why, no, we couldn't. It is a life of love and service for mankind, really doing something worth while, caring for homeless children.

We now have one hundred and one children, the smallest being only five years of age, while the oldest is eighteen, now ready to enter upon his or her life work.

The children know how to work. They are each assigned some task to do, and they do this and do it well, not waiting for someone to come and tell them how to do it. The smaller girls wash dishes and clean up, while the larger ones clean up and cook. Believe me, they know how to cook; what delicious biscuits they can make! The smaller boys carry in wood, run errands, work in the field, while the larger boys plow, hoe, milk, etc. You may go over the buildings any time from 7:00 A. M. to 7:00 P. M., and you will never see idleness, everyone works and they thoroughly enjoy it. I have never seen such a happy group of children, such smiling faces, always ready to help at any time, not waiting to be asked the second time.

I feel sure if each of you would only visit our institution once, you would feel fully repaid for every thing you have ever done for the Orphanage. We appreciate your interest in the work here and ask that you not only keep remembering us in your gifts, but remember us in your prayers as well, for we need them, too. If there was ever a time when we needed the prayers of Christian friends, it is now.

Yours in His service, LILLIE HORNE, Assistant.

PRESBYTERIAN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS, by L. J. Sherrill. Yale University Press. 261 pp. $3.00.

To those unfamiliar with the history of American education, it will seem strange that the Presbyterian Church ever maintained parochial schools. Somehow we feel that such schools are Catholic or Lutheran. Well, the Presbyterians also had them, reaching all the way from Long Island to Wisconsin. They flourished in particular between 1846-1870, reaching their zenith in 1848 and 1849. The paralyzing effect of the Civil War put an effectual end to them. All attempts, some as late as 1889, to resuscitate them, have proved abortive. Dean Sherrill tells their story in this scholarly work. The Presbyterians declined to establish a complete system of Parochial Schools, but the problem is yet with us—how can Protestants cooperate in week-day religious education.

AN INTRODUCTION TO LIVING PHILOSOPHY, by D. S. Robinson. Thos. Y. Crowell Co. 381 pp. $3.00

Philosophy is not an exact science that can be catalogued and alcoved, but a living, pulsing stream that has a way of breaking out in another place when you think you have it safely damned. The head of the Department of Philosophy in the University of Indiana, in this book, gives a lucid delineation of the several types of philosophy that contend for the intellectual mastery to-day. In particular he discusses Realism, Idealism, Prognosticism, Vitalism, Electricism, and the new Scholasticism. He devotes the first sixty pages of his book to a discussion of philosophy as such and the general approach to the subject. The first chapters making up this orientation approach are exceedingly valuable. It is an exceedingly worth-while book.

THE IDEA OF GOD IN PROTESTANT RELIGIOUS EDUCATION, by Angus H. MacLean. Teachers College. 150 pp. $1.50.

It is one of the encouraging signs of the times that Christians are deeply concerned to understand God. Many philosophical "paths" to God have recently appeared. Dr. MacLean approaches the issues involved scientifically. By numerous tests and by attendance of worship and other services he found that our Protestant teaching on the subject of God is properly to be characterized as a confusion of incompatible and contradictory ideas. For example, God is shown as exceedingly patient with Cain, but removes Moses from leadership because he struck rather than spoke to a rock, and he is commended in both instances. The situation is to be remedied according to the author by revising the curriculum in such a way that it will include more of the facts of the Bible and also more of the facts of nature. The prescription seems so easy that grave doubt is raised as to its efficacy. Will such a revised curriculum give us a correct idea of God? Will not some "activity" also be required, par example?

While earthly objects are exhausted by familiarity the thought of God becomes to the devout man continually brighter, vaster; derives fresh luster from all that he observes of nature and providence, and attracts to itself all the glories of the universe.—Channing.

ment is possible, law and order prevails, and worship works its divine blessings upon all. Selfishness is the difference in pleading for that principle in matters of business and State, while it is forgotten in worship and church! Crossing the line of "mine and thine" is transgression. It has beggared the church and belittled the human race wherever that line has not been observed.

So fundamental is that principle the Scripture has said elsewhere, "The love of money is the root of all evil." Love of working with God in tending his portion is the fruit of all good. Always great souls have become increasingly greater souls by remembering to give back to God his portion. Calvary is the Christ fortifying that line with his life. You and I as Christians are to learn through that first principle to live up to the "weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith."

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

OBITUARIES.

UNDERWOOD.

Mrs. Mary Ann Underwood was born August 9, 1853, and died March 12, 1932. Sister Underwood joined Shallow Well Church in 1903, and was a faithful member to the end.

She leaves to mourn their loss one son, J. Will, and one daughter, Miss Minnie Underwood.

Services were conducted from Shallow Well by the writer.

May God bless and comfort the bereaved.

LUKE.

Resolution of respect and sympathy adopted by The Barreca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church, Suffolk, Va.

Whereas, in response to the divine summons, J. D. Luke, departed this life; and,

Whereas, for a great number of years he was an active member of the Barreca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church; that he always performed whatever duties he had to perform in a cheerful, courteous and efficient manner and has exemplified consistently those rare traits which made him a friend of all those who came in contact with him.

Now, therefore, be it resolved:

That, as members of the Barreca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church, we express by this resolution our appreciation of the long and able service which he has so faithfully rendered; of his friendly companionship, his gentle and genial disposition, his courteous and cordial manner, his unselfish and untiring efforts in the performance of helpful ministries to his fellowmen; of all these qualities possessed by him in abundant measure, which are the attributes of a gentleman in the truest and highest sense of the word—qualities of mind and heart that were not the result of studied effort but were the natural endorsements of the beneficent Providence.

That, while we deeply deplore the death of our friend and comrade and sadly miss his cheerful fellowship, his kindly eye and smiling countenance, yet his life was a benediction and his memory will linger with us like the fragrance of flowers; that of him it may be said: "To live in hearts we leave behind is not to die."

That we extend to his bereaved family our deepest sympathy.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to his bereaved family a copy given the Secretary of this Class for his record and also a copy sent to the press.

MAKING CHURCH UNION EFFECTIVE.

An Address delivered by Rev. E. G. Coffin, D. D., Co-Moderator of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, to the Southeast Convention, at Burlington, N. C., April 28, 1932.

One cannot sit in the sessions of this Convention and others similarly constituted without being impressed with certain inescapable facts: First, the wisdom of our oneness. So frequently and variously has this been voiced that were it less meaningful it would be hackneyed to the point of boredom. Second, that union, except in spirit, is never completed—it is always in process. The attainments of today but unfold a larger task for tomorrow. Third, whether together or apart the Congregationalists and Christians may differ widely as to methods, though not at all in spirit. Fourth, the unshakeable assurance that however difficult our adjustments may be all will come right in the end.

What a splendid strengthening these Convention days are to that faith so beautifully expressed by Henry B. Carpenter:

"A mightier church shall come,
Whose covenant word
Shall be deeds of love. Not
'Credo,' then, but 'amo,'
Shall be the password through The gates.

"Man shall not ask his brother any more
'Believest thou,' but 'lovest thou';
And all shall answer at God's altar,
'Lord I love.'
For hope may anchor, faith may steer,
But love, great love, alone is Captain of the soul."

Three years ago in moments of tenseness perhaps never surpassed in the history of either church and impelled in a mighty stirring of soul, the National Council of Congregational Churches and the General Convention of the Christian Church each unanimously voted to do what neither fully knew. They had, and are yet, having to learn. No man or group of men could know in advance. The action was not hasty for five years had been spent by many people studying its ways, possibilities and implications, since its first overture had gone out on March 3, 1924. The action of those two national bodies was a commitment to, not an achievement of, union. We had yet to discover what and how we could unite.

The whole question, now an altogether practical one, was taken at once to the laboratory, laboratory is the word, to pass under the surgery of a million of those cherished "private interpretations," granted in both merging churches through the years, and very highly estimated by those whose they were. The rest of the world sits around in semi-sympathetic clinic awaiting the outcome.

The whole thing was a great venture of faith and a noble experiment with ideals. The larger number of its vital and practical questions were passed on to conferences, churches and members to be infused with spirit and powered with efficiency. Detroit and Piqua had made a declaration, Podunk had to make good on it. Wholeheartedly we faced ourselves as the ox between plow and altar on the ancient Roman medalion, "ready to plow or for sacrifice."

Certain things we have learned, perhaps with a vividness which they did not have in 1929:

One is that no Council or Convention can create a union—it but registers and gives organic form to a unity previously developed, or tailors the garments of methods and plans to clothe it. It crystalizes sentiment, expresses prevailing attitudes and blue-prints an ideal. A real union comes in through folks and goes out again in systematized form through the same sort of channel. More pronouncedly this is true in this united church whose constituency insists upon liberty with religion and in some cases would give up the latter before they would yield the former.

Folks can and do change their attitudes, hence a union in order to continue constantly must be appealing. It must not cease to attract. So, church union can never be a thing completed, tied up, labeled, locked up in archives, or finished in histories. In a sense it continues to be a question for decision as to some of its forms in each day. Therefore, even a unanimous vote can not guarantee a perfect union. It but opens the way for its realization.

It follows then that union cannot be built out of words however beautifully they may be joined together. Its structure must be of deeds. How our vocabularies have been drained to endorse and still evade it. What unmeant volumes have had it for a theme. One cannot escape the conclusion that their authors were willing to do anything for union except unite. If the printing and clerical expense incurred in this interminable waste of words could be made available for this time of depression it would be a boon to our treasuries.

It is said that Shakespeare used twenty-four thousand of the twenty-six thousand English words known in his time; that Woodrow Wilson employed fifty-three thousand from the much increased number of his day, and that now there are four hundred and two thousand English words with which to express ourselves or to keep from expressing ourselves. Already the most of these which are not unprohibited to the ecclesiastical vernacular have been used on Christian Union. An impotent vocabulary awaits additions before it can aid or avoid union. The Methodists and Presbyterians seem now to be in a state of verbal exhaustion. The Evangelicals, Reformed and United Brethren have followed a once well-marked wordy way to a blind alley of silence. The Anglicans, after years of extravagant verbosity, seem to face the necessity either of moving out their communion table or developing a new word ministry. Even the Federal Council of Churches seems to be under the same precarious necessity for inventiveness to establish its consistency. Unless these words for a united church change to deeds shortly new ones must be found or we will be inexpressibly expressionless. Words in which union is implicit need a proving by deeds to be believed.

It is axiomatic that union is more than a combination or coordination of church machinery. With ununited hearts such an effort but opens another possible source of friction. Out of the heart are the issues of a united church life.

While church union must have much and deep sentiment behind it, sentiment without a serious assumption of its every implication cannot be more than a meaningless prompting. Union is a beautiful ideal, almost anyone can fall in love with it, but it takes a muscular power and even willingness to suffer for its realization.

Recently a young pair thinking themselves to have arrived at the end of their matrimonial bonds after eight months duration came to my office for consultation. It developed that this young swain, because of that unaccountable urge of youth, was only in love with love. Incapacitated in sanity by the spell of his romance he had obligated himself to a couple of inveigling dimples and a few bewitching curls and that had tried to make the obligations thus involved only electives. He was greatly enamoured with love itself, though he carried but light sense of responsibility toward its purpose. What eight months before had seemed to be an all mastering sentiment buckled under the responsibilities of its own making. If it is ever operative men must love union not as an ideal but as a program. As a beautiful concept it can never succeed. At some points it may become a heart-breaking process, loved only because that which it brings forth is worth much more than its cost.

NOTES-PERSONALS

We are glad to present several impressions of the great Convention at Burlington, April 26th to 29th. It was a far-reaching session of the Convention, as time will prove.

If any Sunday School wishes Children's Day programs, they can secure them by ordering of J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, at 10c the copy. The programs are beautiful and appropriate, published by the Congregational Extension Society.

Her friends, and they are legion in the Southern Convention, were delighted to greet Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, our very own, who is making a contribution to church life and activity in Florida, and who has the happy faculty of combining great work and good deeds with a radiant smile and a heart of hope.

We learn with regret that Rev. J. C. Cummings, Hemp, N. C., has been quite ill for several weeks, and unable to keep up his usual pastoral duties. He is reported as better and hopes to be fully recovered and back at his many duties at an early date. Brother Cummings is a busy pastor with a large field and carries the burden of a great service and many souls.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Roanoke, Ala., preached the Commencement Sermon at Five Points High School, Chambers County, Alabama, May 1st. Brother Hunt is a very busy man with a large pastorate. He writes: "I was glad to hear a good report from the Convention and would have enjoyed the fellowship of the brethren if I could have been there. Our work here is moving slowly but peaceably."

President L. E. Smith, of Elon College, delivered an address to the young people of the Middle Atlantic Congregational and Christian Conference at Ingram Memorial Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., at 8:00 P. M., May 6th. The address was preceded by a young people's banquet in the social hall of the church, a large number of young people being present. The conference was very well attended, and Dr. Smith reports a very pleasant occasion.

A member of Rosemont Church, writing, says: "We enjoyed having Dr. W. P. Minton here." Such word comes from many churches and sections where Dr. Minton went in his recent hurried itinerary. Dr. Minton is a welcome minister in any of our pulpits in the South, as he always brings a message of hope, of progress and of power. He is a man of absolute sincerity, singleness of purpose, devoted to his church, loyal to its enterprises and giving his life to help build up the kingdom of heaven on earth through the church.

Rev. G. H. Veazey, one of our most consecrated and beloved younger men in the pastorate, writes from Roanoke, Ala., May 2nd: "My attending the Convention was a great treat to me as well as a great inspiration. I am very sorry that we could not stay until the adjournment. We had a nice trip home. We had a fine service at Cragford yesterday. We took the missionary offering. It was small, of course, but I trust God can bless it and use it. I read a statement in last week's SUN that encouraged me more than anything I have read lately: 'I do not have as much to live on, but I have as much to live for.'" That statement ought to encourage all of us to be grateful and to press forward.

Quite a number of churches have not yet sent in their Easter offerings for missions. One cannot believe any pastor this year will assume the responsibility of saying that his people shall not be given an opportunity to contribute something to missions. True, a pastor can by negligence, block the whole matter, but he has assumed an immense responsibility, since his church has asked that it be given this privilege. And this year the churches that are taking the offering are doing so through self-denial, effort, struggle, sacrifice. Such effort on the part of some should challenge every pastor and church, and those who will contribute something in each church should certainly be given a part.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell, Lakemont, N. Y., a lifelong friend and lover of Elon College, gladdened the institution and community with his presence, his preaching and lectures, May 1st to 4th, inclusive. This man of virile and versatile mind and great heart, having celebrated his 80th anniversary some months since, seems not to grow old nor weary in good works and great utterances. No man visiting the college during its history has delivered lectures that were more able, thoughtful and eloquent than has Dr. Summerbell, and his coming is always looked forward to with interest and appreciation. It is hoped that the college will have many more visits from this great man, profound thinker and eloquent preacher.

There are thousands who love Elon College and will go their full length for its welfare and progress. Although the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is not the individual to whom the money goes, he was glad, indeed, to receive a dollar for the college which he turned over at once to the business manager, but gladder still to receive this note with the dollar: "Dear Dr. Atkinson: I am sending a Dollar-a-Month card for Elon. I send one dollar for April. I am a widow and have only just so much to live on, but I can't bear to think of Elon going under. My heart just says No, No, we must save our college. God grant that she may live on to bless our boys and girls." It is such love as that throughout our Zion that will yet mean salvation to our college and send it back on its way down through future generations greater and stronger than ever.

Dr. J. H. Brooks, well-known dentist of Burlington, N. C., acquaintance and friend of THE SUN's editor and well known to many CHRISTIAN SUN readers, died suddenly at his home in Burlington, Wednesday A. M., May 4th. The funeral was conducted from the First Christian Church, Burlington, at 4:00 P. M., Thursday, the 5th, in charge of the pastor, Dr. G. O. Lankford, assisted by Dr. P. H. Fleming, former pastor and friend, and Dr. W. R. Potter, of the First Presbyterian Church. The local dentists acted as honorary pall-bearers, active pall-bearers being prominent citizens of Burlington: W. J. Graham, R. W. Malone, Raymond Barrett, W. R. Burke, Ira Summers and J. B. Walker. Dr. Brooks was a quiet, highly respected, prominent citizen of Burlington and was held in high esteem by a large circle of business friends and associates of his community.

OFFICERS AND BOARDS, SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

The Southern Christian Convention in session at Burlington, N. C., April 26th to 29th, voted to change its charter within ninety days from "Southern Christian Convention, Inc." to "Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, Inc."

It was further voted that all officers and boards of the Southern Christian Convention serving the past two years shall continue in office until the charter shall have been changed. After the charter has been changed and the Southern Christian Convention, Inc., becomes the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, Inc., the following officers and boards were elected to serve for a period of two years:

President, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell; vice-presidents, Rev. John Britton Clark, D. D., Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D.; secretary, Dr. I. W. Johnson; assistant secretaries, Dr. G. N. Edwards, Mrs. Mary A. Rollings; treasurer, Dr. W. C. Wicker (without salary).

Board of Religious Education: F. C. Lester, E. T. Holland, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Miss Priscilla Chase, C. H. Stephenson, J. F. Morgan, W. H. Baker, H. S. Hardcastle, Miss Ruth Sargeant, George Penn.

Mission Board: J. E. West, Mrs. John A. Williams, Mrs. R. T. Bradford, A. W. Andes, J. M. Darden, W. W. Staley, K. B. Johnson, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Miss Ida Robinson, G. O. Lankford.

Mission Secretary: Dr. J. O. Atkinson; associate secretary, Dr. W. Knighton Bloom.

Board of Superannuation: J. O. Atkinson, T. E. White, J. M. Fix, D. R. Fonville, Mrs. W. R. Sellars.

Executive Board: Stanley C. Harrell, W. W. Staley, C. H. Rowland, E. E. Holland, Milo J. Sweet, John Britton Clark.

Board of Education: L. E. Smith, W. W. Staley, E. L. Moffitt, H. C. Newell, E. E. Holland, F. E. Jenkins.

Board of Publications: C. H. Rowland, P. H. Fleming, N. G. Newman, Milo J. Sweet, W. T. Scott.

Delegates to the General Council: Dr. J. O. Atkinson (4 years), Rev. S. C. Harrell (4 years), Dr. L. E. Smith (2 years), Dr. J. Edward Kirby (2 years), Dr. W. W. Staley (2 years), Dr. C. H. Rowland (2 years).

I. W. JOHNSON, Sec'y.

NOTICE TO EASTERN VIRGINIA SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS.

Congregational and Christian Sunday School workers in Eastern Virginia will be interested to know that the State Council of Religious Education for Virginia is planning a one-day leadership school in Norfolk for Friday, May 27th. The Virginia Council has been conducting a three-day convention, but this year there will be no such convention. The one-day schools will be held in various parts of the State. The meeting in Norfolk will be in the Freemason Street Baptist Church, beginning at 10 o'clock in the morning, and continuing throughout the day.

Dr. Henry Edward Tralle, one of the outstanding leaders in religious education, will be the principal speaker of the day. It will be a rare treat to hear this author, teacher and lecturer speak.

Part of the afternoon session will be given over to denominational conferences. If those who have problems which they would like to have discussed will write the undersigned, it will be a pleasure to put these into our program.

It is to be hoped that pastors, superintendents, directors of religious education, teachers, Christian Endeavor workers, and all who are interested in religious education will make an effort to attend this training school on May 27th. There is no registration fee and no charge of any kind. An offering for the support of the council will be made. Here's a good opportunity to get assistance in the work which we are undertaking with but little or no cost, and our people will surely respond to the call and be present for the entire sessions.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA. Miss Pattie Lee Goghill spoke to the Woman's Society of this church on Tuesday evening, May 3rd, following her visit to the Convention at Burlington.

REV. J. E. EACH, of Thorsby, Ala., used two stereopticon mission lectures during the last quarter. As a result of continued missionary education, his United Protestant Church gives freely and fully to the glorious cause of world service.

REV. W. H. TILLMAN, of Crestview, Fla., reports the outstanding service of a quarter on his large field to have been the attendance of the Knights Templars upon a morning church service at his central point, Crestview. His rural Sunday School program has gone better than usual during the last winter season.

REV. CHARLES W. SMITH has had a happy beginning of his pastorate of the Garden City and Steppville, Mt. Grove, Alabama, Churches. He spent over a week in visiting the homes of these adjacent parishes and has now gone to south Alabama to devise plans for the rebuilding and building of church houses in that area.

MIAMI BEACH, FLORIDA. The Woman's Association of this church recently held a Tropical Tea on the spacious lawn of the residence of Mrs. Charles H. Paschall. It was a successful and delightful affair. Dr. King at a recent Sunday evening service, reviewed Maurice Hindu's great book on Russia, "Humanity Uprooted."

PILGRIM CHURCH, CHATTANOOGA, finds that a central city location attracts prospective church members and allows the church to secure more publicity for its program than could be obtained by a church in a suburban location. Some of the leading givers to the church have had the common experience of losing much of their income. In the last quarter this church added nine members to its roll and lost six by removal.

STUDENT SUMMER WORKERS are already receiving notice of their appointment to summer work by Dr. Bloom, who has been able to secure resources for this particular work which will allow over a dozen young preachers and a number of young women to aid the church program in many neighborhoods of the Southeast. These workers are continually attracting larger numbers of local young people to the beauty and glory of the Christian life.

REV. AND MRS. A. CALVIN NELSON and family were very happy in their parts in the setting apart of the new house into which they have moved as a parsonage for the Clanton, Alabama, East View Church, and the associated yoked churches. The exercises included the dedication of the study, the living room, the hearth and the dining room of the home. The work they are doing here is adding greatly to the spiritual life of the community.

REV. HELEN F. LANHAM, who has been serving as assistant pastor at the First Church, Miami, during the past year, has been made pastor of the church upon the closing of the pastorate of Dr. Robert MacDonald on the first. Dr. MacDonald has served as acting pastor of the church for three years, preaching during six months of the winter season. Mrs. Lanham has been his efficient associate in the work. Mrs.

Lanham is an ordained Congregational minister, whose previous service was in the vicinity of Chicago.

REV. W. H. H. JOYCE, of Fairfield, Fla., died suddenly on May 3rd, at Ocala. Death was due to angina pectoris. Mr. Joyce came to Florida four years ago, after a pastorate at Glenolden, Pa. He has been preaching twice a month at the church at Moss Bluff, Fla., and has rendered generous service at other points. Recently he announced his candidacy for the Superintendency of Schools of Marion County. He has been making his home with his son. Mr. Joyce was a Virginian by birth, a graduate of Randolph-Macon College and Seminary, a man of strong personality and vigorous mind and had held important pastorates.

SECRETARY W. E. ROBINSON, of the Kentucky State Christian Conference, brought the Rev. G. W. E. Wollford, president of the Conference, Rev. G. W. Renfro, chairman of the Executive Committee of this Conference, his son, John Robinson, and Rev. A. H. Langdon, who represented the Kentucky Christian Conference from Ashland, Ky., to the Southeast Convention at Burlington. The two Christian Conferences of Kentucky have been isolated for many years. The visit to Burlington and plans of the visitors to bring their Conferences into the united fellowship of the Southeast, shows that our Christian union in the Southeast is already having a strong influence.

"WHOOE, IT LOOKS LIKE BIRMINGHAM IS COMING!" was the remark of one of the Thorsby Institute boys as the motorcade of the Congregational Community Church of Birmingham appeared at the Thorsby School. It was an invasion of women, about sixty of them. They brought a few husbands along as chauffeurs. There were fifteen motor cars in the procession. The organization was the Women's Guild of the church, of which Mrs. W. C. Bonham is president. Mr. W. C. Bonham, the newly-elected trustee of the Institute, made his first visit to the school on this occasion. Needless to report in detail, Miss Helen Jenkins and her staff and the students spared no effort to entertain the visitors. A happy day was had by all, and the Woman's Guild went home and voted to raise one hundred dollars for Thorsby Institute in spite of the responsibilities which the women's organization now has.

NOTES FROM FLORIDA.

Rev. Don G. Henshaw, pastor of the Congregational Church of Coral Gables, resigned on May 1st, after a pastorate of nearly four years. Mr. Henshaw resigned in order to become a candidate for the position of Dade County Superintendent of Schools.

Mr. Henshaw was brought up in Miami, educated in the Miami schools and at first entered the Methodist ministry, holding pastorates in Tennessee and New York. In 1926 he became pastor of the North Miami Church, from which he was called to the pastorate of the Coral Gables Church. During the period of his pastorate he has been a member of the faculty of the University of Miami, and has also held high and responsible offices in different branches of the Masonic fraternity. He has also been active in radio work, having spent last summer in New York, where he took a summer course at the Union Seminary and also studied with the National Broadcasting Company. He has been active in civic affairs, and was recently awarded the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce distinguished service medal for Miami in 1931, as recognition of his participation in civic affairs. Mr. Henshaw's resignation took effect at once so that he could enter into an active campaign for the Superintendency of Schools.

"UNCLE SAM," WORLD'S LEADING EXPORTER.

Instead of having lost its foreign trade prestige, as seems to be the impression in many quarters, the United States led the world in exports in 1931.

The importance of our foreign markets to farming mining and manufacturing interests in every State of the Union is apparent from the tabulation showing the distribution of exports by States. Even in a year of profound depression and drastic price declines such as 1931, the value of our domestic exports amounted to $2,377,981,786, to which total every State and Territory contributed its share. Only six States had exports valued at less than $1,000,000, while thirty of the States exported merchandise to a value of $10,000,000, or more, and twelve of the latter did an overseas business of more than $60,000,000 each.

Germany, which displaced the United Kingdom, as second in rank, showed a value of $2,192,850,000. Exports from the United Kingdom (including reexports) reached only $2,069,823,000 in value. All other countries showed much smaller totals, France, in fourth place, attaining a value of only $1,192,516,000.

The significance of export trade to American labor is clear when one realizes that more than 1,400,000 workers, receiving more than 1½ billion dollars in wages were directly engaged in producing goods for export in 1931. Furthermore, there was probably an equal additional number employed indirectly in service activities and in supplying the needs of those engaged directly.

Many of us do not appreciate the fact that these benefits from foreign trade are by no means confined to the larger Eastern sea-coast States. Texas, for example, had larger exports than any other State except New York. Its total exports of $324,000,000 represented nearly $200,000,000 in wages paid directly to labor engaged in producing the cotton, petroleum products, wheat, flour, crude sulphur and other commodities shipped from Texas to foreign countries. As further evidence of the significance of export trade in the economy of this State, it may be noted that the value of her exports last year was more than ten times as large as the total of personal and corporate income taxes paid by Texas to the Federal Government in the last fiscal year, while the profits on trade were in excess of the total of such tax payments.

Indiana, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Iowa, Missouri and Kansas, to mention only a few of the States which are not commonly believed to be vitally concerned in foreign trade, had exports of from $10,000,000 to $30,000,000 in the depression year of 1931. In the aggregate these seven States exported goods valued at $141,000,000, the production of which is estimated to have involved the direct labor of more than 80,000 workers receiving $85,000,000 in wages.

Although the value of exports in 1931 was 37 per cent smaller than in 1930, this falling off was due in large part to the drastic price declines during the year. In actual quantity, exports declined 20 per cent, or slightly more than the decline in domestic business.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

INSTITUTIONS UNITE US.

God created man and woman as individuals. Then he instituted marriage and the home to unite them. Thus individual life began as separate and distinct entities. But it did not long remain so. It was not good for either or each to be alone. From that early hour till this good day, God has been uniting mankind for union of effort and undertaking through institutions. The only thing on earth that merges the lives of individuals, and unites them in common effort and task, is the institution. For mutual progress, salvation and power, morally and religiously, we have the church. The town with its civic government and clubs unites a community, politically and economically. The church with its Sunday School and auxiliary societies unites a community for moral and spiritual development and power. And just as local units of government make up a state and a nation, so local churches make up Associations, Conferences and Conventions that we have progress and power morally and spiritually. And in order to form a more complete and compact union these Conferences and Conventions unite in building institutions to serve large and ever-increasing numbers. This is but another way of saying that from the beginning until now institutions have been created to unite mankind, to merge the interests of mankind, and to serve mankind in a cooperative and unified manner. The only thing that ever unites people is institutions. And that is another way of saying that when we "share our mutual burdens" for institutions, we have a mutual unifying love. Institutions, from a financial point of view, are always burdens. Those who love an institution are those who bear its burdens. Those who love a church are those who share its tasks, and help bear its burdens, and its responsibilities. Churches may unite theoretically by resolutions, by adoption of preambles and constitutions. Churches do unite in fact and practice when institutions have united them, and the members thereof have got beneath the burdens and shared the responsibilities. THE CHRISTIAN SUN here in the South performed a noble task, and it is yet performing a noble task, in supplying information and in seeking to bring knowledge of our institutional life to the entire fellowship. Then came Elon College. Because of the vast outlay necessary to build and sustain the College this has required mutual burden-bearing, sharing of responsibility, self-denial that it might live. The Christian Orphanage comes along calling for benevolence and charity, and as an institution serves its purpose in uniting our benevolences. God saw fit in this way to bring his followers together by giving them institutions whose burdens they might carry and whose responsibilities they might share.

We Congregationalists and Christians will be united in fact, merged in reality, when we shall have begun in earnest to get beneath our common tasks and share the life, the efforts and the struggle of the several institutions of each communion and thus make each one ours. The institutions of Congregational and Christian Churches are here not to divide, but to unite us; not to mark us off, but to merge us. When we shall, through sacrifice and service, get beneath the burdens and the responsibilities of these institutions, and through this getting together learn to love them, we shall then be one. The fundamental institution of unity on earth is the home, and the reason we love the home supremely is because it entails upon us mutual burden-bearing, constant care, loving protection and sacrificial service. The home is God's great institution for laying the foundations of union between individuals and of merging completely the hearts and lives of individuals in and through an institution. And thus the home becomes a "sweet old burden," a "dear and blessed burden," a burden which transfigured through love becomes our chief blessing. So institutions, which on the one hand seem to be a burden, were created of our Lord for our benefit and our blessings, as we share the burdens of the institutions, shoulder the responsibility of the institutions, and thus unite our thinking, our feeling and our devotion through and for institutions.

Yes, the one soul agency of union on this earth is the institution. God created institutions that through their mutual burden there might be a mutual love.

THE GARDEN CLUBS.

One of the very hopeful and encouraging "signs of the times" is the rapidly increasing number of Garden Clubs, both in the city and rural districts of the South. One does well to remember that God planted a garden, and with his hand of love led in the divine example of cultivating color and caring for the beautiful. God loves color, or he would never have made such an infinite variety of it. Maybe it is more accurate to say that God is love, and love reveals itself and displays its disposition as well as its glory, through the delicacy and delights of color. Surely the love of our God is spread out before us in a riot of color that now rejoices the heart, stirs the emotions and greets the eye on every hand. Our growing Garden Clubs reveal the fact that there is constantly increasing cooperation of those who care for the beautiful, and have a concern for the glory of color, and the rich fragrance of buds and flowers. This materialistic civilization, this utilitarian age, which has been declared to have no taste or time for poetry, does well to prove through its Garden Clubs that it does have both taste and time to care for the divine harmony of color, and to cultivate love for the unselfish message of growing plants, whose one mission is to reveal God in the beauty of color and the joy of fragrance.

Our increasing interest in Garden Clubs is only an evidence of our individual love for beauty in variety of color. This glorious spring has displayed the radiance of God's earth in a most marked and marvelous manner, and this display serves as a challenge to man to make perfect that which God had made possible and is making possible, through the goodness and the bounty of his own love. God no more made an American Beauty Rose than he made a railroad or a locomotive. He no more made a purple Iris than he stretched a steel bridge across a flowing river. But he made all these possible, and placed in man the power to bring them to perfection. One may get consolation in the thought, and not be far wrong in the declaration, that God made the possibilities and then challenged man to make the realities, or to accept the Scriptural way of saying it: "In the beginning God created the earth," and then delegated to man the power to keep on, and on, and on, in bringing to perfection the things he had created. Some one has said, "He is a benefactor who makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before." Likewise, our Garden Clubs are benefactors because they make two flowers bloom and two roses blush where only one inadequately grew and poorly blushed but little before. God planted a garden in Eden and thus invited man to dress the earth and to keep it, to be co-workers with him in beautifying creation, and in adorning this earth wherein we live for a season, and then pass out to meet and, if deemed worthy, to live with the original, the one good and perfect Gardener.

HOW TO INCREASE SUBSCRIBERS TO THE SUN.

Like all other public servants THE CHRISTIAN SUN is financially in need of better support. The Southern Christian Convention is responsible for any deficit in receipts to pay the expense of conducting the weekly issue of THE SUN. Almost any plan is good, if it is put into active operation; and no plan is good that is not put into active service. The plan this editorial suggests is not official, but a suggestion that could be easily worked and might produce good results. It is that each present subscriber who reads THE SUN, get some other person to subscribe for the paper. That would double the present subscription list, and a double number would meet the financial obligations of THE SUN.

This suggestion is simple, it is practical, and there is no other way that the subscription list could be so easily doubled. It would cost no present subscriber any money, and it might make personal friends and friends for the church. The fact is, that personal work is the most lacking and the most needed of anything else in the church. The paper is only $2.00 a year, and very few people are unable to pay that sum for a whole year. Do not let readers say that is a good plan; and then do nothing more; but let each subscriber think of some one and talk with that one about the value of a subscriber to THE SUN, and the value of the paper to the family and the readers of THE SUN.

This is a good time to begin that personal work which would do two things. It would put THE SUN in good financial condition and it would do much good for the churches, because regular readers of THE SUN are regular workers in the local church and her active organizations. Personal work is a great value anywhere, but it is especially valuable in church relations.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE BURLINGTON CONVENTION.

DR. I. W. JOHNSON.

The recent session of the Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, held in conjunction with the first session of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, which met in Burlington, N. C., April 26th to 29th, was inspiring and forward-looking. It has been my privilege to be secretary of this Convention for twenty-two years—or for eleven of the thirty regular session. This Convention was called upon to consider two outstanding problems, viz: the support of Elon College and the Union of Congregational and Christian Churches in the Southeast.

Both of these problems had reached a stage where the combined wisdom and consecration of many people were needed in the Convention. Elon College has done much to develop the leadership of the Convention. It faces a financial crisis. The Convention expressed its loyalty and faith by adopting plans for increased financial support. The future is hopeful. But the situation calls for united financial sacrifice.

One of the most challenging matters ever brought to the attention of the Convention was the Union of the two denominations. The first approach to this step was made some years ago. The first steps were easy and enthusiastic. These were the days of romance. The courting days were rich in fervor and mutual expressions of love and admiration. Resolutions pertaining to union were passed with great enthusiasm in previous sessions. But as the time approached for the marriage—the real Union—Committees and Convention Boards became serious-minded. No objections were heard, but difficulties were discovered.

The Congregational Churches in the Southeast are so organized that no property is owned by the Advisory Board, which corresponds in some respects to the Southern Christian Convention. The Southern Christian Convention is incorporated and owns property. How could these two different types of organization be united? The delegates and visitors of both groups faced these difficulties prayerfully with open minds. It seems to me that the terms of union and cooperation provided for by this Convention were in advance of the plans adopted by the Seattle session of the General Council and the American Christian Convention. When the Boards and Committees charged with working out all the details have completed their work, the progress made will be amazing.

The Convention was well attended. The spirit and fellowship revealed a promise of a larger faith. All Boards and Committees did their work well. The Committee on Union had many meetings and every meeting was inspiring in the spirit of fellowship and good-will. It was good to be there.

Suffolk, Va.

DR. W. KNIGHTON BLOOM.

The Burlington, N. C., gathering will stand out not only in the Southeast, but throughout the entire country as one of the epoch-making events in the history of Christian thinking, constructive action, and splendid fellowship. The three organizations representing two church groups, reached the point of complete unification, because they were joined together in spirit and purpose before they started for the common meeting place. It was a great gathering because of the great ideal that has been faced for two years.

When people dedicate themselves to the leadership of the Eternal Spirit in a great adventure, something happens. Hence, when we met in a united session there were at once evidences of clarity of vision; a new sense of energy; a stimulating enthusiasm; the progressive urge at the very heart of things. Faith and courage, the two essentials for every great venture, were present in abundance, and consecrated leadership was not lacking.

To the forefront was the challenge: Does that which we have our hearts set on give promise of making life better? Is the end we have in view worthy of the effort involved in its achievement? Have we before us a goal that affords a powerful incentive for highest endeavor, and worthy of our supreme devotion? And with one accord we went on record as being in glad and constructive agreement.

The Convention sessions were representative of the best in personnel, age and message. Those of riper years gave of their experience; those in the middle stages of life were eager to plan for larger things; youth glowing with eagerness, was ready to take its place in glad and inspiring service. All clearly recognized that the task was not yet done; that it was too far from the summit of life to grow weary in well doing. Just ahead was the new and larger vision; and the eager urge to face it all was thrilling.

Perhaps it is a good thing for our united church that the times bristle with difficulties that should be seized upon as opportunities. Standing in the critical stage between the old and the new in religious belief and practice, we on our quest, can wield such powers as no generation of the past ever possessed. The situation is one that calls for heroic effort to make good our possibilities, by achieving a basis of unity and laying a great foundation for the future guidance and helpfulness of a tragically divided Christian world. It is for us to a greater degree than before, to lead the way.

The Burlington days of 1932 were those of a great and lasting fellowship, one that will deepen every life interest; a fellowship fair and gladdening; ever drawing us nearer to the Central Heart; a fellowship not only bringing lives into touch, but weaving them into the conscious unity of one life; a fellowship of affection and service that will enter many channels of human helpfulness and become increasingly the gracious influence our world needs.

Thus Burlington united us in a bond that made the Convention days glad ones and sent us out together. For, using words the writer sometimes includes in a wedding service: "God does indeed join people together; by walks together, by great books, great music, great fellowship; by the precious gift of high comradeship, by mutual appreciation of all things beautiful and true and noble; by joy in the present and wistful hope that the years ahead may be very numerous and slow of passing; by memories that will grow dear and yet more dear; by ways such as these God does join people together."

Washington, D. C.

DR. J. EDWARD KIRBYE.

The meeting at Burlington was for me the most significant of all our conferences for Christian Union. The romantic days are over. The days of lifting loads, and facing our problems are here in both inspiring and discouraging aspects. The spirit was wonderful and Christ was near us all; and above our difficulties the radiance and glory of the transformed life led us on. In such an atmosphere unity could not fail. Conference boundaries, or preferments, sink into insignificance when Christian men and women seek to conserve all values and reach out toward the larger life. I have had no fears for it seemed to me that all our people sooner or later must realize that we were engaged in the greatest spiritual venture since Protestantism arose, and we were carrying unity in larger numbers forward than had ever been done; and for us to fail would be disloyalty to Christ. It was a wonderful meeting and my own spirit was pledged anew in devotion to our United Church.

REV. J. F. MORGAN.

The Convention at Burlington, was one of our busiest, and I think, perhaps, one of our best. The spirit of the entire session was especially fine, considering the heavy financial burden, in connection with Elon College, under which we labored.

Of course, the old family fellowship that has existed for so many years in the Southern Christian Convention, was largely replaced with our new interest in the incoming bride, Miss Congregationalist, but her coming brought a sweetening flavor to the process of change, and the work of the larger fellowship will result in greater blessing, and in larger usefulness in the interest of the Kingdom of our Lord, if each of us will remain true to the other, and both remain true to our Master. So may each of the fellowships say to the other in the language of the Psalmist: "O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together."

If in the future we shall be as eager to please our Master as we have been to please each other during our process of union, our journey together will be one of usefulness and great joy.

The addresses delivered during the Convention and the work of the officers and the committees, are most highly commended, and are greatly appreciated. No convention, in my opinion, ever worked harder to do the right thing in the right way.

R. 3, Norfolk, Va.

MRS. C. H. ROWLAND.

Despite the unsettled condition of the world at large, and the nervousness attending these days in which we live, we turned homeward from the Convention of last week with a greater faith in God, a greater appreciation of the value of Christian fellowship and a deeper sense of the tremendous need "to keep on holding on." We feel that a milestone was reached in the interest of Christian Union when the two denominations came together in a united program. It seemed to me that the great task before us just now is the saving of Elon College, and it must be given the right of way in our giving and thinking, for a time, if this is to be done. A fitting climax was the gathering of the young people for the closing hours of the Convention—inspiring and promising was the effect of their presence. It was a great Convention.

WHAT A WORLD.

Joy is like the ripples
Of a singing brook,
Happy in the sunshine
Or in the shady nook,
Smiling through the valley,
Laughing down the hill—
What a world if such a joy
Could every bosom fill!

Love is like an ocean,
Fathomless and broad,
Flowing to the humblest
From the heart of God.
Bathing in its bosom,
Millions have been blest:
What a world if God's sweet love
Filled every human breast!

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Thirtieth Session of the Southern Christian Convention was held in the Burlington Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., April 26th to 29th. A large attendance of ministers of the Congregational Churches of the Southeast attended and the fellowship seemed to be spiritual as well as fraternal. The subject of union seemed to be uppermost in the minds of the speakers, and many speeches presented many phases of the situation and many suggestions to make the union real. One of the major questions to solve is the difference between the two denominations in their organic relations. The Christian Church is an organized body, as a church; the Congregational denomination is spoken of as churches, and not as a church. How to unite these two branches, or denominations, into one organic body, is a difficult problem.

Public discussions and committee meetings failed to solve the problem, and it is still in the process of solution. The steps so far seem to indicate the joining of one body to the other rather than union. Union is based on the absolute surrender of individual preferences to a common position. In fact, unity is more important than union. In the prayer of Jesus (John 17:21), "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

Unity, and not uniformity, is what Jesus seems to have expressed in his prayer for his people. Unity is a spiritual condition and not a formal union. These two denominations are seeking a spiritual unity through formal union. The idea sought and expressed seems to be organic union which is only the outward expression of spiritual unity. It is easier to realize spiritual unity than organic uniformity. The Christian Church is not sectarian, but a member of the church of which Christ is the head. All denominations in speaking of believers or the church, use the phrase, Christian, or Christian Church. It is the common name used in expressing the relation of men to Jesus Christ. Congregational is a term that separates from all other denominational relations. Now, the problem, in this merger, is to find a term that will express the unity between these two bodies in a single phrase that will leave out any sectarian meaning and really set an example for other religious bodies without claiming any special honor for the two bodies. The name Congregational will have to be eliminated from the new name to make the name complete. What is now called union will have to go further than it has gone in order to help answer the prayer of Jesus; and it will require more prayers and less argument to reach that spiritual goal.

The two denominations are on the right road, but all self-importance will have to be left out of the thought of both denominations before complete unity in spiritual cooperation can be a reality in Christian activity. The union, so-called, of these two bodies will mean little if it goes no further than sweet fellowship and fraternity between themselves. It must express itself in such spiritual surrender to Christ that other denominations will feel the power of the great movement and be inclined to practice the same kind of oneness. There is a great work for the forward step in helping to make the Kingdom one for the salvation of the world. A divided church can never save the world and enthrone the Prince of Peace in the kingdom of warless nations.

W. W. STALEY,

DANVILLE, VA.

Dr. McKendree Long, of Statesville, N. C., a Presbyterian minister and a son of the late Judge Long, of North Carolina, came to us on March 20th. He stayed with us for three weeks, giving one of the greatest meetings ever held in the Third Avenue Christian Church. Dr. Long insisted on the parish being divided into four groups and each group holding a prayer meeting each afternoon, beginning one week before the meeting and going through the entire meeting. As a result during the first week, thirty different prayer meetings were held, one at 7:00 in the morning, and one at 7:00 in the evening. The messages were born out of a great love for God and humanity, being spoken plainly, yet with the deepest love for lost souls. His messages soon stirred the church as never before, and the power of the Holy Spirit was felt in an old-fashioned manner. Soon the altar was filled, and overflowing crowds gathered at the church, and sinners were saved in large numbers and the cold and indifferent church members were laying themselves on the altar for service to God through new profession in Christ. Testimonies soon rang out and the community was stirred as never before.

It would be well to here give some of the results of the meeting, which will better tell the kind of revival we had. Eighty members were added to the church, seventy-five to the tithing group, six hundred out of the community made profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The offerings have increased about $20.00 a Sunday. Each night of the week and every other afternoon in the week, an evangelistic group of men, women or boys and girls are going out and holding service, and souls are being saved in great numbers. Each Friday morning at 7:00 o'clock, the women gather in large numbers at the church for a prayer service for the pastor, the church and its work. The evangelistic groups are making arrangements to open a mission in one of the more needy sections of the city. The Wednesday evening prayer group has gone from seventy-five before the meeting to over two hundred. It can be well said that one of the greatest meetings ever held in this section has been brought to us through this great man of God.

May we just say a word in regard to our Second Quarterly Conference, which was held April 27th. The conference was attended by two hundred of the members and great interest was shown. The treasurer reported a gain of $240.00 for the first half of the year, above all expenditures, or a balance, with all bills paid, of $444.00. The Sunday School Superintendent showed a gain of one hundred and twenty in average attendance and the secretary of the church revealed that one hundred and two members had been added to the church in the past half year. The church has unanimously voted to take one-tenth of its income and give to the poor and needy of the church, and community. Well, we have been preaching tithing to the members, and we are glad to know that the church has begun tithing.

A GREAT OCCASION.

The Golden Wedding of Brother and Sister J. J. Williamson, of Mecklenburg County, Va., was celebrated at the home of their eldest son, W. P. Williamson, near Buffalo Springs, on Sunday, April 10, 1932.

The four sons, W. P., Wesley, Chesley and Hesley, ten grandchildren, a number of relatives and friends assembled to give congratulations, and rejoice with the couple, who have enjoyed the companionship of each other for fifty years, and to partake of the excellent dinner served from 1:30 to 4:15 P. M.

It was my delight to drive down after morning services and spend a few hours sharing with others the pleasure of the occasion. Brother Williamson and his four sons are among the best and most prosperous farmers of the Buffalo section. For years he has been a leader in Hebron Christian Church. A man of few words, but whose judgment is valued both in secular and church affairs. Sister Williamson has been a real helper in all his affairs extending over a half century. Their faces beamed with delight on the occasion of their 50th anniversary. And why should they not be happy? By the strictest industry and integrity they have long since become prosperously independent. They provided well for their household, lived to see each child a successful farmer, active in church work and a liberal contributor to the enterprises of the Kingdom. Each year, one or more of their grandchildren complete high school and college work.

As pastor for more than fifteen years of the different branches of the Williamson family, I have been so often impressed with the beauty of the devotion of parents for their children and of children for parents. My prayer is that Brother and Sister Williamson may have years of activity and continued usefulness, and when the summons comes, it may be to come up higher where family circles can never be broken.

ELON DOLLAR-A-MONTH CLUB.

A little more than a month has passed since the Dollar-a-Month Club for Elon College was launched by the Alumni Association. There has been a very good response to this appeal considering the fact that no organized effort has been made to enroll members in the Club. To date we have enrolled 91 members in the Club.

Mr. M. L. Patrick issued a challenge to the friends of the church and college on behalf of the Alumni Association, proposing that the Alumni of the college would sign one member to every four enrolled by the church and friends of the college. He feels that it is possible for the Alumni to enroll at least 1,000 members in the Club and that, if the church would match this $1,000 with $4,000, this would mean a $5,000 monthly income for the college, or a total of $60,000 for the year, which would equal a $1,000,000 endowment. I know that there are 5,000 people in the Christian Church in the South and the Alumni of the college who would give a dollar a month without very much sacrifice. Hadn't you rather give this amount than to see the college suffer?

The following were enrolled during the past week:

Mrs. Alma N. Young, Vernon, Ala.....	$1.00
Mrs. Annie Lee Gardner Gay, Franklin, Va.	1.00
Mrs. F. A. Hattman, Coleridge, N. C.....	1.00
Frank S. Castor, Elon College, N. C.....	1.00

Read the list—fill out the blank below—clip it—attach a dollar bill and mail it to the office at Elon College. This will mean that you are a member.

MAKING CHURCH UNION EFFICIENT.

As I conceive it such a union as ours must derive its abiding quality from three great impulses: 1. A great passion of the heart derived from a love that will not be denied and rejoices that it is counted worthy even to suffer in a great cause if need be. It is not enough that these two churches are alike mechanically; each with an absolutely democratic government, each granting the widest latitude in individual faith and anatomy in local church government. Excess in any one of these may spoil any union. Yet we hasten to say that, with our concord in so many points like these, if we cannot build a successful union who can hope to? 2. An irresistible ambition to achieve a greater work for the Kingdom of God on earth. The mutual strengthening, wider extension and greater efficiency which our coming together should insure will make a larger contribution to all good than would be possible if we remained apart. 3. A more complete fulfillment of the will of God. If, in these things we are thinking correctly, Union is much more than just a convenience, the gratification of personal preferences, mere expense reducing measure or something "worth trying out." It is a Christian duty carrying the same obligation as any other Christian duty.

From these observations it follows that whether church union is either an easier or a harder way is negligible. The regulating consideration is whether it is the right way. In the beginning at least it is the more difficult way. Christian duties were never determined by the ease with which they might be done. It would have been less bother to have remained as we were. Momentum and trackage would have been our help in a difficult time. Adjusting old methods to a new order involves confusion, but Christianity has had to do just that thing in quite every step of its progress. Difficulties are the very things for which Christian men and women are made faithful. An adequate reason for our being on earth is difficult to discover unless through us some changes very hard to make are effected.

No one wants to but if we did we cannot now turn back. Our hand is already on the plow. If we look back we are not fit for this new Kingdom of God. The whole union question between us has gone beyond the point of personal preferences to a many-sided obligation and a universal responsibility. The success of both former churches, perhaps their mission in part, is now in making the union a success. Our denominational respectability is involved. Neither per se is to derive an institutional advantage from the other. Neither is to become a burden upon the other. The great glory of our relationship will be that each is generous, helpful and unselfish toward the other. Neither desires to absorb the other and each, everywhere, should studiously see to it that no such impression is possible even to a flaw-hunting world.

It seems to have been God's way to get his church to commit itself to certain ideals in great surges of impulse, then later to let them encounter the unexpected and sometimes unending difficulties necessary to their realization. Willingness and ability to do the difficult is the test of the depth and genuineness of impulse. Some, when their own shibboleths are no longer spoken, or their plans superceded, or their personalities eclipsed, turn back. Rather than bother with adjustments and concessions they detach themselves from the whole movement becoming its critics rather than its friends.

It may stimulate our optimism to be reminded that scarcely could we have inaugurated a movement like ours in a more difficult time. We have encountered the collapse of business confidence, the congealing of funds, the reduction of giving and the psychology affecting spiritual attitudes and weakening concentration on the things of religion. There follows a depression more inclusive than that of material things.

We cannot do immediately all that is necessary to make our union a success but we can accept and commit ourselves to every feature of the Seattle set-up. We can begin working toward them at once and realize them in their entirety as rapidly as possible. Under this new impetus we should aim at cohesion of spirit and a concert of action more complete than either group has had separately. The preservation and perpetuation of any denominational peculiarity or custom in the joint organization is far less important than the creation of a strong testimony for a united church in this country. A world will apply every possible scrutiny, offer every objection and we must prove unmistakably the value and success of this effort together. Regulated by our own inner endorsement or opposition to them, we estimate movements by either their virtues or their vices, their strength or their weaknesses, their ideals or their difficulties.

The combined new church will never fit into the sentiments of some as did the old. To others, particularly the younger, it will be more satisfactory. Neither of these considerations is of greatest importance. The value of our union to the whole Kingdom of God takes precedence over these minor personal considerations. The only way we can stand together is by standing for some things in each other or in the plan which we do not like.

To us falls the difficult task of preserving denominational momentum and at the same time of changing its direction. Churches are historically minded. Sentiment binds us to the past. Both of us have had great histories and we have not let the world remain unmindful of them. There were Pilgrims and we are their descendants. There were James O'Kelly, Abner Jones and Barton W. Stone, liberators from the tyranny of man-made creeds, and they were "our folks." Our relationship to these bears no real significance to present-day tasks. Our credentials are not from history. They are from function. Our right to institutional life does not rest upon what our predecessors have done but upon what we are doing. The world has had a constant supply of

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Our loving Father, thou gavest to man a world of beauty. Sin veils its loveliness. By Satan's hand difficulty and distress abound. In mercy, Father, hasten the day when comfort and gladness shall fill the earth; when avenues of woe shall become channels of holy acclaim. Thine is the power, ours the part of faith and works. May we ever remember that when these are finished, with the swiftness of lightning Satan shall fall to utter destruction. Make our strivings pure. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

IS OUR MISSION PROGRAM ADEQUATE?

Many in the Christian Church are asking if we have here in the South an adequate missionary program? There are at present only four parts of this program:

1. The annual offering at or about Easter time through the churches.
2. The once-a-month offering through the Sunday Schools.
3. The offerings through the Woman's Missionary Societies.
4. Gifts from individuals.

These four parts make up the whole program for our missionary giving to the support of the work. The only hope of the church, therefore, is the annual offering at or about Easter. Strange as it may seem, many churches are not taking this one offering, and in the act are saying that we, as a church, give nothing to missions. The churches that do not take the offering make no contribution to missions. Think of a church with 100 members, 200 members, taking no missionary offering during the year, and many of them that do take it contribute from $10.00 to $15.00. Again we ask, is our present missionary program adequate?

It could be made adequate if church secretaries would see to it that envelopes in the spring are distributed and pastors would see to it that they are collected on a Sunday between March 1st and June 30th. This is an important event in our church life, for a church makes progress in this world only as it is missionary. God has never yet let a non-missionary church, or anti-missionary church grow. He can't. He laid on the church, through his Son, the Great Commission, and when the church fails to obey that spiritual command, it loses spiritual power and has little life left for any cause. Surely, this year every church will, at least, take the offering and give a few in the church, who are willing to deny themselves for their Lord, an opportunity to contribute something.

Mission Sec'y.

THE PERFECT PLAN.

(Address of Mrs. J. A. Williams, President, before the Woman's Convention and the Southern Christian Convention, at Burlington, N. C., April, 27, 1932.):

No plan that human beings may adopt is perfect. Yet perfection is an ideal to be striven for, and the Good Book enjoins us, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect." And Paul gives us a noble example, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling."

Never in the history of the church has there been stronger challenge, or a more inviting opportunity, to go forward toward the perfect plan than we have at present. "Forward," has ever been the watchword of the church, especially in times of confusion and doubt. When the Israelites were uncertain and even at their wits end, we are told that the Word of the Lord came to Moses, saying: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." So now we should seek to adopt the most perfect plans possible and those by and through which we may go forward. Now, indeed, is the time to renew our allegiance to Jesus Christ and the kingdom that he is establishing in the world.

One of the most inspiring incidents of church history, and to speak intimately and personally of our own history in the Southern Christian Convention, is the activity of our women and the things they have accomplished during the few brief years of their organized activity. It has only been a little over a century since the first Woman's Missionary Society of any church was organized, and it was called the "Penny Society," because the dues were to be a penny and the donations were to be in pennies. When that Society was organized, there was hardly a woman in all our land and country that would lead in public prayer, or could be called upon to express the petitions of the heart to God even in the presence of a few other women. The first Woman's Society to be organized was almost against the protest of the pastor of the church, who, himself, advised the men that one of them be present at this meeting of the women so that one might, when the time came, lead in public prayer. For, said this pastor, "If one woman leads in public prayer in one of our churches, the Good Lord only knows what will come of it and what will happen next." That pastor spoke better than he knew, and very great things have come of it, and are coming of it.

We are here today to talk about plans more perfect and to see how we may direct our energy and activities so as to render the larger service in the kingdom of our Lord. It has only been a very brief season, in fact within the life-time and memory of all of us, since the first Woman's Missionary Society was organized in the Southern Christian Convention. As one thinks over these things, one thrills at the way which our women have led on and pressed forward. It has been our aim, and is our aim, not to make plans of our own, but to inquire what is the plan that our Lord would have us adopt and what programs would he have us follow? Our God is marching on and the greater conquest yet to be achieved must come under his leadership. Instead of these days of financial uncertainty bringing us difficulties and obstacles, they are a challenge to us, because our Lord himself adopts the plan carrying on his kingdom in the world through self-denial. His call today is to go forward.

The greatest trouble with the church—with our own particular part of the church, the Christian Church—is not that we have recently come upon a time of depression, but that we have been and still are indifferent to the great challenge of Missions, and the great call of our Christ to go forth in his name, bearing witness of him at home and abroad. This indifference has paralyzed us. Ignorance and prejudice have weighted us down. Unwillingness to see and to sacrifice has held us back. It is true some brave souls of our women in the past have pressed forward into the gloom and have pushed the battlefield on to victory, even when the way was dark and the outcome doubtful. Out of the efforts of these courageous hearts, we see some light, for there is an increase in Missionary Societies and an increase in numbers of those enlisted, and we are holding our own in contributions. This is an earnest of what we may do if we have the courage to say with Paul: "We walk by faith, not by sight." If the first word of the perfect plan is "Forward," the second word is "Faith"—Forward through Faith. In an age when the emphasis is being placed upon the physical and the material and the scientific, there is a disposition to change the words of Scripture and say, "We will walk only by sight." But when we walk by sight, we soon come to live in the darkness, for the night cometh and clouds obscure the light, and the pathway grows dim and impossible. The way of courage is the way of faith—Forward through Faith. Our Lord planted and instituted the whole missionary program that he might challenge the faith of man and at the same time create faith in men and women. Ours, indeed, is a poor commonplace world without faith. The only way that this world is lifted from a lowly level of doubt, darkness and gloom is through the courage of an undying faith. David Livingstone had a faith that refused to be conquered and enabled him in the darkest hour to say, "I will go anywhere, so it is forward." If the kingdoms of this earth are ever to be made the Kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, the work will be done, the task accomplished, by going forward through faith.

In this time of doubt and depression there seems to be no let-up of crime, lawlessness and disregard for all the humanities. Murder, kidnapping, embezzlement, bribery, bootlegging, sin in high places in low, walk abroad and cause us to hang our heads in shame. If we had done our duty, been obedient to our Lord in carrying out his commission, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and, lo, I am with you alway," history would be telling a different story, and our present time would be writing a different page. Forward through Faith, obeying the Great Commission of our Lord, will solve the world's problems and bring peace to the world's burdened and troubled heart.

The third word in our perfect plan is "Christ." Forward through Faith in Christ, that his glory may be revealed in us and that the power of his life may be made manifest and operative in the hearts and lives of men and women everywhere.

If we accept the plan Jesus laid down for us, we realize as he did, that we live in a universe created and governed by a Person, and this Person is at heart the very embodiment of Love. Love can lift the world's burdens, but it is a love that is more than human. It requires divine love, infinite and boundless love, and this love of the Father his Son has revealed to us, and when through love he had conquered all the hosts and foes of the world and the flesh, he himself said, "Go tell the nations, all the nations of men, go preach to them the gospel of the life and love, and, lo, I am with you unto the end. The nations may be indifferent to this command of love and may prefer force of arms and the destruction of war to the message of life and the Prince of Peace, but they do so to their great sorrow.

Each missionary plea, every missionary dollar, every missionary effort is in behalf of the program of the Prince of Peace, that, through him the world may have peace and not war, plenty and not poverty. The perfect plan involves then another word: Forward through Faith in Christ that his message may be told to all the world. Our Lord said that "He must be about his Father's business," and Jesus meant business when he told us to go into all the world and preach his gospel to every creature. This is the chief business of the Christian world, and this is the business to which we are called and challenged in a time like this. To this royal task we should bring all the business genius of the age, all the power of the almighty dollar and all the wisdom that the goodness and grace of God may give us. In our missionary effort, we are called upon to do business for God and to do business with God.

And Jesus has given the plan of such a business. It is not the plan of the world; it is not the plan of big business and bankers and corporations; it is not the plan of politicians and governments. It is the simple plan of self-denial. And he said unto them, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me." So our Lord has told us how his plan for saving the world may be financed. We shall have to finance it that way. It may seem slow and crude and impossible, and yet it is the way our Lord chose to finance the best, the boldest and the biggest business ever undertaken by man.

The perfect plan then involves another word—"Forward through Faith in Christ in giving his message to the world through Self-Denial." There is not any other plan like this, and this will be found the all-sufficient plan. The perfect plan involves five words: Forward, Faith, Christ, Message, Self-Denial. "Forward through Faith in Christ to give his Message to all the world through Self-Denial." That is the perfect plan and the only one which will work. And we are called upon to work that perfect plan in and through him. And so in the perfect plan we become co-workers with our Lord in building up his kingdom in all the world.

LETTER FROM JAPAN.

Kobe College, Kobe, Japan,
January 25, 1932.

Dear Friends:

It's high time I got busy and wrote a letter to you all, isn't it? I haven't the nerve to count up the time since I received messages from some of you, and so I hardly know where to begin with my "journal." May I ask your forgiveness and forbearance again for writing this sort of letter, when I know you all deserve a real honest-to-goodness personal letter?

I want to tell you all I can about my work, my affairs, and the things that are going on out here, and if my letter grows too long and tiresome, just cut out the places you think are not interesting. Perhaps it will be easier to begin with the present and work backward. Today, being Sunday, I went to church to teach my Bible class. I haven't such a large class, but the members have been very faithful in attending and so we have good times together. We have just begun a new course on World Friendship, a topic that ought to be very appropriate these days, don't you think? The students chose it themselves, and so I know they are interested. Two of the members are Koreans, the rest are Japanese young men and women, and since I'm an American, we have rather an international group to start with. Just before Christmas, two of the young men joined the church.

Ever since September I have been more than busy, but feeling ever so much better and enjoying my work more than I ever have. Since the beginning of this term I have been averaging twenty-five hours of teaching. Last year I thought I was as busy as I could be with only sixteen or seventeen hours. My work is unusually heavy just now because Miss Mary Stowe is home on furlough, and I'm taking a great deal of her work. Then too, this term is fuller than usual because I have the graduating classes of the college visiting me, and that means getting out detailed lesson plans and having them mimeographed to give to the girls in advance, and it also means an extra period for discussing the lessons with them after the teaching. I love this type of work, but I really haven't the time to do it properly. Some of the college teachers (Japanese) were quite shocked to learn that we were having the girls criticize our work, and strenuously objected to having anything like that happen in the Junior College, as had been planned. The idea of a student criticizing her teacher was unheard of in Japan, and would be bad for the morale of the school, so they thought and said.

Graduation time will soon be upon us, and that means extra work in more ways than one. For instance, we American teachers entertain all of the five graduation classes, beginning festivities next week. Then too, I am teaching special classes just in order to help some of the weaker students who have almost "fallen into the pit," but I am more than pleased to do this if the girls will only do their part to help themselves, and I'm convinced that they really are putting their best into their work now. I am giving one of the poorest girls two extra hours per week, and last Saturday her mother came to thank me, and tell me what a change the girl has made. She says she studies most of her time now, and she never knew her to study before. I guess I succeeded in persuading the girl that I would not pass her unless she did the work.

During this past week we have been having our Week of Prayer and special religious services. The girls have been receiving religious instruction all the year through, in their Bible classes, chapel, and in the different religious organizations, and it is thought wise to have a special time for focusing the minds of the girls on things spiritual, and give them a chance to think over some of the things that have come into their minds and hearts throughout the year. Teachers, as well as students, make ready for the time of prayer. Practically all of the teachers here at Kobe College are Christians, and naturally they take a deep interest in the spiritual welfare of the girls. Last week a long chapel period was given over to one of the pastors who teaches in this school. I hope the girls got more out of it than I did. His speech was much too rapid and too abstract for me to understand. The Week of Prayer really began this week on Monday. The chapel services for the Academy and College were held separately the first three days. Rev. Hasegawa, a very earnest Kumiai (Congregational-Christian) pastor and evangelist, took charge of the work in the Academy, and Rev. Hatanaka, pastor of the big Osaka church, spoke for the College. Both men are very earnest and eloquent, and I believe they made a deep impression on many of the girls. In the afternoon these men gave private conferences to any of the girls who desired to talk with them. Both men felt that these conferences were very much worth-while, and Rev. Hatanaka took his last chapel period to clear up some of the points on which the girls were being troubled. Rev. Hasegawa, in his conference with the smaller girls, was able to touch their hearts very deeply, and he thinks that some have made a profound change. On Thursday, no regular classes were held. Dr. Chiba, a very earnest Christian, and president of a large Christian school, was the speaker on Thursday. He gave them a very quiet, sensible talk. I do not know yet how many of the girls have made a definite decision to be baptized, but I feel that most of them were helped.

Our Kobe College girls are developing quite a "social consciousness." In December, they observed Golden Rule Day, and ate very meager lunches, then made a contribution of 26 Yen to a fund for helping to feed the poor children of the city. In the fall our Y. W. girls and the Girl Reserves held an ice cream sale and earned 30 Yen, which they sent to the Chinese Y. W. for flood relief. In December, the students and the teachers gave 132 Yen toward the Manchurian relief. They sent the money to a Japanese pastor in Mukden for the relief of Korean farmers and for injured soldiers. On Thanksgiving Day the girls brought fruit, vegetables, or money as gifts to Dr. Kagawa's "Jesus Band," an organization for helping in the slums of Kobe. They also brought some old clothes for the poor. Our smallest girls make up the Christian Endeavor Society made twenty-two padded vests and as many pairs of woolen socks for some of the inmates of the Old Folks' Home. They took their gifts over and then held a program for the benefit of the old people. One of the old ladies was so pleased that she gave a little dance, much to

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

GREETINGS FROM NEW EDITOR.

At the recent meeting of Youth Fellowship in Burlington, N. C., a new editor of this page was elected. Miss Jewell Truitt felt that with her other duties she could no longer continue as editor. It was agreed that she had done a fine piece of work and that the work should be continued.

The new editor takes up the task neither because he has the time to put into it nor because he has the ability to do what should be done, but only because he was requested to do so by the group in Burlington, and he feels that there is something that can be done to help young people throughout the Southeast in accomplishing their Christian task. Suggestions will be welcomed at all times. Information concerning work which is being done and plans for young people's work are eagerly solicited.

Notes on Christian Endeavor will be continued, if that is desired. If those who wish these notes will write to the editor of this page stating their desire for the notes, it will help him to know whether to use that much time and space. If you want the notes, say so.

And now, young people of Congregational and Christian Churches of the Southeast, let's join hands in Christian service. I shall be glad to make any possible contribution to your personal development and the work of your church or conference. And I covet your aid also. If you find anything that has helped you, please share it with me so I can pass it on to others.

Yours in the Christian Quest,

F. C. LESTER.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING CONFERENCES.

Summer conferences are intended to give young people a chance to fit themselves for Christian leadership. No church can make a better investment than by sending certain choice young people to such conferences. It is wise to select the delegates by vote and then have a consecration service for them on the Sunday before they leave. They will come under the splendid influence of trained Christian leaders, and will return to the local church ready to make a great contribution in service. The general plan of most of the conferences is to have study classes in the morning, a rest hour, study and recreation in the afternoon, and vesper service in the evening. The following conferences will be held in the Southeast this summer. (Adult leaders as well as young people will be welcomed.):

Camp Imokalee, Keystone Heights, Fla. The Florida Young People's Conference will be held from June 7th to 17th. This is the seventh annual session. Young people from all over the State attend this conference, some coming as far as Key West. The conference is under the capable leadership of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and Dr. Edwin C. Gillette. Rev. Frank Atkinson of West Palm Beach is to be the Dean. The faculty will include Dr. Clarence A. Vincent, Dr. C. Arthur Lincoln, Mrs. Edward Parsons, Rev. Lawrence Gedcke, Mr. Chas. A. Hoyt, Miss Cleve J. Carson, Miss Martha A. Race, Rev. Frederick Held, Rev. Gordon Brokenshire and others. Send registration fee to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, 117 W. Forsyth St., Jacksonville, Fla.

Summer School of Leadership Training, Elon College, N. C. This school for the Carolinas and Virginia will be held June 20th to 26th. Rev. F. C. Lester is Dean. Rev. W. T. Scott is Dean of Boys, and Mrs. Grace Stewart is Dean of Girls. Miss Jewell Truitt, Glen Raven, N. C., and Miss Priscilla Chase, Elon College, N. C., are the registrars. The registration fee of $2.00 may be sent to them. The faculty will include Mrs. Edward Parsons, Prof. A. R. Van Cleave, Prof. S. A. Bennett, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Miss Priscilla Chase, Dr. Alfred Hurst, Miss Ruth Johnson, and others. Credit and non-credit courses will be offered. A very interesting series of programs have been planned for the evening sessions.

The Wadley Leadership Training Conference, Wadley, Ala. Plans are still in the making. The date is July 28th to August 4th. Among the teachers will be Miss Marguerite Davison, Miss Annie Campbell, Rev. F. C. Lester, and possibly Miss Lucy Eldredge. For further information, write to Miss Marguerite Davison, Thorsby, Ala., or Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va.

The Piedmont Leadership Training Conference, Demorest, Ga. The Georgia young people will meet at Piedmont College August 11th to 18th. Rev. M. J. Sweet is to be Dean. The faculty has not all been secured, but among the teachers will be Rev. Allen T. Jones and Miss Edith Conn. The registration fee will be $1.50. For further information, write to Miss Annie Campbell, 607 Hicks St., Waycross, Ga.

Blue Ridge Missionary Education Conference. This conference of the whole Southeast will be held at Blue Ridge, N. C., in the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains. The date is June 28th to July 6th, inclusive. It is an interdenominational fellowship. The best leaders possible are chosen from North and South. This conference is of great value to pastors and church leaders. Among the faculty members are Dr. J. L. Morgan, Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. Guy W. Sarvis, Miss Constance Rumbough, Miss Hazel V. Orton, Miss Priscilla Chase, Dr. Gilbert Q. LeSourd, Dr. R. B. Eleazer, Miss Anna M. Clarke, Mrs. Taul B. White, Mrs. Marion Tucker Parsons, Dr. Malcolm Dana, Dr. M. Ashby Jones, Dr. Frank Graham, Mrs. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, Dr. H. Shelton Smith, Dr. Chas. L. Fisk, Miss Marguerite Davison, and others. For further information, write to Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, 933 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

A CHANCE TO SERVE.

Commencements in colleges and high schools will soon release a great number of trained young people for a summer vacation, and many of these young people will have no job awaiting them. Jobs with pay are difficult to find this year. But there is a chance to serve all the same. And service means more than money. It will be far better to serve during the summer without pay than to loaf at the same price.

There are about three hundred churches in the Southeast that should have a Vacation Church School for the children, but will not have it because no one will lead. Wouldn't it be a fine thing for this large group of college and high school students and public school teachers who will have nothing else of great importance to do, to conduct daily Vacation Church Schools in these churches? Such a school could very easily be conducted for two weeks, and many churches need the added zest which would come from these schools.

I am making this challenge to you young people with the hope that you will respond.

You may find your chance in your own church, or a neighboring church. If there seems to be no chance where you are and you would really like to do some work for the experience and the good it may do, write me (the editor of this page), and I will try to put you next to a job. This is a chance to serve for the joy of serving. It can mean the renewing of hundreds of churches that need the vision, energy, and enthusiasm of youth. If you decide to serve in this way, please let me know. I shall be glad to furnish information about how to conduct the school.

CHRISTIAN LIFE CONFERENCE.

The Christian Life Conference of Georgia was held at LaGrange, April 22nd to 24th. From the very first it was evident this Conference was to bear a high standard program. One noticed at once the beautiful hospitality in the grace and cordiality with which the guests were greeted by the reception committee. Someone had planned well. Many thanks were given by all to the entertaining church, the United Congregational Church.

And then the program itself attracted and held the delegates. Under the leadership of Miss Annie Campbell, Extension Worker for Georgia, the committee had prepared a program worthy of their wisdom and insight for such a gathering. There were one hundred and eight registered delegates. At the first evening service they were facetiously welcomed by Mr. R. L. Farrar, Sunday School Superintendent, and Mr. Aubrey Lauderdale, of the Christian Endeavor Society. An inspirational talk was given by Miss Moore of LaGrange. Miss Marguerite Davison conducted "Get-Acquainted" games in the Sunday School rooms of the church. Everybody was happy.

Saturday morning delegates divided into three groups, Miss Davison leading one in "Methods with Children;" Miss Susie Elder with the young people and Dr. D. B. Atkinson, of Piedmont College, with the adult group. Reports of the "Findings" of these groups were given in the afternoon, following which nearly all enjoyed a trip to the Galloway Gardens, which are famous for their enchanting beauty and the one hundred years of history back of them. An international supper was given in the evening, Ambrose representing Japan; Woodbury, China; Lanett, India; LaGrange, Africa. Curious were afterwards viewed. At the evening session, the Christian Endeavor of the United Church of LaGrange, gave a one-act play entitled, "Ordered South." It was beautifully done, and thoroughly enjoyed.

An outstanding feature was the sermon by Dr. D. B. Atkinson at the Sunday morning service.

The awards were given, as follows: For Sunday School excellence, Union Church, Demorest; for Christian Endeavor, United, LaGrange. For contributing most to the spirit of this Convention, in which distance traveled, number of delegates, and their constancy on attendance at the sessions of the Convention, was given to Vanceville. Other Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies were given honorable mention.

It was a very inspiring meeting, for which Miss Campbell and her assistants deserve much credit. LaGrange Church is thanked a thousand times.

NOTICE.

As yet no church has invited the Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, which meets in July. Any church desiring to entertain the Convention please notify R. E. Brittle, Executive Secretary, Cypress Chapel, Va.

JACOB AND ESAU RECONCILED.

LESSON VIII—MAY 22, 1932.

LESSON TEXT: Genesis 33:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ, forgave you."—Eph. 4:32.

Introduction.

Jacob prospered in the land of his mother's people. The passing of two decades wrought many changes. Jacob became a wealthy and influential ally of his father-in-law, Laban. Jacob made wealth for Laban, and wealth for himself. Some people seem to be able to make money. They have that interest and seem to be able to employ it successfully. Jacob was that kind. He was diligent, industrious and shrewd. So was Laban. Jacob decided to break off his relations with Laban and go back to his old home.

Social Relations Are Complex.

Man has had a marked degree of success in the solution of his relations with his material universe. As the centuries have passed man has learned a marvelous control of nature and material. He has been able to make it serve his needs as he has discovered the principles inherent in the natural material world. Human relations seem much more difficult of solution. Each person is a personal equation with an unknown quantity. A group of persons represent many unknown and undetermined quantities. These lessons show how complex were the relations of Jacob with his brother Esau, and with his father-in-law, Laban. Human relations are always complex.

Hit and Run Drivers.

The world has always had its "hit and run" drivers. People often think the best solution of a difficult problem is to run from it. Jacob deceived Esau and then ran away. He had his fling at deception in his dealings with Laban. It is hard to tell which deceived the more, Jacob or Laban. They were both good men in many ways, but, like large numbers of people today, they were a little tricky. You have to watch them or they will best you. Jacob stole away from Laban and started for his old home. Rachel stole her father's household images (chap. 31, verse 19, following). She was so religious she stole her father's gods. Some ministers today are so religious they like to "steal sheep" from another's pastor's flock. The world has too many "hit and run" drivers. Great characters try to consider all the consequences of action. Complete social fairness is needed in our world today.

The Wronged Brother.

Jacob was afraid to meet his wronged brother. Twenty years had not relieved his conscience of its sense of guilt in the shrewd treatment he had given Esau. "Esau was coming, and with him 400 men." No wonder Jacob was afraid. A guilty conscience and a wronged brother with 400 men. Esau seems to have come nearer forgetting the unpleasantness of the past than did Jacob. The wronged brother had been successful in the passing of the years. He seems to have forgotten his angry threat against Jacob's life.

The Reconciliation.

Jacob carefully planned the meeting. He was still shrewd in his method. He prepared for the worst and hoped for the best. Notice the way he arranges his followers to protect Joseph and Rachel. He himself goes ahead to meet Esau.

"Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell on his neck and kissed him; and they wept." The wronged brother could forgive and forget. The wronging brother had wrestled with a guilty conscience and with the messenger of Jehovah and had prevailed. Henceforth Jacob, the supplanter, becomes Israel, the one who striveth with God. He prevailed.

I Have Enough, My Brother.

Each brother said he had enough of wealth and did not need more. Jacob urged Esau to accept a gift and, finally, he did, but with the feeling that he had enough without it. How much better could the world's condition become if people were not so given to grasping the wealth from their fellowmen. Certainly there are many who have enough today. But so many of them seem to be eager to heap up more at the disadvantage and cost of others. Many do not "have enough" and are finding it extremely hard to provide the necessities of life for their families. The ethics of world economics needs some improvement in the spirit of good-will. Brothers need to become reconciled.

ONE TOUCH OF GOD.

At one time a group of men were attempting to raise an obelisk in Egypt to its base, and the work was under the supervision of a very exact and careful engineer. They had raised the great mass of granite to within a few inches of the level of the base and then were unable to lift it further. They could not get it up to the level of the pedestal by their utmost efforts.

But there was a secret in nature that they did not know. There was a sailor there who knew all about it. He shouted, "Wet the ropes!" As they did so the ropes began to groan, and strain, and shorten, and the great mass rose, and rose, till it came to the level of the base, and they could push it over and establish it firmly on its base.

It was a little secret, but it was an effective one. The men had pulled at the cordage and strained away at it, but the obelisk was in mid-air, and there it hung until the cry came to wet the ropes.

Dear friends, the instant we let the Holy Ghost saturate the soul, the Lord Jesus Christ brings into it all his infinite forces of love and power. One touch of God will do all that our tugging and struggling could not do.—A. B. Simpson in Alliance Weekly.

ARE YOU AFTER AN EASY JOB?

When there is an easy job going there are always hundreds after it. But when there is a hard job, there are very few. Very few people ask for difficulties. They prefer the broad road that leads to failure instead of the straight and narrow road that leads to success.—Jenner's Letter.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

WHAT WORTH?

"Ye are of more value than many sparrows."
—Matt. 10:31.

If we understand our Lord's words in this tenth chapter of Matthew, he was qualifying the disciples for the ministry of evangelism,—saving souls. They were told that the Father values each sparrow and cares for them; that He values each lily or daisy of the fields and cares for them, and, if this is true, how much more He will value and care for His messengers whom He sends forth to carry His message to the hearts of His creatures; how much more He values and will care for them as they encounter enemies!

Beyond this, they were likewise to estimate every soul with the same value and despise not the least of his children. Only a few may be at a prayer-meeting, but what worth are they to the Lord? Only one may be at services of worship, but what is that one worth to the Lord? That one may be the one to move out and change the face of society for God and glory.

Jesus has placed upon every soul a value, the appeal of which extends beyond that of His own. He said, referring to his work and to the work they were to do for Him, "Greater work than these shall ye do because I go to my Father." Are we in this list of His workers?

Prayer—Our Father, here we are, thou knowest how much, offering ourselves to Thee. Call us out into the service thou wouldst have us do. Grant us the will and power to obey and do thy word in thy kingdom of this world. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHAT WORK SHALL I DO?

"Greater work than these shall ye do, because I go to my Father."—Jno. 14:12.

Jesus healed the lame, physically. He hath given unto His true workers the power to heal spiritually. That is greater.

Jesus opened the eyes of the blind, physically. That act became the divine symbol of the work He commits unto us for Him, to open the eyes of the morally blind that they may see the beauties and glories of the clean morally and spiritually. That is greater.

Jesus raised the dead, physically. It has been given to his apostles to raise souls who are dead in sin, to life in Him. That must be a greater work.

God must have a lesson for the world to learn in the strange tragic loss of the Lindbergh baby. All the world is out to find this baby. All the world is in revolt against such crime.

All Oklahoma was out a few weeks ago for a baby that had fallen in a hole. How much is a baby worth? We are told that our U. S. Mint puts out $340,000,000 a day; that there are $900,000,000,000 in circulation in the world. Put all this in one side of the scales, and a child in the other, and see which is worth the most.

It may be that God will teach the world not only the worth of a child, but also the worth of the child as a grown person, shedding its influence upon society of mankind.

Prayer—Dear Father of all mercies, have mercy upon us, have mercy on this world, and save it from crime and sin. Help us to be all that we should be and to administer justice within thy gates. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

UNDER WHAT FLAG?

"In the name of our God will we set up our banners."—Ps. 20:5.

As these words are being penned the announcement is made that after receiving the ransom, the kidnappers do not return the baby. Kidnapping is called the worst of crimes. Well, this is worse than kidnapping. We are made to cry in the words of the Psalmist: "Why standest thou afar off, O Lord? Why hidest thyself in times of trouble? The wicked in his pride doth persecute the poor: Let them be taken in the devices that they have imagined . . . God is not in his thoughts . . . His ways are always grievous . . . His mouth is full of cursings, and deceit and fraud . . . He sitteth in lurking places . . . In secret places doth he murder the innocent." Ps. 10.

In this day of crime and shame, when ever were words more meaningful and potent? When ever was there a better time for all Christians to get together and set up the banner of our God to fight the devil and all his cohorts?

Prayer—Arise, O Lord, O God; Thou dost see all this world's wrongs; Thou art the giver of all good gifts; Thou art our helper. Break thou the arm of the wicked and evil man; Slay Thou wickedness until Thou dost find none, and no man shall more oppress the earth. Amen.

THURSDAY.

HIS BANNER.

"He has brought me to the banquet house, and his banner over me was love."—Songs of Sol. 2:5.

O Lord, our God, thou hast given a banner to them that fear thee. That banner is Jesus Thy Son, and our Lord. That banner, which is love, must be displayed, like a banner over our souls, over our homes, over our business, over our politics, over our social life, over all our lives, conducting, encouraging us to come to Him, to stand for Him, to fight and to win for Him over the world, the flesh, and the devil.

O God, may we sit in thy shadow with great delight. Fill us with thy spirit. Steady our heads with thy hands. Warm us with the warmth of embrace; as the flowers appear on the earth, as the singing of the birds is come; as the orchard putteth forth its fruitage; let all thy people see thy countenance, and hear thy voice, espouse thy cause without a falter, until a new day shall break, iniquity shall perish, shadows flee away, and we can see that Christianity is not a theory fixed to altars, but a life to be lived by everyone; until we can see that Thou art God and the God of the people and there is none other beside Thee. That Jesus is our Saviour and in no other name under heaven given among men is there one, or is there a name whereby we must be saved.

Prayer—We realize, if not, we pray thee for such realization as thou wouldst have us possess, that the world never needed more love, joy and peace, gentleness and meekness, than today. Grant us, Lord, a consecration to Thee, and humanity the banner of the cross, to overcome all sin.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

CENTRAL LUBRICATION.

"Neither shall the cruse of oil fail."—I Kings 17:8-16.

An investigator of machinery writes of noticing in a certain exhibition a number of machines on which it would take an operator half an hour to fill all the oil holes. He himself purchased a machine with one hundred and forty-six oil holes, all lubricated from a central high-pressure unit, and requiring only two minutes to oil all the bearings on the machine.

Central lubrication is even more necessary to the proper running of a life. Many of us need to adjust separately and painfully our relations to the persons we are likely to meet and the tasks we need to perform. Each hour brings its peculiar problem. Nothing runs smoothly of its own accord, but every item calls for individual adjustment.

Now it is perfectly possible to get central lubrication in a life, and that central lubrication is a heart of love. When love is instinctive, free-flowing, eager and joyful, we meet all persons with bright understanding and cordial sympathy, and all our work moves with promptness and alacrity.

—Amos R. Wells.

SATURDAY.

NINEVEH'S SPEED MANIA.

"The chariots rage in the streets, they rush to and fro in the broad ways, the appearance of them is like torches, they run like the lightnings." Read Nahum 2:4-13.

Nahum describes the chariots of wicked Nineveh quite as if they were modern automobiles. The speed mania of that ancient capital of Satan was like the speed mania of today. And when Nahum uttered the prophecy of Jehovah, "I will burn your chariots in the smoke," he recorded the doom of much of our present-day Godless living.

For life that thinks to outspeed God's penalties is always defeated in the race. Take the wings of the morning, which are faster than the fastest gasoline motor, and flee to the uttermost part of the earth, and you will find God there. Our speedsters leave nothing behind but peace and true happiness and real prosperity. Better reach your destination an hour later, and reach it. Better a dull, monotonous, plodding life than a life which goes up in smoke.

Prayer—But neither is necessary, our Father, as we know. Thy paths are paths of peace, though they are not paths of pride. May we journey ever with Thee, and at the wise rate Thou dost choose. Amen.

—Amos R. Wells.

SUNDAY.

SILENT ZONES.

"Children that will not hear the law of the Lord." . . . Read Isaiah 30:8-17.

The scientists have discovered that many persons have in their ears silent areas, bands of experience in which no sound whatever is heard, and some persons have as many as four such areas of deafness. To reach their auditory nerves a speaker must keep away from those bands of silence.

It has long been known by Christian workers that every one is more easily approached along certain lines of thought and argument and feeling than along other lines. If we would influence others, we must recognize these silent zones in their souls. We must realize that what seems absolutely conclusive to us may be no demonstration whatever to them, while pleas and incentives that leave us cold may arouse them to the utmost pitch of enthusiasm.

Prayer—Lord, we would be all things to all men. If we cannot reach them with Thy truth by one means, we would try some other means. And in this versatility of effort we shall be following the wise ways of Jesus Christ. Amen.

—Amos R. Wells.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

PILATE AND THE CROSS.

"And Pilate called together the chief priests and the rulers and the people, and said unto them, Behold, I having examined him before you, found no fault in this man touching those things whereof you accuse him; no, neither yet has Herod . . . What then shall I do with Jesus?"—Luke 23:13-14; Matt. 27:22.

Hitherto we have considered in these series of morning sermons Moses and the Cross; the Disciples and the Cross; Judas and the Cross; today we consider Pilate and the Cross; Paul and the Cross; and the Individual and the Cross.

I. Pilate Called Together . . . the People.—And since that day, whether the world itself has wished it or not, it has been largely called together to consider Jesus. It was perhaps the first time a ruler had issued a general call to the people to come together for that purpose, but it was not the last time. Whenever the nations of the earth sit in conference, whether they so state it or not, they are considering the very spirit and principles of Jesus. More and more it shall be so, even as the model prayer is answered, "Thy Kingdom Come."

Luke tells us who were there: "The chief priests," "the rulers," and "the people." What a group! Headed by Pilate, followed closely by the priests, then the rulers, and last but not least the people! How differently they thought on almost any subject—Roman and Jew; priest and people; rich and poor; learned and illiterate—and yet, on one matter, they had been molded into a common moving passion—namely, the crucifixion of Christ!

How fickle were the hearts of the people! Yesterday they sang his hosannas, today they cry his crucifixion; yesterday they wave palm leaves above his head, today they strike him with the staff upon his face; yesterday they strewed the flowers of heaven in his path, today they beat his back with the implements of Rome.

While there are so many in that crowd which was called together there are some we sorely miss. Where is Nicodemus? He is an official in the court—one of the seventy judges upon the bench! Where is he? Where are Peter, and James, and John? They had followed Jesus into the most sacred places. Where are they? Where are scores and scores of the members of the church today? Where are they now? Why aren't they here? The people have been called together by the Holy Spirit of God himself to "consider Jesus," why have they not come? The Bride and the Spirit say come; why did they not answer in person? Where are the followers of Jesus? Too early in the morning? They had been with him the whole night through until now! Some of them asleep at home? Those who were awake could have, and perhaps did, call them before now! The "people" had been called by Pilate, how did the Disciples escape the summons?

If I had been in Palestine
A poor disciple I had been;
I had not risked or purse or limb
All to forsake and follow him.

With the glad crowd that sang the psalm,
I too had sung, and strewed the palm;
Then slunk away in dastard shame
When the High Priest denounced His name.

Beside the cross when Mary prayed,
A great way off I too had stayed;
Not even in that hour had dared,
And for my dying Lord declared.

But listen, my friends, while Jesus stood alone in Pilate's hall, and alone upon the Cross of Calvary, thanks be unto God, he has not had to stand alone since, for in that selfsame hour the poor thief on the cross began to head an humble march of humble men which has not ceased unto this very day! When pity and fear began to reduce the mob, more courage began to be begotten in the hearts of men, and women, and even children, than this old world has been able to muster or measure; and everywhere there are those who love him, follow him, and would even now die for him.

II. "I Have Examined Him."—Pilate, at least, was a judge, and knew and honored the processes of Roman justice. He examined Jesus. Let that be said in his favor. He examined Jesus. He did not cast him aside without consideration. He did not pass him up with a haughty sneer. He did not strut along in his own way in sheer indifference. He examined him. He put his whole mind and soul into the matter of going into and through the case of Jesus. He was not trying to get religion, he was trying to get the truth. For that he humbly asked, and that he found! And when the facts were all before him he said of Jesus, "I find no fault in him." Jesus Christ had passed the examination before God and the angels in the Garden of Gethsemane, and now he makes good in a court of common justice before men!

He will make good in your court, if your court makes good! If the court of your conscience will hear all the facts, foot up all the figures, and put common ordinary faith in the truths you yourself find, Jesus will pass par in your court. But how can a man know him if he will not consider him? How can a home be transformed by him into which he is never invited? Pilate asked him what is truth? And when he was through receiving his answer, he said to the whole people, "Behold the Man."

If Jesus Christ is a man—
And only a man—I say,
That of all mankind I cleave to him,
And to him will I cleave away.

If Jesus Christ is a god—
And the only God—I swear,
I will follow him through heaven and hell,
The earth, the sea, the air!

III. "What Shall I Do With Jesus?"—Like Judas, Pilate chose the strong, well-nigh invincible crowd. Knowing more of the results than Pilate could at that time know, perhaps it was hard for him to turn down the strength and the courage of Caiaphas and his crew to side with the forsaken, homeless Peasant, who did not even speak for himself. The surface is so much before us it is hard to choose like God! "God has chosen the weak things of the world . . . and things which are despised, hath God chosen." Judas did not see much in front of Jesus and the disciples; perhaps Pilate saw far less. Judas chose Caiaphas; Pilate chose Caesar. With what results? Judas, a suicide in Jerusalem, and Pilate a suicide in Spain. The strength they chose was naught.

What shall I do with Jesus? Ignore him? Maybe! Strike him? Surely, if you wish! Crucify him? It has often been done afresh! Or love him, and serve him? But you say: The church is so weak! And I say: Was Caiaphas strong; or Rome right? The band of disciples was too weak to follow Jesus all the way to the cross, for the Gospels say: "They all forsook him, and fled;" but weakness became strength, and the march of those eleven men could not be stopped by the crowd, or the cross. Humanity can never repay them, nor their Christ, for the way they and he suffered until it shall become like them, willing to suffer to the bitter, triumphant end for the sake of the right.

What shall I do with Jesus? Why, step over on his side, of course, however lowly and despised it may seem. I had rather kneel by the side of the dying Christ, than stand by Caiaphas, or even Caesar himself.

You cannot be a Christian in any real sense unless you have in some real way experienced the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit.—Stanley Jones.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

How about soap wrappers? Up to this date, May 7th, we have received 34,000. We have a very flattering offer on a refrigerating plant that will care for our milk and will be such a blessing to us. If we can get 75,000 Octagon Soap wrappers by June 1st, we can buy this refrigerator and be using it and they will allow us time to pay the balance when more coupons come in. I am wondering if our people could not make a special effort through the Sunday School classes to help put this across by June 1st. Let every Sunday School help and it will be a success. One orphanage in North Carolina got two refrigerators last year with coupons. A number of others have had good success in getting these much-needed articles for their institutions. Their people took an interest in it and put it across. I know the Christian denomination feels just as deep an interest in its orphanage as other denominations. Let's get busy and do this thing by June 1st. Let everybody help to send us 41,000 more by June 1st. That will be fine and every one will be happy.

We have four children in the graduating class in High School this year, and we feel proud of their records, and the honors they have received. Our children have the following positions in the class: president, Deborah Ellis; vice-president, Garner Hilliard; poetess, Elizabeth Rowland; historian and saluatorian, Louise Duke. You see, our children got the lion's share. When you give your money to help support the Christian Orphanage, you make a wise investment. If you have any doubts pay the Orphanage a visit and see for yourself. We are always glad to have visitors.

HENDERSON, N. C., REVIVAL CLOSES.

(The following from a Henderson daily paper is of interest to SUN readers, as we had written previously of the revival.):

The revival meeting that has been in progress at the Methodist Protestant Church recently, has closed, thus ending a series of evangelistic services that began several weeks ago in the Christian Church, making the round of the First Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian and the Methodist Protestant Churches. Rev. R. A. Whitten, pastor of the First Christian Church, was the preacher for the closing services. He took for a text II. Cor. 5:20, "... We pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." Before entering into the sermon Mr. Whitten conducted a testimony meeting in which many took part, testifying to the blessing that had come to them as a result of the revival that has been going on.

In his sermon the preacher made a strong appeal to the young people to be reconciled to God, reminding them that they should not only give proper attention to the development of the physical and intellectual life, but to the spiritual also.

The sermon of last evening was considered one of the strongest appeals that has been made during the meeting.

Not many unchurched people have attended the services of the past six weeks, it was said, and therefore, not many have been reached and won to Christ and the church, but it is the general opinion that the Christian people of Henderson have entered into a closer fellowship with their Lord and with one another, and are better prepared for the work of building up the kingdom in the hearts and lives of the people of this community.

The union prayer meeting that will rotate between the Christian, the Presbyterian, the Methodist Episcopal and the Methodist Protestant Churches for the next several weeks is for the purpose of conserving and further promoting the spirit of Christian fellowship and cooperation that has been in evidence during the meeting.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x ¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3¾x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

MAKING CHURCH UNION EFFICIENT.

comedy in those who rated themselves God's chosen people, lived their little hour and then passed on to be remembered only with a smile.

Modern progress is on a street of one-way travel and no parking privilege. Aimless going is useless going and backward looking in the midst of heavy traffic is dangerous. Once we both stood as a protest; now we should stand as an affirmation. Once we were building a platform; now we should be working a program. Once we were concerned with preserving our freedom; now we should be industrious in achieving our mission. Today our face is not backward to a heritage from the fathers. It is forward toward the duties of their sons. Our loyalties will be directed toward substituting the larger for the smaller, the new purpose for the old method and the Kingdom universal for the denominational organization.

In this solemn presence and amid these perplexities of adjustment let us remind ourselves that frequently the church has invited her defeats through her unwillingness to be big in spirit. Let us emulate John the Baptist who must have thought of his own flocking crowds, devoted listeners and "the good old days," and say, "if by union the Kingdom can increase let my denomination decrease." The good does not die because its form is changed. In true religion "there is no death, that which seems so is but transition." Our task is to build a church to meet a spiritual need—not to conform to an historical tradition.

With what earnestness we should pray for the purification of our personal motives. Nothing will check us up on our real attitude toward this movement as to pray well especially over those points toward which our sympathies do not go. We must keep our enthusiasms fresh and abounding if we are to keep our mission fulfilled. Only in unifying our plans and combining our energies will effectiveness be realized. Through the cultivation of mutual understanding, generous interpretation and undivided cooperation our goal, the world's best goal and God's goal will be reached. The experiences through which we are passing just now lead us into deeper fervency as we join in the prayer of John Oxenham:

"Oh God, within whose sight
All men have equal right
To worship thee;
Break every bar that holds
Thy flock in diverse folds;
Thy will from none withholds
Full liberty.
Lord, set thy churches free
From foolish rivalry!
Lord make all free!
Let all past bitterness
Now and forever cease,
And all our souls possess
True charity."

LETTER FROM JAPAN.

the amusement of the girls. Our Girl Reserves made curtains for all the windows of the Christian Orphanage, and my own group made toys for all the children for Christmas. Now, the Girl Reserves are collecting old clothes and planning a food sale for the benefit of the famine sufferers in Northern Japan. Some of the older girls made a gift of 50 hymn-books and a lot of handkerchief paper to the patients in a tuberculosis hospital. When our girls celebrated Christmas they took up a collection and gave half of it to the lepers and the other half to the Salvation Army. I don't know whether I have reported everything they have been doing or not, but I think I have told enough to give you some idea of the spirit here in this school.

In regard to the Manchurian question, one hardly knows what to say. We who love the Japanese people so much, regret very deeply the reputation Japan is getting among the other nations as a military aggressor. I believe that the majority of the people who uphold the stand Japan is taking sincerely feel that she is justified, and that the only way to secure peace here in the East is for Japan to take a firm stand. Many of us, including a great many Japanese Christians, do not believe that she can ever establish peace by such methods. We hear dark prophecies of another world war coming. God grant that they may never come true. Let's not cease to pray that the Prince of Peace may have his way in the hearts of men and in the affairs of nations.

I guess I had better find a place to stop soon, or you will pitch this in the waste basket before you are half through reading it. God's blessing upon you all.

Sincerely yours,

ANGIE CREW.

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

OBITUARIES.

PARRISH.

The Shallow Well Church lost one of its oldest members in the death of Mrs. Jane McIver Parrish on March 17, 1932.

Sister Parrish's health had been failing for several years but she was apparently as well as usual when she retired on the night before they found her cold in death.

She leaves to mourn their loss, two sisters, Mrs. C. E. Moran, and Mrs. Sarah Thomas, one brother, Archie McIver, and many nieces and nephews.

Services were conducted at Shallow Well by the writer, assisted by Rev. Blalock of the Methodist Church.

May God comfort those that mourn.

T. F. WRIGHT.

WAY.

In the passing of Mr. Kenneth Bailey Way on March 8, 1932, the Sanford church lost one of its oldest and most faithful members. Bro. Way was a charter member of the church, a deacon for many years, and taught the men's Bible class until recent months, when he was physically unable. Bro. Way was a man of few words, but "a doer of the Word, and not a hearer only."

He leaves to mourn their loss, his wife, four sons, three daughters, several grandchildren and relatives.

The funeral service was held at the church by the writer.

May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved.

Germany Dissolves Atheistic Groups.—

Republican Germany is waking up to the danger that may lurk in the atheistic organizations of Communists, and President von Hindenburg has ordered their dissolution. The government explained that the order against the so-called "godless" organizations was intended to spike the Communist attempt to prepare for proletarian revolution by undermining Christian culture.

Industrial Production Decreasing.—

According to figures recently released, industrial production was at the end of January, 32 per cent below the level of 1923. January saw a new high level of commercial failures for the depression; 3,458 concerns entered the bankruptcy courts during that month with liabilities of $100,000,000. Farm commodities are at 63 per cent of the pre-war level (1909-1914), or 52 per cent of the 1926 prices; manufactured products are at 71 per cent of the 1926 price level; and raw materials at 60 per cent of the 1926 figures. Factory payrolls had in December, 1931, fallen to 51 per cent of the total of 1926—that is, manufacturing workers were paid but slightly more than half what they received in the earlier year.

Elon College Commencement Next Week.—

In this issue of THE SUN is given a short program of events for the Elon Commencement. It is expected that Tuesday, May 24th, will be the big day of the commencement occasion, though the whole period, beginning Sunday morning, is filled with good things for those fortunate enough to be present. In addition to the usual routine, the events of Tuesday will comprise a mammoth "Elon Day" rally and a barbecue dinner. All interested in the welfare and future of the college are invited and urged to be present. At the 11:00 o'clock service, according to present plans, in addition to addresses by prominent speakers, the Sunday School orchestra of our First Church, in Richmond, Va., will give a concert, including the music of some of the greatest composers of the past and present. This orchestra is said to be the largest orchestra of its kind in the entire South, and it is expected that not less than thirty of its members will be present. The orchestra from the Suffolk Church is also expected to be present and to furnish music during the day. Forget your troubles and come to Elon for the whole commencement if possible. But be sure to be there on Tuesday.

The Wrong End.—

We quote the following from the pen of Dean F. D. Kershner, in The Christian-Evangelist:

"Attempts to cure the business depression continue to deal with the question from the wrong end. Most of them start with the idea of encouraging production, or of extending credit, or something of the sort, but in all this there is no suggestion of helping the producer to better prices for his products. With the solitary exception of Mr. McAdoo's suggestion, to which we referred recently, the farmer has been entirely ignored in the program of rehabilitation. Mr. McAdoo would fix the price of wheat for home consumption only, at $1.25 per bushel and of cotton, for home consumption also, at 22c per pound. The proposition is undoubtedly feasible and is unquestionably beginning at the right end. With dollar and a quarter wheat and twenty-two cent cotton, agriculture would take on new life, and there would be new business for everybody. This is an infinitely better suggestion than schemes for loaning money to railroads and other corporations which are now running enormous deficits because the farmer cannot get anything for his crops. The politician who will take up the McAdoo proposal and make it his campaign platform will run a good chance of commanding the support of the electorate next November.

Always the Same Story.—

Writing from Shanghai, a press correspondent has the following to say in regard to the situation in China:

"Unless the Japanese are compelled through international action to indemnify China for losses resulting from the Japanese invasion of the Shanghai area, it will be necessary for the various charity bodies of the world to come to the rescue. Otherwise, a major catastrophe is inevitable.

"This is the consensus of opinion of a number of leading citizens of various nations, including officials and civilians who have made a cursory inspection of the damaged areas to try to estimate the losses with the aid of Chinese officials.

"Dr. Wu Ta-chun, head of the Chinese department of statistics at Nanking, recently issued an estimate of losses resulting from the Shanghai war. He said that property damage amounts to 1,560,000,000 Chinese dollars, or about $400,000,000.

"He claimed that 80 per cent of the Chinese property within the Japanese military zone, valued at $200,000,000, was destroyed; destroyed buildings were valued at $60,000,000; factories at $18,000,000. Workers thrown out of employment were estimated at 250,000 with a monthly wage loss of about $1,000,000.

"Civilians killed totaled 8,000; wounded, 82,000; missing, 10,000; with more than 180,000 families directly affected.

"Educational institutions closed include ten universities and technical colleges and thirty high schools. More than 3,000 teachers are out of employment. The number of schools and university buildings either destroyed or occupied by Japanese military forces includes twelve colleges, seventeen high schools and forty-nine primary schools. The value of the educational property destroyed was put at $4,000,000. About 190 primary schools are closed, affecting 40,000 pupils."

It is always the same story, whether in the West or in the East. Peace builds up—then War tears down. The efforts of years, even of centuries, are nullified in a few weeks or a few days. If civilization is to exist war must go!

Richmond "Wet" Women Start Drive.—

Richmond has had quite a distinction (?) thrust upon her this week. The wet forces among the women, lead by the wife of one of Richmond's most popular lawyers, have promised to show Richmond something about the dry law. They are calling upon the women of the city to declare for personal liberty and—prohibition repeal. They claim that they have a following of at least 3,000. What we wish is that they would tell us their real objective. These leaders claim that there is more liquor being used than before prohibition. They are possibly right if they include only the so-called higher strata of society. Yet the question remains. If they get what they want, why force the evils of intemperance upon those who are less able, financially at least, to play with the debauching fire of alcohol? If they would take the time to study the question fairly and squarely, we believe they would discontinue their efforts. Most women are essentially sound at heart, if they do not allow prejudices and outside factors to warp their consciences. There are many things that contribute to the lowering of moral and religious standards at the present time, but prohibition is not one of them. In bright contrast to the efforts of these misguided women, are the statements recently made to the writer by prominent business men as to the conditions among the working classes. One made the statement: "Even before prohibition went into effect it was against our rules to allow any employee of our corporation to work if even slightly intoxicated, for the lives of others were at stake. What a task it was to enforce this rule; what a task to save the jobs of those to whom dependents looked for bread. Today it is not even a factor to be considered." The other man travels throughout the State. His peculiar business gives him a chance to come in contact with conditions, and he knows. He said: "They don't know, or they willfully misstate facts. The whiskey which was stored in Richmond, Petersburg, Alexandria or Norfolk—any one of these cities—before prohibition, would easily supply the entire State today. It was no unusual sight to see eight freight cars unload at one warehouse in Richmond in one day. How many bootleggers would it take to haul that amount?" We feel sorry for these women who have been so greatly deluded and misled.

NOTES-PERSONALS

What does your anxiety do? It does not empty tomorrow of its sorrow; but it empties today of its strength. It does not make you escape the evil; it makes you unfit to cope with it if it comes.—Ian Maclaren.

We are glad to present elsewhere in this issue of THE SUN, more "Impressions of the Burlington Convention." It was a great gathering of interested and earnest souls trying to face real problems and work them out for the good of the church and the glory of God.

Somewhere in each of us is the power by which great things are done. It is the problem of each individual to find the work that will release his greatest force. If we but look, each day opens another lane to achievement, but we must have the courage, the enthusiasm and the willingness to follow it.—Western Electric News.

We advise every CHRISTIAN SUN reader to turn to the letter of our veteran missionary, Rev. A. D. Woodworth, Tokyo, Japan, and read every line Dr. Woodworth has written. He has certainly given CHRISTIAN SUN readers a line on war and the situation in the Far East that will be difficult to get elsewhere, if at all. Dr. Woodworth has not lived in Japan for more than a quarter of a century with eyes closed. He loves the Japanese and is giving his life for them, but he deplors their present position and attitude to war.

Beginning with the first July issue, THE SUN will welcome as contributing editors, two outstanding members of our Congregational constituency, Dr. C. Rexford Raymond and Rev. M. J. Sweet. At that time, also, the new managing editor will succeed his father, Dr. P. J. Kernodle. This is with a feeling of reluctance on his part, yet with a prayer and a belief that the ministers and lay leaders of both the Congregational and Christian Churches in the Southeast will give him their unstinted support in building up a church paper of which they may well be proud.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, co-Moderator with Dr. L. E. Smith, of the Southeast Convention, gives in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN a most timely article, "The Message of Pentecost." At the recent Burlington Convention, Dr. Raymond was elected to the editorial staff of THE SUN, and beginning shortly, we hope to have regular contributions from his pen. Dr. Raymond is pastor of Pilgrim Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., and endeared himself to all who heard him at the Burlington Convention. His "Impression of the Convention" will be read in this issue with profit. He is one of the Commencement speakers in Elon College Day, May 29th.

Rev. P. H. Ricketts, assistant pastor, Danville Church, who has been superintendent of the Sunday School for some time, writes under date of May 9th: "Our Sunday School was the greatest in its history by way of attendance yesterday, with nearly 400 in attendance. We set our goal at 400 when we started the new year. Next Sunday we shall go over the top. We had an attendance of about 250 one year ago. God has surely blessed." Brother Ricketts lays down the work as superintendent of the school with the close of May, since he has increasing duties, and the former superintendent, Bro. J. E. Jones, takes up the work again which he relinquished a year ago.

Under date of May 10th, Rev. Wm. T. Scott, Salisbury, N. C., writes: "We are moving to Winston-Salem on Thursday of this week, May 12th. Our address, therefore, is changed from Salisbury, N. C., to No. 2405 Elizabeth Ave., Winston-Salem, N. C. While we will still care for Salisbury with the help of Miss Priscilla Chase, Rev M. J. Sweet and others, we shall try to put much effort on Winston-Salem, too. Any one knowing Christian Church people there should communicate with us." It has been found advisable for Brother Scott to locate in Winston-Salem that he may give primary consideration and personal daily help to the work of our Congregational-Christian cause in that city.

Dr. W. R. Kedzie, Secretary of Educational Institutions, writes elsewhere under his "Impressions of the Burlington Convention": "Nothing must be allowed to stand in the way of the progress and development of this splendid institution (Elon College), more needed now than ever since the merging of these two denominations." Elon College has been needed since its founding and has made a marvelous contribution to the church, but this is only an earnest of the contribution it will make to the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches in the years to come, if the people of these churches will, in love and loyalty, share the burden of the institution, and will see to it by their liberality and contributions of love that she shall not be incumbered by financial and economic difficulties.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom, now residing at Elon College, have been engaged to take charge of our Christian work and churches in Carroll County, Va., beginning June 1st. It is believed that these two well-equipped young people will fit well into the work to which they have been chosen. Mr. Grissom is a member of the present graduating class, and has taken the full course in Christian Education at Elon College, and is a very consecrated and energetic young minister. He comes from Liberty Church, Vance County, N. C., and, licensed by the Eastern North Carolina Conference in 1930, has had much experience as a religious worker in Christian Endeavor Societies, Sunday Schools and other fields of useful service. Mrs. Grissom seems peculiarly equipped for the work to which she goes as co-worker with her husband, having had technical training as a professional nurse, and in welfare work, being at the time of her marriage, welfare worker in her county. She has had two years' experience in welfare work in the mountains of West Virginia.

Next week is Elon College Commencement, always an event and an epoch in our Christian annals. The work of the college the past year and the spirit of loyalty and optimism, which has prevailed both among the faculty and students, has been remarkable, indeed. While financial difficulties have faced the institution and economic conditions have created many hard problems, no year in the history of the institution has more thoroughly proven the deep place that the institution holds in the hearts of our people and the loyalty to the institution on the part of its constituency. Writing to friend of the college about the approaching commencement, President Smith adds this as a postscript: "We have equipment second to none. We have a student body that is enthusiastic and optimistic. We have a good faculty that believes in the institution. We have won the championship in three major sports this year—football, basketball and baseball. We have one of the largest senior classes in the history of the institution. All we need is you to keep us going."

The Committee of the Mission Board to whom the matter was delegated, feels that it has been fortunate in securing Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom to take charge of our work in Carroll County, Va.—Elk Spur and Rocky Ford Churches and community work—beginning May 29th. Bro. Grissom has taken the course in Religious Education in Elon College and is to graduate from the college at the coming commencement. His good wife, prior to her marriage, had seven years' experience in county and community welfare work and is also a trained nurse. She is deeply interested in community betterment work, children and young people especially, and will be of inestimable worth to her husband and the work which they are to undertake. Bro. Grissom is a member of Liberty (Vance) Church, and has taken an active part in the work of young people, especially through Christian Endeavor and the Sunday School, and is a young man of energy, intelligence and consecration. It is believed by those who know the work, that Mr. and Mrs. Grissom are especially qualified for their task and will win the esteem, confidence and cooperation of those with whom they are to work and whose neighbors they are to be in our Christian parsonage at Elk Spur.

FROM THE PRESIDENT OF ELON ALUMNI.

May 14, 1932.

Dear Friend:

On May 7, 1889, ground was broken for the first building of Elon College. Tuesday, May 24, 1932, will probably be the most important day in the history of the College since its founding. It will be known as Greater Elon Day. An effort is being made to secure the presence of one thousand Alumni for the festivities of the occasion. If you have a spark of interest in Elon College, prepare to be here.

Through the generosity of some friends a mammoth barbecue dinner will be served on the campus. This will be absolutely without cost to you, and you may rest assured that you will receive one of the finest, cleanest, and best-served feeds in the history of gastronomy.

The business meeting of the Alumni will be held at 3:00 P. M., the Alumni Dinner at 6:30 P. M., and the address at 8:00 P. M. H. Lee Scott, '23, will make the Alumni address this year. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle will address the Alumni in the forenoon, representing the Christian Church. Also, Dr. C. Rexford Raymond will speak, representing the Congregational Church.

Let me urge you to send your Alumni dues of $2.00 at once to Mrs. Oma U. Johnson, Elon College, N. C. This is very necessary in the face of the fact that we need this to carry on the expenses of the Association. The price of the dinner will be 75c. Please send your reservation to Mrs. Johnson right away, so she will know how many to prepare for.

If you ever expect to attend another Elon College Commencement, let it be this year. We are looking for you, Tuesday, May 24th.

Cordially yours,

R. S. RAINEY, Pres.,
Alumni Association.

NOTICE.

The Executive Committee of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference has accepted an invitation from Waverly Christian Church to said conference to meet with it in its next annual session.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

VISITORS TO "THE JACKSONVILLE OFFICE last week included Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Williams of Lake Worth, who are on their way to Massachusetts for the summer. Mr. Williams was Moderator of the recent State Conference and Mrs. Williams is president of the State Federation of Congregational Women. We were also pleased to have a visit from Rev. Thomas H. Derrick, of DeLand, Fla., who is recovering strength after his serious operations at the Veterans' Hospital in Lake City.

NORTH MIAMI, FLORIDA. Twenty boys and men, eleven women and one 11-year-old girl, have been received into the North Miami, Fla., Congregational Church by Pastor O. H. Denney, since December 26th—thirty-two new members in about four months. Many material improvements have been made recently. The church is sponsoring a Scout Troop of more than thirty boys, and voted May 3rd to organize about twenty boys between 9 and 12 years old, into a "Cub Troop," training these boys for membership in Scouting, and as future American citizens.

"THE DEDICATION OF THE DOLLARS" is the title of a program prepared by Rev. Alan Fairbank, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The purpose of the program is for use when the dollar coin cards are received and dedicated. It is a fine service and can be obtained free from the office of the Commission on Missions, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City. It was the hope of the Dollar Plan Committee that the returns be in to the Commission on Missions by June 1st. That isn't far off now, and we hope that the churches are making progress and that there may be a generous response to meet the dire need of our Boards.

REV. C. W. CARPENTER, pastor of New Light Church, Doerun, Ga., is happy in seeing his church grow in interest and power. The newly organized Sunday School is making headway with Eugene Smith as superintendent. On his recent visit to this church, May 9th, the pastor-at-large was greeted by a house-full of people who came in from their farms around the church. Poplar Arbor shared in this service. It was an inspiring meeting. At the close plans for a revival were made for the second week in July. In a similar way Mr. Sweet was greeted by another large crowd at Union Hill, Pearson, Wednesday night, May 11th, and again Thursday night, May 12th, at Whitehall, Waycross. These promotional and fellowship services seem to be not only interesting but of real value. When a house-full of people will come from their farms to the church, arriving so the service can begin at 9:00 o'clock in the evening, and remain until 10:00 or 11:00 o'clock at night, it shows real religion is still strong in our rural sections. And everywhere the people are asking about the results of the Burlington meeting. It is a great inspiration to know how fully people become interested in such fine movements.

ORDINATION OF DAVID W. SHEPHERD, at Columbus United Church, will take place Thursday, May 19th. Letters missive have been sent to the following churches: Lanett, Ala., Christian; Richland, Ga., Roanoke, Ala., Christian; LaGrange, United; Langdale, Ala., Christian; Barnesville, Ga., Congregational; Millersville, Ala., Bethel, Congregational; Cochran, Pleasant Hill, Congregational; Meansville, Congregational; Millersville, Ala., Oak Hill, Congregational. The individuals invited are: Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, Dr. W. J. Campbell, Rev. C. W. Hanson, Rev. T. J. Dean, Dr. F. P. Ensminger, Rev. M. J. Sweet. Since Mr. Shepherd came to Columbus Church April 1st, marked increase in every department is noted. A large crowd was present on Mothers' Day, at which the charter membership roll of the United Church was closed. It was a great meeting. In the evening there were forty-six present at Christian Endeavor meeting. This is a new organization which promises well for the church. The pastor-at-large preached at both the morning and evening services. He also baptized two young people, using the method of immersion, which was the choice of the candidates. The work in this church is in every way very encouraging.

"HEAPS OF FUN," one young minister writes: "I am having heaps of fun planning my church work and then setting my shoulder to the wheel and working it out." His latest plans are: Male quartet and an orchestra for the Sunday School. Another young pastor writes with enthusiasm of the success of a Mothers' and Daughters' banquet. However, he admits there were some heartaches connected with it as he and his wife had to straighten out a few "boners" that were "pulled off." He says: "Such things happen when we try to teach others to run things. It is often better to do things yourself and prevent too many mistakes, but in the long run it is better to lead and let others work." Many a pastor knows what it is to have to atone for the boners of others. Another pastor of a small village church writes of the success of their adult Sunday School class, which is conducted in the form of a forum. He says the success is due to the fact that each one is given an opportunity to express his own views without fear of contradiction or wrangling. He says there are hardly any two who look at things alike but all are seeking the truth and this complete freedom with entire respect for each other's views has made possible a successful class or forum and that the result is a fine spiritual growth.

GIVE THE PEOPLE A CHANCE TO GIVE.

The man who drops a dollar bill on the collection plate usually feels quite proud of himself, for he has done a noble deed without seriously disrupting his personal finances. The same psychology applies to the Dollar Plan which is now before the churches. Every man, woman, and child who fills a coin card will enjoy the satisfaction of doing "their share" in meeting the emergency which confronts the common enterprises of our churches. That dollar will symbolize our loyalty to the wider mission of the church in a time of need. The more people who participate, the better for them and for the churches. The crux of the whole matter is giving them the opportunity to give. Where the dollars are asked for in an effective way, they will be had. All that can properly be asked of the pastors is that they put the matter up to their people as an opportunity to help, rather than a burden to be grudgingly assumed. To those of our readers who happen to be laymen, and whose pastors have not yet mentioned the Dollar Plan, we have a suggestion to offer. Why not lend the dear gentleman a little encouragement by suggesting to him that you have a dollar to give, and that probably there are others in the congregation who are like-minded? Ministers are often timid souls especially in times such as these, but if a few dollars are thrust upon them they are quite likely to rise up and ask for more. Why not "work" your pastor?—The Congregationalist.

ELON DOLLAR-A-MONTH CLUB.

The charter members of the Dollar-a-Month Club are now more than a month old. Their second installment is due. Many of these members paid more than one month in advance. Some have sent in their second dollar, but there are still others due their second installment. It is the hope and purpose of the club that no member will wait for a reminder, but will, out of interest and loyalty, forward his payment promptly. The membership is slowly, but steadily, increasing. With but little effort 12 new members have been added this week, giving us a total membership of 103. This means $103.00 a month, or $1,236.00 a year. Our next goal to be reached will be 1,000 and then the final goal of 5,000. If the members of the Alumni Association, of the church, and the friends of the college will just volunteer and send their memberships in, what a wonderful thing it will be. When this article reaches you, it will only be a few days until Commencement.

We all need encouragement. The Board of Trustees needs encouragement. The faculty and student body needs encouragement. If 100 readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will mail their memberships, together with one dollar each to the college, so as to reach us by Elon College Day, on Tuesday, May 24th, it would certainly make an inspiring announcement. Individuals, Sunday Schools, Sunday School classes, Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies could easily join the Dollar-a-Month Club. We are not asking anybody for large gifts, but we are asking everybody for small gifts. Now is the time to lend the college assistance. Come on, friends of the college—let's take the question mark out of Elon's future and hush once and forever any rumor to the effect that the college will not open!

Five thousand members of this Club will make us safe. If you have not joined, send in your membership at once—become another of Elon's boosters. Last week we reported 91 memberships. We have received at the office this week $107.00 on this Dollar-a-Month Club. We welcome the following new members:

Mrs. W. P. Lawrence, Elon College, N. C. . . .	$1.00
Mrs. T. H. Macintosh, Asheville, N. C.	1.00
Elon College Book Club, Elon College, N. C.	1.00
A. L. Combs, Burlington, N. C.	2.00
M. W. Hollowell, Portsmouth, Va.	2.00
Walter Crump Wicker, Elon College, N. C. . . .	2.00
Walton E. Brill, Hook's Mills, W. Va.	2.00
Oma U. Johnson, Elon College, N. C.
R. S. Rainey, Monroe Road, Charlotte, N. C. . .	1.00
D. L. Newman, Elon College, N. C.
George Colclough, Elon College, N. C.	1.00
Ruth Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C.

Fill out the blank, clip it, attach a dollar bill, and send it in.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THROUGH HORROR TO SORROW.

There is no other way to contemplate the awful crime and tragedy of kidnapping and brutal murder of the Lindbergh baby than that of horror. It is, indeed, difficult for law-abiding citizens to contemplate the depths of depravity, crime, and ignominy to which beings called human can descend, who will snatch an innocent baby from a bed of slumber, and ruthlessly murder the helpless and smiling child.

One shudders in contemplating the horror of it and one is compelled to conclude that there are yet in the world people demon-possessed. The devil himself could have done no worse than this fiend has done, who, in cold blood and without provocation, murdered with violence the Lindbergh baby.

And then, beyond the horror, comes the sorrow. Because the Lindberghs, by their lives of heroism and daring, had endeared themselves to the heart of the world, the world is brought to sorrow through their sorrow. It is not a family sorrow, nor even a nation's sorrow, but a world's sorrow; for, through his simple and well-balanced life, Col. Lindbergh had made himself, by modest but unspared bravery, known to the world and beloved of the world, and so sorrow comes to every heart capable of responding to the call and the occasion of that noble virtue. In such sorrow the mind turns in its quest for relief, not to things earthly, but to things heavenly; not to man, but to God; and so through the shock of horror we seek relief from sorrow through access to the throne of grace and of God.

We do not know how others view the matter, but our own feeling and supplications seem to find some relief and expression in the words that Rev. James Shera Montgomery, the chaplain of our National Congress at Washington in the House of Representatives, uttered in the morning of May 13th, as reported, by the Associated Press:

"O thou eternal God," it went, "our words falter as the shadows of the nation's sorrow fall and deepen.

"Yonder home today is a world shrine, at whose foot-stool we tarry. The night winds of sorrow murmur as tears fall and sink on the curls of gold, matted and damp.

"Merciful father, may the parents be fed no longer with the bread of affliction; do thou give them rest which the world can nevermore defile.

"Consider and hear us, O Lord. Ours is national humiliation as we vision the depths of this infamy.

"Arouse the public conscience that a slight atonement may be made, by smiting murderers and outlaws into the dust.

"Cleanse the arteries of our whole country where breed and swarm the filth and crime of our national household.

"Almighty God lift us up, let us see, lead us on; hear us for thy mercy's sake.

"Through Jesus Christ, our Lord, amen."

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The 42nd annual commencement of Elon College begins Sunday May 22nd, with the baccalaureate sermon by Dr. William Mosley Brown of Virginia. Dr. Brown is a distinguished educator and a very eloquent and able minister. He has many friends at Elon and throughout the church who will hear him with profit in his message to the graduating class and their friends in the college chapel at 11:00 A. M., Sunday, May 22nd. At 8:00 P. M., the same day, the president of the College, Dr. L. E. Smith will give the final word of the president to the graduating class. This will be Dr. Smith's first message to a graduating class of the college, and those who are fortunate enough to hear him will get a great message.

The Class Day exercises begin at 10:30 A. M., Monday, the 23rd, and there will be a varying program and departmental exhibits through the day. At 8:00 P. M., the alumni orator will be Rev. H. Lee Scott, Waynesboro, Va.

The great day of "the feast" this year is expected to be Tuesday, "Elon College Day," a new feature of Commencement Week. There will be several addresses to the alumni and assembled multitude, one by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle of Suffolk, Va., another by Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, Chattanooga, Tenn., and other able and eloquent speakers who have the Elon spirit. There is to be a "free barbecue dinner" and get together and an inspirational service for alumni and friends of the college. May 24th, is "Elon College Day," and it is planned to make it a memorable occasion through the gathering of Elon College friends from all quarters. On Wednesday, the 25th, the graduating exercises begin at 10:30 in the morning. There are sixty-one members of the Senior Class, candidates for diplomas; and three for departmental diplomas, making a total of sixty-four in the class, one of the largest classes ever graduating from the institution. During the exercises, Dr. W. L. Poteat, president-emeritus of Wake Forest College, will deliver the literary address. Dr. Poteat is well known, is a great platform speaker as well as a noted teacher and educator, and his address will attract and will prove profitable to all who are fortunate enough to hear it. The trustees have their annual meeting on Wednesday, the 25th.

The commencement gives promise of being an epoch in our church and educational life, and of no less interest and merit than any of the events during the forty-two years of the existence of the college. Elon College opened its doors to students in the fall of 1890, and for forty-two years now it has been making its contribution to our church life in particular and to the life of the States and the nation through professions and the various callings. Christian men and women have gone from its halls of learning to lives of usefulness, honor and renown in the various vocations. The college has thus become established in the minds and the hearts of a multitude, and no doubt a multitude will gather at this sacred shrine May 22nd to 25th, to attend, to have a part in and to catch the spirit and the inspiration of the great and gala occasion.

MINISTERIAL UNIONS.

Nothing adds more to the good will and co-operative spirit of ministers in the same denomination, and in different denominations, and at so little cost of time and money, as a monthly ministerial union. When the pastors of a town and county, or a city, meet in regular monthly sessions to consider community interests and religious conditions, the study of such questions brings them into sympathetic touch and study of questions that concern and interest all of them. They soon learn that they are closer together in their thought, their interest, and their obligations to one another and the community than they can possibly learn in the study of such questions apart from others. Churches, ministers, and denominations are not as far apart as they imagine. Nothing serves to unify their thought, their feeling, and their relations so much as personal contacts and the study of common problems together. No two races are so far apart by nature as the African and the Caucasian races, and yet no two races live so harmoniously as the white race and the Negro race in the Southern States of America. Common interests and close contacts help this situation and benefit both races.

In Eastern Virginia we have a Ministerial Union in Suffolk composed of five denominations in the city and Nansemond County: Baptist, Christian, Episcopal, Methodist and Presbyterian. The result is that harmony and cooperation are one of the features of relations in this section.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference has a similar meeting once a month at Norfolk, it works in a conference as well as in a city. The expense of this Conference Ministerial Union is pooled so that all share alike the expense of the meetings. Those who live in Norfolk pay as much as those who live in Newport News or Richmond. The most successful pastors are those who attend the Ministerial Union. It is a sort of seminary where experience and sympathy create cooperative and efficient service for the churches.

DEEPLY IMPRESSED.

I was deeply impressed with the determined purpose of everyone present to actually unite our forces in some satisfactory and legally workable organism. This seemed to be the one thought that inspired the public speeches and the efforts of committees. I felt this spirit everywhere and rejoiced in the brotherly spirit manifested.

The results obtained will go a long way toward encouraging other union movements. That is, I think the Burlington Convention educational in its influence upon other communions in the South. After all our talking we have now come to an agreement that will unfold with the years and bring us into a working unity of great practical usefulness.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE BURLINGTON CONVENTION.

By WILSON P. MINTON, D. D.

At the request of the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, I am glad to try to set down some impressions and interpretations of the Convention held in Burlington, N. C., April 26th to 29th. It is my conviction that the actions taken there are not only directly in line with our denominational efforts for the complete union of our Congregational and Christian Churches, but that what was done there opens up a new and wonderful area for service to add to the already splendid record of our churches in the Southeast. In its significance for Christian Union and Religious Liberty, and in its far-reaching possibilities for the future, the action of the Burlington Convention compares favorably with that of the Pilgrims in the beginnings of the Congregational Church, that of O'Kelly, Jones and Stone in the beginnings of the Christian Church and that of these two bodies in Seattle last June in becoming a united church.

The finest thing about the Burlington Convention was the spirit manifested by the vast majority of both the Congregational and Christian representatives present when these far-reaching changes were made. There could be no doubt of the earnest desire for a complete merger in the spirit of our common Lord. When the proper officials go over the records they will doubtless find some resolutions which seem a bit clouded or even conflicting, but even that difficulty was splendidly cared for by the Convention in leaving to a small authorized group the power to make any necessary readjustments just so that real and complete merger is achieved. No technicalities can defeat such a spirit as was there manifested, and the officers charged with the task have a clear field before them in putting the new plans into operation at the earliest possible moment.

It should be borne in mind that in reality two Conventions met at Burlington. One was the larger, overhead, inspirational organization authorized two years ago and which is known as the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, Unincorporated. This Convention includes all the Congregational and Christian Churches of Virginia, the Carolinas, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee and Kentucky. Having organized and elected its officers at Burlington last week, it is now a going concern to meet from time to time for inspiration and fellowship as may be determined. It has no administrative functions and desires none. It exists solely for the beautiful purpose of genuine Christian fellowship between our Congregational and Christian Churches of the entire Southeast. But it is made up of several administrative units such as the State Conference of Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, and the Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated.

This last named Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, was the other Convention meeting at Burlington last week. It met in regular session at the same time and place as the larger, inspirational Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, with the intention of taking another forward step toward complete merger of all our churches of both groups in the Southeast. At once the Southern Christian Convention recognized that there were some Congregational Churches in the present territory of its Convention and that complete merger depended on some action that would create an administrative unit embracing all the churches of both groups in that territory, while at the same time conserving all the rights and privileges of both groups as at present obtain.

On Thursday morning, April 28th, the Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, met this challenge for a complete merger and larger service by the unanimous adoption of a series of four resolutions authorizing its Executive Board with full power to revise the charters of the Convention and its auxiliary incorporations and institutions to become the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, Incorporated, succeeding the Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, and carrying all its former rights and duties. Thus the door is open for all the Congregational and Christian Churches in present Southern Christian Convention territory to unite in the newly authorized Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, Incorporated, which is to function, with only minor changes, substantially as the present Southern Christian Convention has been functioning.

But the new organization has the wonderful advantages of fellowship and service with the splendid Congregational Churches and ministers of that area and the additional advantage of its newly merged form of being one of the administrative units of our united denomination, carrying on its former work and at the same time becoming part of the larger inspirational fellowship of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches.

Of course, there are many details to be worked out and readjustments to be made, but the Convention wisely left these to its Executive Board and a Committee of Ten of whom five of the latter are from the Congregational Church and five from the Christian Church. If every church and every pastor will cooperate with these authorized officials in patiently but persistently working out the details involved, I am confident that a new day is at hand for the cause of Religious Liberty and Christian Union in the Southeast. It will be made possible by the compelling impact of the example you are already beginning to set by your united fellowship and enlarged service. I repeat the conviction that if you carry this thing through as you have so splendidly planned, it may well compare favorably in its possibilities with similar movements of our religious fathers in the past.

Dayton, Ohio.

REV. C. REXFORD RAYMOND.

Fraternity, freedom, and frankness marked the epoch-making Convention at Burlington. Probably the greatest result of our meeting together was the way in which both fellowship and freedom were achieved and preserved, neither at the expense of the other.

We emerged from our midnight committee meetings and the unanimous action of the delegates in the Convention with the same type of double organization as that effected at Seattle. Just as the unincorporated General Council formed at Seattle, which joins all our churches in one united church, also includes incorporated bodies which will carry on special tasks and conserve vested funds and interests, so our organization formed at Burlington recognized the special responsibilities of the Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, and our various incorporated State Conferences.

The two Conventions recognized at Burlington are similar in name but differ in function. The Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, Unincorporated, uniting all our Congregational and Christian Churches from the Atlantic Ocean to the Father of Waters, and from the Ohio River to the Gulf, brings us all together for inspiration and fellowship. A large part of this unincorporated Convention is the Southern Christian Convention, Incorporated, the name of which is soon to be changed, to include the word Congregational, so that Congregational State Conferences which desire to do so may unite with it.

The vast area of this region and the variety of our institutions may make the immediate union of all our State Conferences in this incorporated Convention impracticable. But the Southeast Convention, Unincorporated, now unites us all in one fellowship. Progress in our closer union for our united work will come with our growing mutual acquaintance. The new friendships and personal contacts established at Burlington will make that week memorable in the lives of all of us. These friendships are spiritual assets of the united church which may easily outweigh in value all the machinery which we set up at the Convention. We came away from Burlington with joyful hopes and happy memories.

Chattanooga, Tenn.

REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

The Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches impressed me in several ways. There was, it seemed to me, a spiritual atmosphere in the sessions of the Convention. In spite of the fact that there was necessarily a great deal of routine and much detail, it seemed to me that undergirding it and permeating it there was a distinct spiritual atmosphere. Personally, I got the impression that people had been praying for the Convention before it met, and were praying for it while it was in session.

Then, too, there was wholesome fellowship. This grew in large part out of the spiritual atmosphere. Where there is the spirit of Christ, there is always good fellowship, and with these friends, both old and new, to think and plan and work together for the Kingdom—this produces fellowship that enriches and inspires life. Personally, I always feel that the fellowship at any church gathering alone is worth all it costs to attend such a gathering.

And as one who was not "on the inside," I was impressed by the apparent purpose of those who were present, to find a way whereby in harmony the two fellowships of churches might make more real and more vital the merger or the union. There was a frank recognition of the difficulties involved. But there seems to be a feeling that the thing was of God, and that there was a way out of, or through, the difficulties. There was, of course, difference of opinion, but there seemed to be always the best spirit. Those who differed in their opinions from each other may have thought that others were wrong in their ideas, but they apparently felt that they were right in their spirit.

And could one have attended the Convention without being impressed by the strategic place which Elon holds in the work of the churches of the Convention, and the absolute necessity for adequate support of the college on the part of the members of the Convention itself. One feels that if our folks really knew the facts, they would do more about meeting the situation.

Suffolk, Va.

DR. EDWIN C. GILLETTE.

The Burlington Convention is a very stimulating and pleasant memory. Nothing is so stimulating and vitalizing as to see Christian men and women face difficult problems of readjustment involving sacrifices of customs and traditions, and doing so in the spirit of self-sacrificing devotion to a noble Christian purpose. The very fine Christian spirit of the Southern Convention in the whole matter of the completion of the merger warmed our hearts and renewed our faith and reassured us as to the ultimate victory in the movement for Christian unity.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The question is often asked, "Is the world growing better or worse?" My answer to this question is, that "The good is growing better, and the bad is growing worse;" but, "that the good is gaining and, therefore, the world is growing better." There are many who think the world, and by the world is meant the inhabitants of the world—mankind—is growing worse; but, usually, they mean the people in their own country. For consideration, let us think of our own country—the United States of America.

There are many evidences of moral and social improvement as well as spiritual progress. The public schools have multiplied until hardly any child grows up without educational advantages. That is a sign of improvement for the rising generation. Then think of the Sunday School as an institution in which Scripture, prayer, song, and liberality are taught and social contacts are made under the most favorable conditions. Children and young people from all walks of life are thrown together under circumstances that eliminate financial, ancestral and educational distinctions. Rich children and poor children did not meet on equality in former years. Never, in the history of the race, were social barriers so fully removed as in this country of government by the people and for the people. Think, too, of hospitals in which the afflicted, without regard to race or financial conditions, are received and treated on perfect equality. That shows improvement in the sympathy and service of society for the afflicted. In addition to these evidences of improvement, think of the welfare movements, the personal and cooperative charities, the alms houses, and the busy ministers and church societies doing what they can to relieve the needy and improve social and moral conditions. The Gospel and its products never did reach so many people in such a kindly way as at the present time. Depression has not reduced this kindly feeling and this helpful disposition. This country is full of sympathy, spiritual aspiration and generous service.

On the other hand, evil is at work in such a way and under such conditions that many reach conclusions that lead them to believe that society is on the slide that leads to destruction instead of on the road that leads to salvation. They tell us that religion is on the decline, that crime is on the increase, that violators of law are multiplying, that home-life has lost its influence, and that card parties and moving pictures are ruining society, the church and the nation; that young people are drifting in this current that moves toward destruction. That one side of human society is growing worse must be admitted; but the other side is improving. Where there is one card party there are two missionary societies; where there is one criminal there are a hundred law-abiding citizens; where there is one drunkard there are a thousand sober citizens; where there is one couple going wrong, there are hundreds of virtuous young people. Good roads, automobiles, newspapers, electric lights and opportunities for doing wrong have deceived people. Papers print the bad and leave out the good. They tell about one robber and say nothing about the hundred honest men. They tell about one bootlegger, and say nothing about the hundred honest men who obey the Eighteenth Amendment.

ARE DAYS OF REVIVALS PAST?

Not infrequently we hear Christian leaders say, "The days of revivals are past." Is this true? In the light of experience and observation as an evangelist, I am constrained to question, yea, to deny, the statement, and contend that the days of revivals are not over. It is as possible to have a revival today as when Paul preached on Mar's Hill, provided God's people are willing to pay the price.

The Christian Business Men's Revival at Chicago, furnishes the most recent and best illustration of God's willingness and ability to send a revival even to so wicked a city.

In April, 1930, a group of Chicago's Christian business men met in the Capitol Building to pray for a revival. They gathered together regularly for nine months. Then met at a luncheon to discuss the possibility of a revival, the probability of a revival in Chicago, and the advisability of starting the work in the heart of Chicago's business activity, the Loop.

After earnest prayer and careful discussion they felt led to rent a theater in the Loop and begin noon-day meetings for the up and out as well as the down and out. They had opposition to encounter, and criticism to endure, but God had spoken, and, like Abraham of old, they moved forward. On Tuesday (noon), January 6, 1931, the first service was held in the Garrick Theatre. From the outset the blessing and power of God have rested upon the movement. The attendance and interest have continuously increased. The meetings have been carried on every day in the week (Saturday and Sunday excepted) for the past seventeen months. The attendance has been from 500 to 1,100. I have been there when as many as 300 were turned away. The average attendance is about 700.

These noon-day meetings, now being held in the Adelphi Theater, are broadcast over Station WMBI. It is estimated that the audience in radio-land numbers 100,000 daily.

Pastors and evangelists from various states in the Union and Canada have been asked by the committee to do the preaching. It was the privilege and joy of the writer to be the speaker in January and March of this year. How I thank God for the opportunity to know and fellowship with these consecrated business men.

Thousands have been won to Christ in these services. Hundreds have been restored to fellowship with God and hundreds of thousands blessed and drawn closer to the Lord because of the meetings. Moreover other such meetings have sprung up in different cities due to the faith and work of these earnest Christian business men.

It has cost $25,000 to carry on these noon-day meetings in the Loop for the past seventeen months. Not one offering has been taken in the theater. The collection plates are never passed there. This amount has been given by God's people.

Chicago has never seen nor experienced anything like this since the days of D. L. Moody. To me this is indisputable evidence of God's willingness and ability to revive his people and own and bless his word with the salvation of the lost.

Yes, I firmly believe that it is just as possible to have a revival now as when Paul preached on Mar's Hill, provided we are willing to pay the price as set forth in II. Chronicles 7:14: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." The Lord is the same yesterday, today and forever, therefore, the days of revivals are not over.

We are told that the gates are closed to this field of service. They ARE shut to sensationalism, dogmatism, vulgarism, stereotypism and formalism; but they are wide open to scriptural evangelism. "The church must evangelize or fossilize," and she is fast realizing this fact. Pastors who have minimized evangelism and criticized evangelists, are now crying for a "Revival." If some of the pastors who have opposed evangelism should discard all members who were converted in revival meetings, they would not have enough left to stir soup for the Ladies' Aid. Evangelism is calling for men and women, Spirit-filled and Spirit-led; men free from sordid greed for gold; men fully surrendered to the task, and definitely endued by the Holy Spirit for the accomplishment of that task; men who have a real passion for the salvation of the lost, and a sublime faith in the power of Jesus Christ to save. God, make of us such men.

We have stressed organization, stewardship and Christian education long enough. Let us stress evangelism, seek first the lost, and all these things shall be added unto us. Let us pay the price and then pray for and expect a God-honoring, Christ-exalting, Bible-reading, family-praying, brother-loving, heart-cleansing, soul-saving revival from heaven. Let us cry out

"Revive thy work, O Lord,
Thy mighty arm make bare;
Speak with thy voice that wakes the dead,
And make thy people hear.

"Revive thy work, O Lord,
Disturb this sleep of death;
Quicken the smoldering embers now
By thine almighty breath.

"Revive thy work, O Lord,
And give refreshing showers,
The glory shall be all thine own,
The blessing shall be ours."

HARRY MCCORMICK LINTZ.

THE MESSAGE OF PENTECOST.

May 15th is the anniversary of the Day of Pentecost. What is its message for us today? The first disciples, after their Day of Pentecost, were aflame with the conviction that their crucified risen Lord was with them by his Spirit. Immediately they bore witness to this faith. In the power of this conviction they bore witness to their faith from city to city, both by their words and most of all by their lives.

The indwelling Spirit transformed them into a new type of human being. Their deeds became the acts of Christ. Ordinary men and women became invincible. Wherever they went they carried Christ and swiftly conquered opposition by their moral and spiritual achievements. In less than three centuries the message of Pentecost had overthrown the official religion of the Roman Empire.

Today humanity needs the message of Pentecost, witnessed by the lives of men and women who will let the living Christ act through them. Shall the faith that overthrew superstitious belief in demons quail before the paganism of today? Must Christians ask the underworld to protect our babies? Racketeers exact tribute from honest business because business men who bear the name Christian do not trust Christ. Compromise by giving bribes to grafters, if we will, but do not mock the name of Christ by calling ourselves Christians when we condone such cowardice and crime. Urge and vote for increased armaments, if we will, but let us not suppose that such deeds are the acts of Christ in us.

These and similar comments raise the question as to how we may know the mind of Christ upon modern problems. What are Christian values today? It may not be enough to quote the New Testament. Problems face us today that had not arisen 1900 years ago. We must have such a present companionship with Christ that we can know his mind upon our problems. The message of Pentecost is that this constant fellowship is possible. Call it mysticism or supernaturalism or what you will, the central fact of Christian faith is this possibility of abiding in Christ. This is what we need today to solve our problems.

If we abide in him and he abides in us, all that we need shall be done in us and through us. When we abide in Christ we have such a belief in God that we are ready to die for our faith. We do not desert Christ's leadership and excuse ourselves by saying: "A man must live." We do not excuse sinful conformity by saying: "While in Rome we must do as the Romans do." We are apostles who do not measure life by our ability to "keep up with the Joneses." We are a part of that army of martyrs, prophets and saints who have from age to age manifested the life of Christ in the midst of the world.

Nothing short of this will save us from chaos amid the problems of today. Our Christian faith is something bigger than our cathedrals. It is deeper than our financial budgets for home expenses and missions. All our sermons, prayers, and hymns are cant and empty of meaning unless they are the means of grace, leading us to the continuous adventure of comradeship with our living risen Christ. We need Pentecost today.

ELON COLLEGE DAY.

Elon College will observe its 42nd Commencement, beginning Sunday, May 22nd, with the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class. Dr. William Moseley Brown, formerly of Washington and Lee University, and of Atlantic University, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon at 11:00 A. M. Dr. Leon Edgar Smith, president of the college, will deliver the baccalaureate address at 7:30 P. M. At the close of the evening service, the president and Mrs. Smith will hold a reception in the parlors of West Dormitory for the members of the graduating class, their friends and members of the faculty and their wives. Elon College is graduating one of the largest classes in its history, numbering 60 splendid young men and women, equipped and prepared for the responsibilities of life. Monday is class day exercises, with Community Tea and Fellowship hour in the afternoon and the Annual Musical in the evening at 8:00 o'clock. Tuesday is Elon College Day. This is to be one of the most important days in the history of Elon College. If the members of the church, the alumni and the friends of the college will assemble on that day to consider the great service that the college has rendered, and the imperative need of the college in the future, we will find great joy in facing her needs and in joining our hearts, hands and purses in a determined effort to meet these needs. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Christian Church in Suffolk, will speak at 11:00 A. M. Following his address, D. C. Rexford Raymond, of Chattanooga, Tenn., will speak. Opportunity will be given to others to express themselves regarding Elon's present and future.

The Sunday School orchestras of the Christian Church of Richmond and the First Christian Church of Suffolk, Va., will furnish music for the occasion.

There are no eating places at Elon College except the dining hall. We will be unable to accommodate all who come for lunch, consequently, we are arranging to serve a free barbecue lunch on the college campus. Churches and friends of the college are donating pigs for this barbecue. The butchering will be done the night before and the meat placed over the coals immediately. The barbecue as served will be absolutely sanitary and perfectly safe. Come and enjoy the occasion with us.

The Alumni Association will hold its business meeting at 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon. The Annual Alumni dinner will be served in the dining hall at 6:30 P. M. The price is 75c a plate. The Annual Alumni address will be delivered by Rev. H. Lee Scott, of the Class of '23, in the auditorium at 8:00 o'clock.

The graduating exercises will take place Wednesday, at 10:30 A. M., in the auditorium. The address will be delivered by Dr. William L. Po-teat, president-emeritus of Wake Forest College. You are cordially invited to the entire program and will find a most hearty welcome.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Our loving Father, thou gavest to man a world of beauty. Sin veils its loveliness. By Satan's hand difficulty and distress abound. In mercy, Father, hasten the day when comfort and gladness shall fill the earth; when avenues of woe shall become channels of holy acclaim. Thine is the power, ours the part of faith and works. May we ever remember that when these are finished, with the swiftness of lightning Satan shall fall to utter destruction. Make our strivings pure. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

A SPIRITUAL BODY.

There is one spiritual body on earth and with us. That is the church. Paul, in writing to the Colossians, made this plain: "He is the head of the body, the church." And then further in the same letter, Paul refers in like manner to the fact that the church is spiritual in these words: "For his body's sake, which is the church." This is said, Paul declares, that Jesus "the Christ may have the preeminence" and that, through his spiritual body, the church, his preeminent power and life may be made manifest. Would it not be well for us to bear in mind this salient truth, that a spiritual body has a spiritual task as its chief undertaking and consideration?

The world doesn't regard the church in this light, and is ready to criticize the church if it does not measure up to the demands of the world in matters political, economic, benevolent, civic and the rest. The church was not founded and has not been carried on to manage the kingdoms of this world. Christ's kingdom was not of this world. His was a heavenly kingdom and his task, through the church, is that of building the kingdom of heaven on earth. There are those in the world today who are saying that the church should control industry, fix the hours for labor in factories, govern the economic order and steer politics into clear waters. All of this sounds good, and certainly such problems demand Christian fortitude and the insight of revelation. But Christ did not lay these things as a burden on the church. Christ did lay upon his disciples the task, and gave them the charge, that they should give the gospel to the world and thus teach mankind the lessons of love and mercy and justice. And so evangelists and teachers, sacraments and services were instituted. But it will be well for us of the church to remember that our Lord said when we pray, say "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Thus it was a spiritual task to which a spiritual body was to set itself; the task of breaking to perishing souls the bread of life, and of feeding those hungry for eternal truth, that bread of which if one eats he shall never hunger, and that water of which if one drinks he shall never thirst.

A spiritual body, the church, undertaking a spiritual task, that of revealing the love and the saving power of our Lord to the world, is a supreme task for which the church was planted and for which it exists, and we should bear in mind that the people of the world today are as hungry for life, the bread that sustains the soul, as there are those who are hungry for material bread that feeds and sustains the body. The church cannot control industry and politics and government. Winning souls to our Lord and building up the kingdom of heaven on earth may result in this through the wisdom of those who are brought into the church, but for the church itself to undertake these things is for the church to tread on dangerous ground and go beyond that for which it was instituted of the Lord. The church is a spiritual body, the only spiritual body on earth, and its task is spiritual—that of building up a spiritual kingdom on earth—giving the Gospel to all creatures.

A PERSONAL LETTER FROM JAPAN.

Tokio, April 19, 1932.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

Where or when I got the following article I cannot tell. I took it from some newspaper and pasted it in a book. Recently when I came across it again, it seemed so pertinent to the present day discussion about war, that I am making this copy for you:

"Do we still think of honor as we fight the larger duel of war? Just how do we aid this strange honor by mashing the brains out of a man—or out of a regiment of men—who have not the least notion of what the mashing is about? We send men sneaking around behind trees and rocks with loaded rifles in their hands, waiting for a sly shot at other sneaking men—when they are not looking. We force pink-faced boys to go to war, and threaten to shoot them if they try to run away. We pray for some new bullet, some deadlier kind of shell, some new or novel form of death which will blow the enemy into tiny, bloody bits before he has a dog's chance to protect himself; throw out blockades to starve the babies and women left at home, and pray that they will die quickly—in heaps—for that destroys the fighting spirit of the men at the front; isolate some decent men in an army camp, subject them to a moral degradation and filth that no other place on earth could produce, as we slowly transform them from decent men to fighting beasts. And while we are dehumanizing them, we pay men behind the lines to become public liars, to 'further the cause and keep up the morale,' by spreading lying propaganda that we would jail a man for spreading in the piping times of peace. Profiteers stealing the common treasure, 'patriots' selling the army rotten meat and ineffective powder and paper-soled shoes; lies, corruption, immorality, deceit, atrocity, and murder; and we have the unholy gall to call it honor."

The class of men and women with whom I work in Japan are the middle class. They are peace-loving and talk to me freely of the violation of the Golden Rule in the present war. We did not know that Dr. Nitobe, a much-beloved Christian statesman, was taken from the hospital where he was sick, taken by army officers back to the place where he had made a speech against war, and made to apologize. It seems to me that if I had been in his place, I should have preferred to give up my life rather than do it.

I have heard it said that a man is not really rich until he has borrowed two or three thousand dollars which he can never pay back. Borrowed money has come into Japan by the hundred millions, but Japan will never be able to pay it back. If possible, borrowing will continue. The present debt is over six billion yen (three billion dollars). The cost of the Manchurian and Shanghai fracas has been Y148,000,000 and the government is much concerned about a debt of Y67,000,000, which they cannot pay for lack of cash. With all this money, Japan could probably have bought up most of the coal mines and put her nationals there in a better financial condition than they have ever had before. It looks to me that the withdrawal of troops from China is due more to a lack of funds than willingness to stop the fight. The Japanese tell me that a dozen men in the government are the cause of all the trouble. But these men not only control the army and navy, but also the newspapers, and all sorts of stories are afloat of the trickery and deceit of the Chinese. A railroad explosion wrecked a troop train in Manchuria and this was called an "outrage." But nothing is said of the 800,000 people rendered homeless in Shanghai, and the loss of 450,000,000 Mexican dollars. In "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain" all the warring nations take the lead.

I have no doubt but a Japanese government over Manchuria would be much better than any the Chinese can offer, but that does not prove that the Chinese desire it. I consider the government of Japan as good as any, with probably less graft than is to be found at home, and criminals have far less chance to succeed.

Christian men from Japan met a like body in Shanghai, where the two nations had a love feast together and showed what may be accomplished when men meet together in the name of the Lord.

A. D. WOODWORTH.

A Chinese girl in Tientsin took her own life. She wrote a note, says Rev. Harold W. Matthews of that city, which said: "There are three kinds of people in the world: those who help society by creating something; those who neither help nor harm society; those who are harmful to society. The doctor has told me I cannot be the first. I have no wish to be either of the other kinds—so I am leaving the world."

TITHING IN HARD TIMES.

By DAN B. BRUMMITT.

There is no better time to begin to tithe than a time of business depression. Then it takes both faith and courage.

If tithing were a sure thing, like buying five dollar bills for $4.00, it would have no more value than any other form of bargain hunting. Everybody would tithe; the man most careful to pay the tenth might be the most avaricious man in town.

That's not the tithing God has promised to bless. Tithing is a sure thing; and usually it leads to material betterment. But not always; and never in any magical or non-moral way.

The law of the tithe is not a law for times and seasons. It does not rest on circumstances, good or bad. The true Christian will begin to obey it as soon as he realizes that it is a law, and that it is for his guidance and good.

All true enough; nevertheless, there are special reasons and special values attached to tithing in hard times.

It is easy enough to thank God for pleasant experiences, though we know that often they may be spiritually barren. It is not so easy to be thankful for adversity, though difficulties and disappointments in our material affairs can provide the finest of disciplines.

Listen to Habakkuk, the prophet:

"For though the fig tree shall not flourish,
Neither shall fruit be in the vines;
The labor of the olive shall fail;
And the fields shall yield no food;
The flock shall be cut off from the fold,
And there shall be no herd in the stalls:
Yet will I rejoice in the Lord,
I will joy in the God of my salvation."

The tither who can make the prophet's words his own will not be deceived by prosperity, if and when it comes.

Prosperity is quite likely to come to the tither; remember that. Somebody has counted the Bible's references to giving. They total seventy-two. And forty-eight "show promise of God's blessing to the giver."

During a spell of hard times a bank auditor examining the books of many Toronto business houses found entries in the books of John Macdonald & Co., that showed the firm was setting aside a tenth of its profits for religious and philanthropic work. He closed his audit and recommended to the bank that the Macdonald house should have all the credit it desired. It was the beginning of a new prosperity.

John H. Converse, when president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, was a tither who believed in doing more in hard times. One year, when his business was less profitable than usual, he gave $400,000 to religious and charitable work.

It is known and admitted that not everybody gets ahead financially by tithing. Why should they? "Getting ahead" may be a great curse. A tithing business man puts it thus:

"There are other successes than money ones. I've got something more than money out of tithing; it's given me happiness and contentment that I never could have bought. Suppose some of the New England families who tithed did not succeed financially? Could science measure the contentment which these families might have through knowing that God was a partner in home affairs?"

A man who is almost at the end of his resources will find his time of stress a good time to make a new study of his life.

The head of a great business did this once, when he was worse than bankrupt. One day he opened his Bible at Genesis 28:22, drew a pencil mark around the verse, and said, "From this moment on, as long as I live, of all that God gives me I will give him one-tenth."

Since then he has prospered far beyond the ordinary. But what is more, he has made "hundreds of investments for human betterment and to advance righteousness on earth." The feeling that one can thus be a co-laborer with God is the greatest incentive to true living which man can have. It can make one's sunset days his best days.

A conscientious examination of your affairs may actually show how you can save enough to pay the whole tithe. Consider more methodical ways of buying. Wait a week before buying something you think you want. Buy for use rather than for appearance or luxury-value.

Budget your income and outgo. Many people who begin to spend by budget make a surprising discovery. They find that from ten to twenty cents of their dollar is being spent without producing any corresponding benefit.

So your whole situation may be helped as you see where your tithe can be paid without distress.

Whenever it can be put into practice, there's a big saving hinted at in the old saying, "He who cuts his own firewood is twice warmed."

Hard times are hard times for God as well as for us. His work suffers because, when depression threatens, so many cut off, first of all, their gifts to religion.

Never mind trying to explain the theology of it. You know that benevolent agencies face lessened incomes. Students who would gladly work must leave college for lack of funds; church enterprises are forced to retrench their work; the poor, the sick, the distressed, all must know keener their sufferings because the church has less money to spend in their behalf. So the tither who tithes in hard times is doubly blessed—in his own life in being the friend indeed who comes to the friend in need.

Tithing in hard times is a sharing of life with those whose hard "times" are harder than ours. None of our tithe literally gives "to God;" it goes to men and women like ourselves. It broadens the base on which the world's total usefulness must rest.

Hard times are good times to begin tithing, because it doesn't take so much moral backbone to tithe a small income as a big one. Many people have been tempted to quit tithing because their incomes became "too big to tithe."

A rich man told a missionary secretary during the war, "I'm sorry, doctor, but I can't give you anything for your work this year. Why, my income tax is a million and a quarter."

The tithe in hard times contributes to our spiritual self-respect. When we are prosperous, we may feel—as we should—that the tithe ought to be supplemented by free will offerings and gifts far beyond the tenth.

In hard times we may be able to make these gifts. But we know that in tithing we are acknowledging God, and declaring our faith. We are not offering to God that which has cost us nothing.

It costs, to tithe in hard times. But not to tithe costs more, in values that are real than as ever, and that will last beyond all times, whether hard or easy.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE CONVENTION.

I wish to express my admiration for the frank courageous fashion in which difficult problems were faced, for the quality of leadership, both old and young, and for the very fine spirit of Christian fellowship. I rejoice in the privilege of getting better acquainted with the pastors in the Christian group and my regret is that we have none in Florida to share our fellowship and to give a sense of reality to the merger. Another regret is, not having an opportunity for renewing this fine fellowship for many months. However, I shall think often of the fine friendships formed at Burlington.

Jacksonville, Fla.

MISS MARGUERITE DAVISON.

Perhaps the thing that impressed me the most in the late meeting of the Southeastern Convention was the ease with which the Youth Fellowship launched out upon its united work with no thought of the past or concern for customs of long standing. The adult leaders met for many hours of struggle with traditions and customs that had to be blended into a united program, but these troubles did not disturb the youth. I wonder if this is not indicative of the days to be. The items that loom large to those who are older, matter not at all to the young folks, and, as they come to take the helm, old difficulties will fade away. The thought and effort of the older heads have helped to clear the way for those who are to come in the hope that they may go much further toward universal brotherhood because of the tedious labors of their elders.

It was good to meet the brethren and sisters from all over the Southeast and to think together of a better and more useful life of united service.

Thorsby, Ala.

DR. W. R. KEDZIE.

I was greatly impressed in attending the Convention at Burlington, N. C., by the place in the life of the churches and in the thought of the Convention held by Elon College. It was quite evident that not only has the college furnished much of the leadership of the Christian Churches of the Southeast, but that it has put heart into the whole program of the Convention. Nothing must be allowed to stand in the way of the progress and development of this splendid institution, more needed now than ever since the merging of these two denominations. The merging of denominations is a thrilling experience. Whatever questions or reservations there may have been, if there were such, were kept out of sight and unanimous and hearty action completed the paving of the way for a united service in the Southeast. I was glad to be a witness to it. It was refreshing to come into the friendly fellowship of this group of churches and ministers and a privilege to share in the deliberations. The courteous attention shown on every hand was much appreciated.

Chicago, Ill.

DR. JASON NOBLE PIERCE.

The arranged program of the Convention at Burlington was most excellent, but my chief joy was in the fine spirit that pervaded everything and everybody, and in the real fellowship which characterized the whole assemblage. Real progress was made in giving effect to our church union. My sole fear was that we should not adequately help Elon College, and that we should not convincingly support President Smith in his difficult task. If sufficient was done in those directions, then the Convention was a glorious success.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

HOW BIG ARE WE?

In my home school in North Carolina a little first-grade boy climbed on top of a desk in the midst of school hours, stretched out his tiny arms, and said to the admiring group about him, "See how big I am." He was some boy, in his own opinion.

I am thinking of the thousands of young people in Congregational and Christian Churches throughout the Southeast. Many are scattered along the coastal plains of the Carolinas and Virginia, others dwell among the mountains of our Southern States, some find life happy amid the prairies and bluegrass of Kentucky, and still others think there is no place so fine for living as down where the orange blossoms grow and the palm trees wave their fronds in the sea breezes of sunny Florida. Wouldn't it be quite all right for us to stretch out our arms (in imagination, at least), clasp hands in fellowship, and say to the rest of the world: "See how big we are?"

It seems to be difficult for me to realize how big we are. I can think in terms of the youth of Virginia and the Carolinas, for I know many of them personally. By a little prodding of the imagination, I can visualize Georgia and Alabama, for I have seen many of those young people at Wadley in the Training School. But names and faces of hundreds of equally as fine youths in Florida, Tennessee and Kentucky are not familiar to me. I wish they were.

For we are all part of the Youth Fellowship of the Southeast. The interests of all are to be considered in the items that appear on this page. If the editor should seem to forget this, he sincerely hopes that some of those whom he does not know will write him frankly about his fault. As a matter of fact, the editor craves information from individuals whose names he does not know. He wants to know what young people are thinking and doing in every part of the Southeast. Do not be afraid to write him, for he is not an austere autocrat ready to take the head off those who do not express his own opinion. On the contrary, he likes to get the opinion of those who think differently for this is stimulating and causes growth.

And the only reason for this page is that people may grow—including the editor. We are not big enough in personality yet.

I was wondering if we are big enough to include in our thinking (and our prayers) all our people and all their needs. Yes, I was wondering.

INTRODUCING ASSOCIATE EDITORS.

At the Burlington Convention officers for Youth Fellowship were elected, and among them were superintendents of departments. It was agreed that each of the four superintendents should share in the page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Last week we had an article from the superintendent of Leadership Training, Miss Annie Campbell, of Waycross, Ga., who is the Extension Worker for Georgia. This week we have an article from the superintendent of Devotional Life, Miss Mable Smith, an unassuming, sweet-spirited school teacher of Greensboro, N. C. At later dates we will hear from the superintendent of Service, Miss Birdie Rowland, another fine school teacher from Greensboro, N. C., and from the superintendent of Publications, a young preacher at Elon College, Rev. Carl Key.

WORSHIP.

Every individual has his own definition of worship, whether or not he can be persuaded to give it in so many words. If a group of young people were called on to define the term, there might be answers such as these: "Little Me reaching out to the Universal Self," "Man climbing the altar stairs to God," "A feeling of awe and love toward One greater than oneself."

It is possible for one to be worshipping without realizing that he is. When a person stands and gazes at a beautiful picture, he has a feeling of awe for one who could create such a marvelous piece of art, and he feels that there is a power behind the creation whose comprehension he can not quite grasp.

Thus in our worship services we may use a picture around which to center our theme. We may learn the story behind it, and read Scripture which will fit in with our thoughts, and sing hymns which follow the theme.

We may also use the story of a hymn around which to center the service. A great number of our hymns have a human and fascinating background.

In thinking of worship we must remember that we may talk to God, as well as having him talk to us. We should encourage the timid to talk to God without fear, and with pleasure.

We should study how to use our Scripture. We have a wealth of material, which may be used to great advantage, and not one verse of which should be neglected.

What is a hymn but a poem set to music? Why can we not use our poems more that bring out the thoughts we want to express. A poem makes an excellent call to worship.

This brings us to the thought of our attitude. We cannot worship unless we are in a worshipful mood. This is the purpose of the call to worship. Sometimes music is used to get a group into a worshipful attitude.

A typical worship service is one which includes a number of these things. Suggestions for a worship service may be altered to fit the situation.

WORSHIP SERVICE.

Theme: "The Quest for the Best."

Call to Worship: "The Quest."

"I have ridden the wind,
I have ridden the sea,
I have ridden the moon and the stars,
I have set my feet on the stirrup seat of a comet coursing Mars.
And everywhere, through earth and air
My thought speeds, lightning shod,
It comes to a place where, checking space,
It cries, 'Beyond lies God!'"

Hymn: "Jesus Saviour, Pilot Me."

Scripture: Proverbs 8:17; Matt. 6:28-32.

Sentence Prayer.

Hymn: "Lead On, O King Eternal."

Discussion or talk: "The Best in Worship."

Song: "Follow the Gleam."

"God lies beyond." He is the end of the quest; His way—Jesus' way—is the goal for us all in the great Christian Quest.

WILL YOU BE THERE?

Last week this page carried information about five Summer Schools of Leadership Training that are to be held in our territory. The programs have been prepared with care and expense. Great and good men and women will spend much time in preparation and will teach in these schools. Those who attend will be thrilled and inspired.

But will YOU be there? If you are not there, the schools will be of but little value to you. They are intended for you, if you have the will to work for Christ and the church. The leaders are doing their very best to make it possible for the young people to be prepared for the challenging service which lies about them. These leaders want YOU, and your friends, to be in these schools and camps.

Many a young person can testify that in these schools and camps they have seen a vision of what life can mean and have started on the high road of service. It was under a pine tree near a summer camp that a certain young fellow learned that his egotism had no value for Christian achievement, but that life is rich when Christ comes into it.

Of course, there will be a little cost attached to these schools. But all young people spend some money during the summer vacation. House parties, beach parties, and the like, get paid for gladly. Boys usually find some way of getting gasoline for the "buggy" so they can get into good company. The same sort of tactics can be used to get money for the Camp, or Training School. And the same money might better be spent in this way.

For in these schools are some of the finest people to be found anywhere. If it is real joy from association with good people that you want, there is no better place to seek for it than in one of these five schools. Try, and see.

Will you be there? Here's hoping! Send in your registration now, while it is on your mind.

NOTICE.

As the appointment now stands, our Summer School of Christian Education will convene at Southern Union College, Wadley, Ala., Thursday night before the 5th Sunday in July, and will continue one week. My purpose in giving this notice is to ask all pastors and churches to plan their revivals so as not to interfere with the attendance of our young people upon this school of methods.

I do hope that every pastor may plan to attend, and that every church shall not only require their pastor to attend, but to aid him in every possible way to attend.

It will be great if all our preachers can have the opportunity to spend a week together and have the fellowship of our Congregational brethren in that meeting. Everybody pray and plan to be there.

Sincerely,

G. D. HUNT.

NOTICE.

There will be a rally of the young people of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention at the Mebane Christian Church, Sunday, May 22nd, at 2:00 P. M. There will be several addresses, brief ones, and a program of information and inspiration. Among the speakers are Prof. A. R. VanCleave, Elon College, N. C.; Mr. Herman Truitt, Glen Raven, N. C.; Rev. B. J. Howard, Chapel Hill, N. C.; Mr. W. B. Truitt, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention, Greensboro, N. C. There will be special music and other features of interest and inspiration. All the young people of the vicinity are urged to be present. We invite all who can to come and join in the occasion, which we trust will be pleasant and profitable to all who attend.

Sunday School Lesson

JOSEPH, THE DREAMER.

LESSON IX—MAY 29, 1932.

LESSON TEXT: Genesis 37:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Take thought for things honorable in the sight of all men."—Rom. 12:17.

Introduction.

The world has always had its dreamers. Some men are day-dreamers. Others dream at night. The most significant dreams of slumber are those that relate to the deeper longings and thoughts of the day. They who build their aspirations on the worthy things of life have dreams of worth and beauty. We are going to study about a dreamer—one who mused and thought and dreamed.

Jacob in Canaan.

At the death of Isaac Jacob became head of the clan. Esau lived separate and became the father of the Edomites. The Jacob clan became settled shepherds among the native Canaanites. Growth and prosperity attended the Jacob tribe.

Joseph Brought Evil Report.

The bearer of evil news is never welcomed by all. An evil report, that is true, is often better if never repeated. But when its bearer is envious and jealous in his spirit, the evil consequences are multiplied. Joseph bore evil tidings to his father regarding his brothers. This did not help things.

Father's Favorite.

Jacob loved Rachel more than the other wives. He loved Joseph more than his elder half-brothers. It is always dangerous for fathers to have favorites. It stirs jealousy and suspicion. These promote all kinds of misunderstandings and ill will. While parents may be better pleased with the conduct of some of their children than others, it is always best to be as impartial as is humanly possible.

They Hated Him.

Joseph's brothers "hated him and could not speak peaceably unto him." This was the natural consequence of unfair and partial treatment on the part of Jacob and Joseph. Hatred stirs the baser motives in human life. Jealousy prompts to action on the lower levels of human nature. On the other hand, love, and good will are forces in human life which make for fine and good living. When will the world learn that fear and hate are the ways of the jungle? When will the world come to believe that love and good will are the ways of life if it is to be lived with abiding social values?

Joseph Dreamed.

This ambitious son of seventeen dreamed. He was in the period of adolescent energy and buoyant hope. He perhaps assisted in harvesting the grain. The growth of grain marks the entrance of the Jews upon a settled pastoral life; not dependent entirely upon the natural grasses for forage. They now remain settled and embark on cultivation of the fields and in permanent agricultural methods. Joseph's sheaf stands upright but the sheaves of the others fall in obeisance before his sheaf.

He also dreamed that the sun and moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to him. This signified that Jacob, his wives and their eleven other children should honor Joseph. The later Joseph stories show the way in which the truth of this occurred. This seemed like boasting. It seemed a little disrespectful even to the doting father. So he reproved Joseph. It seemed unreasonable to think that the older boys should be ruled by the younger and that the parents should honor the young son so inappropriately.

Other Dreamers.

Many of the great and useful have dreamed. Youth is a period of dreams, ideals and visions. Childhood should be so ordered that a foundation is laid for good habits, useful skills and high ideals. The dreams of youth are but a projection of earlier values. The realization of maturity is often the fruition of the dreams of idealistic youth. We see Joseph a dreamer—somewhat spoiled and loquacious—but with it all, a boy of purity and lofty standards. The world needs youths who can dream of high and useful service and then proceed to realize the dreams of youth. In all areas of life the world stands in need of youths with worthy visions. It is well to be a dreamer of worthy dreams.

READY CHRISTIANS.

"Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you."—I. Peter 3:15.

If you were asked unexpectedly to state your reasons for being a Christian, could you quickly answer? We should all be ready to give that answer. Thank God, there are so many who can. It is tragic that so many cannot. We do not minimize the value of a Christian soul who cannot put his soul life into speech, but we do deplore the great number of those professed Christians who have stopped short of experience in the conscious reality of God and have no answer either to themselves or any one else as to a reason for their Christianity.

There is a reason for believing in a God above all gods, who is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we think. There is a reason for believing in Jesus as the Son of God. There is a reason for believing in a power that saves and sustains us in that belief. There is a reason for praying and for believing in the prayer life. We cannot reason out everything, to be sure. "Can ye by reasoning find out God?" No. God is a spirit, and spirit, and all that God is, is beyond reason; but there is enough reason to us all so that we can tell others why we believe, and why we are headed for God and glory.

Prayer—Dear Lord and Master, we are thine. Be thou real in our lives. Make us instant in season and out of season to give unto others a life that shines for God, that they who know us cannot help knowing thee. This we ask for Jesus sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

SANCTIFYING THE LORD IN OUR HEARTS.

"Sanctify the Lord in your hearts."—I. Peter 3:15.

To sanctify him in the heart is to make the heart a consecrated dwelling for him, where worship of him is carried on undisturbed.

One of the Mosaic laws of the temple was: "Fire shall be kept burning upon the altar continually. It shall not go out." Comparable to this, Jesus has prescribed that the devotional spirit shall be manifested in the personal life continually. He said, "Ye are the temple of the Lord, which temple ye are." Upon the altar of that temple the fire of devout desire and affection ought ever to be kept burning.

There is a place—

"Where Jesus is the door
His love the only key;
Who enters will go out no more,
But there with Jesus be.

"If thou hadst dwelt within that place,
Then would thine heart the while,
In vision of the Saviour's face,
Forget all other smiles."

Prayer—Dear Father, Jesus is necessary in the home of our hearts. Give us Jesus. O God, may we seek until we find him in his fullness. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

IN THE IMAGE OF GOD.

"And God said, let us make man in our own image."—Gen. 1:26.

Please bear in mind that when all creation was finished, all of which was very good, of all this good the end was not yet reached. There still was something better to be made. In the creation heaven and earth were filled with the majesty of his glory, but this was not enough to satisfy his goodness, a goodness and a perfection in which nothing of creation could share. These things declared his glory, but they did not declare his likeness. They displayed his handiwork, but not his wisdom, his thoughts, nor his holiness—such a creation must be a living soul like unto God. So God said, "Let us make man."

He who designs and builds a house may best live in it and carry out his designs for a complete and perfectly happy dwelling. He who has designed and built this temple of ours can himself complete it unto a perfectly happy end; and the whole universe labors and groans, the whole church in the world pleads, the Holy Spirit implores for that indwelling that that holy and perfect happy end may come to us.

Prayer—O Lord, as we think on these things we acknowledge the noblest of all possible utterances. That the creation of a living soul in thy likeness for thy dwelling and for thy work of perfection was thy masterpiece. O, how slow we are to let thee dwell within! We are ashamed of ourselves. But we know from our own lives that thou doest all things gradually. O, teach us the need and the unity of thy Spirit in us, and help us to forget ourselves and remember thee. O Lord Jesus, come then quickly and dwell within. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE WHOLE PERSONALITY.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Romans 12:1.

The image of God in man—the goal of his indwelling—does not, directly at least, denote external appearance. It denotes the inner man; spiritual endowments; freedom of will; self-consciousness; reasoning power, power to think above nature a conscience; power to commune with God, a power, which raised him entirely above sense time and material considerations. All these things are manifested in bearing, conscious dignity of things, and a natural trend of life toward him who completes and perfects all things.

It takes the whole personality to do this. It takes reason with its power to detect harmony amid such confusion; reason that can look at the fabric of the issues of everyday living and bring forth the fruit which the Almighty has intended it should bear, and with which power it has been abundantly endowed. It takes self-consciousness that lifts man above the brute into a knowledge of himself and makes him realize the importance of such things as training children for the future. Not everyone has learned yet, that to train a child is better than training a horse or a dog. It takes a power to know right from wrong, to recognize the excellence of what is good and to delight in the law of God, as it is in Jesus Christ; and so on, from these attributes to full communion with God, in the consciousness of full redemption by him in Christ Jesus, our Lord.

Prayer—O Lord God, help us to follow Jesus, thy Son and our Saviour, so that we may triumph in him in this life, and when our warfare is over here, and we lie dying, may we find that glorious life and see our last foe, death, at our feet. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE MISSING PARACHUTE.

"Thy right hand hath holden me up."—Psalm 18:26-36.

The other day a parachutist died because he had no parachute. He had made more than five hundred parachute leaps from airplanes, but he took a ride in a plane which met with an accident, falling fifteen hundred feet, and neither he nor his companion flyer had a parachute.

This tragic story should carry a warning to every Christian to rely on the Lord for all emergencies. He saves us from all disasters. His truth is our shield and buckler. Perhaps, if he were writing today, the psalmist would say that his truth is our parachute.

But a parachute is useless in the hangar; it must be in the air, strapped on to the aviator. And the consciousness of God's love and truth is useless if we only had it yesterday and do not have it today. Our religion is no good shut up in a Bible on the shelf.

Prayer—Our Father, dwell thou with us, day after day. May the thought of thee become our instructor. May we never leave thee, and thou wilt never forsake us. Amen.

SATURDAY.

TOO BIG SALARIES.

"A just balance and scales are Jehovah's"—Prov. 16:1-11.

The president of Cuba has voluntarily reduced his salary from $25,000 to $12,000 a year. The salaries of other government officials were reduced though none so drastically as his. The president was urged not to cut his own salary more in proportion than the others, but he insisted on making the sacrifice. The result of the move was the balancing of the national budget.

How few conclude that they are overpaid! What strivings there are for bigger salaries, and how rare is the attempt to get a smaller one! We readily agree with the proverb, "A just balance and scales are Jehovah's," but when the scales weight against us rather than for us, we are not so sure of their justice. But, whatever we may think, the heavenly measurements are absolutely just.

Prayer—Shall we not seek above all things, O Jehovah, to accord with thy righteous will? Let us be even more unwilling to have more than we should have than less than we should. No will but thine, O God. Thy will be done. Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

SHAME.

"My people shall never be put to shame."—Joel 2:21-27.

The Lord has placed mankind together partly to help one another and partly to shame one another. In all good things we are to work together, and when we see any evil, we are to put it down.

Let us go to the very foundation of the matter, and remember always that God's people are never put to shame. The Lord, who gives us all things richly to enjoy, does not fail to add the enjoyment of men's approval. The Lord, who preserves us from the assaults of evil, does not neglect to ward off the attack of shame. We can well afford to leave our reputation in the hands of the Almighty and he will guard the honor of his own.

Prayer—We trust in thee for food, our Father, for spiritual food as well as material. We rely on thee for advancement, and for praise, our Father, and we know that thy people shall never be put to shame. Amen.

BARNABAS.

"Barnabas . . . having land sold it, and brought the money and laid it at the apostles' feet."—Acts 4:36.

Barnabas is quite unlike that rich young man whom Jesus met, and who was told by Jesus to go and sell and follow him. Jesus loved that devout, handsome, rich young ruler. How sad his heart must have been when he turned away from him! But Jesus would have had a very different experience if it had been his good fortune to have met Barnabas. Barnabas, too, was rich, or at least comparatively so. We have a hint of his wealth in our text. He was young, also, and no doubt handsome. The colors of the Eastern flowing robes must have been as beautiful on Barnabas as they were on the other rich young man. Perhaps his wealth had given him something of the same degree of confidence, so that, had he had a chance, he, too, would have come eagerly to Jesus to inquire concerning eternal riches.

Barnabas would not have turned away from Jesus. The rich young man that met Jesus came running to him with words; the rich young man later born came running to the followers of Jesus with wealth to lay at their feet. The other rich young man came to Jesus thinking of self, this rich young man came to his followers thinking of service. They both "went away," the one into oblivion; the other into opportunities to do some of the finest work for the Jesus movement the world has ever seen! What great things our first young man might have done; what great things our second young man did!

Jesus asked the first young man to do some real hard things—just such things as any really heroic young man or woman would like to be challenged to do. "Keep the commandments." There was a full man-sized commission, especially in the light of Jesus' interpretation of what that would mean. The young man replied that such he had done. "Then go, and sell all thou hast, and give it to the poor, and come follow Me." Perhaps a good deal of it really belonged to the poor in the first place, and at least he would be unencumbered in his following Jesus. No ties would hold him back. The same command rings today in many young hearts. Sell all! All hope of worldly fame, or favor; all hope of worldly houses or lands; all hope of social place, or prestige. Sell all, and give . . .!

Well, at least, Barnabas, although he did not have the added help of beholding the beautiful face of the Son of God as he gave the command, was glad to accept the challenge of it. Had Jesus let down the bars, and made entrance into his Kingdom easy, on that day when the other rich young man came to him he might have missed Barnabas, and Mark, and Luke, and Silas, and Saul, and Timothy, and Titus, and unnumbered scores of others who have been glad to follow him when the challenge was hazardous! One of the greatest of them in writing to another of them said: "Learn to endure hardness as a good soldier!" "Barnabas . . . a Levite, of the country of Cyprus, having land sold it, and brought the money and laid it at the disciples' feet."

Barnabas, the unassuming, the bighearted, the beloved kinsman, was somewhat like Andrew in the work he did. An immeasurable tragedy was about to occur. Barnabas blocked it. Paul had played havoc with the church in its infancy. He had gone a long way toward crushing it, and had it not had Heaven's guarantee of ultimate success he might have finished it so great was the force of the blows he was striking. Paul was a fighter. But one day he met Jesus above his road to Damascus. Jesus told Paul that there were goads being held against his back; that he was pushing him into service with the movement which he was prosecuting, rather than against it; that he was to become a chosen vessel to be sent to kings, and to the Gentiles! "Who art thou, Lord?" "Jesus, of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest." And thus Jesus of Nazareth had called Paul into a place of apostleship. Paul, one of the men he needed most, had accepted the change of heart and change of career, and was ready to begin the mighty things into which he had been called.

But, I say, a tragedy was about to happen. Paul had been called by Jesus, but Peter was afraid of him. Into the apostles' hands had been placed the keys of the Kingdom, whatever they bound was to be bound; and whatever they loosed was to be loosed—and Paul was outside! Paul was about to be kept outside so far as the little band into whose charge the keeping of the keys of Heaven had been given! Accepted by Jesus; about to be refused by Peter! It means something, my friends, for one's brethren to turn him down. It means something to have brethren that will give a fellow favors. There is no earthly way to get around it. If our brothers the world over "hands off" and persist in keeping hands off we are about done for. How would Paul begin, and where?

The unassuming Barnabas knew Peter. He knew Paul. He was God's loving link of conciliation in a moment when he was mightily needed. Stepping forward in the council at Jerusalem, "Barnabas took him (Paul) and brought him to the apostles." There is history in that sentence, and Heaven! The man who had laid all at at Peter's feet, now brought more than the combined wealth of Jerusalem and placed it in his hands—and the hands of the church. Just so somebody had brought Simon Peter to Jesus. Andrew and Barnabas—what a team; Peter and Paul—what powers in the hands of God! Maybe you fill a little place, but who knows but you too may join hands as necessary to be joined as were the hands of Peter and Paul. You may be only the father of a boy! Or the mother of a son! Or the parent of a daughter! You may be neither, but just an Andrew, or a Barnabas—filling no great place, but filling some little place well. If so, rejoice, for great is your reward in Heaven.

Across the way the Jesus movement was getting started almost alone, and "when tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church at Jerusalem; they sent forth Barnabas," for had he not offered his services as well as his wealth. But what did Barnabas do but go and get Paul? "Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus to seek Paul." Without saying a word Barnabas received the church's commission, and went and got Paul to help him put it across. Study Barnabas wherever you will and you will find him seeking the other fellow's preferment. "In honor preferring one another," are the words Paul learned to write from the life of his friend, Barnabas. Since I am to preach on "John Mark" later, I shall reserve a remark I should like to make just here.

Jesus called Paul; Barnabas brought him to the apostles. The Holy Spirit mapped out his missionary journeys; Barnabas set his feet on the road! In the eleventh chapter of Acts we read of Barnabas setting Paul onto the task of becoming a missionary, by going after Paul and having him share with him his commission to

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our little children are very glad to have ripe strawberries to eat. Our berries are beginning to ripen and for a few weeks we will have strawberry shortcake and pies. We have been planting plots of ground in strawberries for several years, and two of four patches are bearing this season. They are a fruit our children are very fond of, and as we have plenty of good, sweet milk to go with them, we will be assured of something good to eat for several weeks to come.

Sixteen years ago the Christian Orphanage had two milk cows. Since that time we have gradually developed and built a nice dairy herd of thirty pretty Holstein and Jersey cattle. We also have a splendid cattle barn in a modern plan with an up-to-date metal silo. Also modern dairy house. All this is complete and paid for except a refrigerator to chill our milk. We have undertaken to buy this with Octagon soap coupons and are asking our people from all our Sunday Schools and church communities to mail us soap coupons to help us reach the desired number of 150,000, and especially 75,000 by June 1st. If our people will help us get this much needed blessing, it will make our dairy plant complete, and give the little children nice cool milk three times each day and it will cost no money. It will be bought with the coupons which are often thrown away. We have received at this time about 35,000. Let everybody gather up soap wrappers and mail them to the Christian Orphanage to help in this undertaking. Ask your neighbors for some, too. Let's make a rush and reach the goal of 75,000 by June 1st.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

W. A. HARPER, Editor.

(Any book reviewed in this Department may be had of THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the publisher's price.)

DRAMA GOES TO CHURCH, by Alma Newell Atkins. Bethany. 796 pp. $1.50.

The Reformation leaders broke with the religious drama as being identified with the Roman Catholic Church, and thereby Protestantism sustained a great loss. A saner attitude is prevailing now and many church schools and churches are availing themselves of the "age-old art." Mrs. Atkins has a rare insight into the values and possibilities of dramatization in religious education. In the thirteen chapters of her book she provides a real manual of procedure for religious workers who are desirous of using dramatization, symbolism, and pageantry effectively in the programs of the church and church school. The citations to the literature on the subject and to sources of supplies are very valuable.

PLEASURE—SORROW.

"I walked a mile with Pleasure.
She chattered all the way;
But I was none the wiser
For all she had to say.
I walked a mile with Sorrow.
And ne'er a word said she—
But, oh, the things I learned that day
When Sorrow walked with me."

Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch; and in the thirteenth chapter we read: "The Holy Ghost said, separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them, and when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away." And sooner or later Barnabas drops out of the picture; nowhere do I read of his reward. What did Barnabas get out of it? He had put his wealth, and his life into it, what brought he out? Is it not enough that he was the key-man at the most crucial points in the career of Paul; and that he was a first missionary of the church; and that his name still lives in letters of loving, unassuming, unselfish daring for God! I should think it would be quite sufficient to have the privilege of linking together the hand of God and the hand of man as Barnabas had the privilege of linking them. We are co-workers together with God!

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together. The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

MARRIAGES

NEWMAN-SMITH.

On the evening of February 20, 1932, Miss Josephine Smith and David Lee Newman were united in marriage at the parsonage on Rowland Street, Henderson, N. C., the pastor performing the ceremony, which was witnessed by a few intimate friends and relatives of the contracting parties.

The bride and groom are both popular young people and are connected with the church. They are at home to their friends in Henderson, and give promise of rendering much service to the cause of Christ. Their many friends wish them much happiness.

R. A. WHITTEN,
Pastor.

CAMPBELL—ALGER.

Mr. Grover Campbell and Miss Nellie Alger were married at the home of the bride's parents on April 3, 1932.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. Z. Alger, members of our Newport Church.

The newly wedded couple are also members of our church there. The best wishes of their pastor and many friends will follow them in their wedded life.

A. W. ANDES.

OBITUARIES.

COLE.

Miss Edith Vennie Cole departed this life on April 8, 1932. In her early teens she professed faith in Christ and united with Big Oak Christian Church. There she felt it her duty to serve and rendered valuable assistance.

Those who knew her best knew it was her pleasure to serve wherever she might.

She would have finished her high school course at the West End High School in May, and it was most fitting that her classmates were both pallbearers and flower girls.

Funeral services at her church in the midst of a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends. Interment in the church cemetery.

We turn for solace to the wisdom and providence of God.

E. CARL BRADY.

TOLLEY.

Mrs. Susie M. Tolley, wife of W. T. Tolley of Lynchburg, Va., departed this life April 22, 1932, aged 50 years.

Surviving, besides her husband, are the following children: O. F., W. T., Jr., Elvyn and Odissa Tolley.

She was a faithful member of the United Christian Church, Lynchburg, a trustful follower of our Saviour. Truly we can say that Christ did live in this devoted wife, mother, friend and neighbor.

The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. Roy Coulter, assisted by Dr. Harmon of the West End Baptist Church.

While we are stricken with grief at the passing away of one we loved so much, we know it is God's will to have her go. May the heavenly Father, who is always kind and good, comfort the bereaved.

MRS. S. R. GAY.

COBLE.

Whereas, on March 4, 1932, God in His infinite love sent the death angel and bore above the spirit of our dear sister,

Mrs. Sallie Coble. We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of Pleasant Hill Christian Church, wish to express our appreciation of her in the following resolutions:

1. That while we realize we have lost one of our faithful members and mourn our loss, we bow in humble submission to Him who doth all things well,
2. That we express our deepest sympathy to the bereaved husband, hoping that the heavenly Father will give comfort when earthly friends fail.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the husband, a copy recorded on the secretary's book of the Pleasant Hill Missionary Society and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

SANDERS.

R. S. Sanders was born May 6, 1879, and died April 22, 1932, aged 52 years, 11 months and 16 days.

He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife, Dola Sanders, two daughters and two sons, one grandchild and a host of friends. Funeral services were held by the writer, assisted by Bro. Carl Brady and Bro. Manes.

His body was laid to rest in Brown's Chapel Cemetery. May our Heavenly Father comfort the sorrowing ones.

REV. W. N. HAYES.

WHITFIELD.

Mrs. Sallie E. Whitfield, daughter of the late John and Patsy Jones, and widow of the late Wm. E. Whitfield, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. R. E. Reid, Suffolk, Va., April 18, 1932, aged 85 years, 7 months and 22 days.

The funeral services were conducted at Holy Neck church by the writer, assisted by Drs. W. M. Jay and E. W. Jones.

Mrs. Whitfield leaves three children, Mrs. Hudson Corbitt, Newport News, Mrs. R. E. Reid, Suffolk, and Mrs. W. C. Hughes, Portsmouth; four grand-children and two great grand-children, two brothers, W. E. Jones, Franklin, and Adolphus Jones, Sopater, Ga., and two sisters, Mrs. Benjamin Morgan, Holland, and Mrs. Mills Jernegan, Franklin.

Mrs. Whitfield had been a member of Holy Neck church from early life and was an humble Christian, faithful to life's tasks, and lived a life of faith and trust in Christ as her Saviour.

Mussolini Honors Memory of Fliers.—

Premier Mussolini and Italian Air Minister, General Balbo, followed on foot today behind the coffins of Captain George Endres, Hungarian transatlantic flier and his mechanic, who were killed Saturday in a practice flight. The coffins were taken from the Hungarian legation to the railway station where a guard of honor began a watch over them which was to continue until midnight when they will be put aboard a train to be returned to Hungary for burial.

Import Duty on Bells.—

The Federal Government will collect between $7,000 and $8,000 in import duty on the bells for Virginia's War Memorial carillon in Byrd Park when they arrive at Newport News on the steamship Clairton about June 6th, said H. Bolling Handy, chairman of the War Memorial Commission. The bells were loaded at Liverpool on May 6th, and are now on the way to Newport News, consigned to Richmond, and when they arrive at the Virginia port they will be reshipped to Richmond by rail.

American Palestine Committee Formed.—

The American Palestine Committee has been organized here as a non-Jewish body sponsored by Vice-President Curtis, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, and others for the support of the Jewish homeland project. The movement inaugurated at a reception given Dr. Nakum Sokolow of London, president of the World Zionist organization. Curtis and Borah, who attended, were elected honorary chairmen, as was Senator Claud A. Swanson of Virginia, who cabled his acceptance from Geneva where he is a delegate to the disarmament conference.

Allied Youth Group Organized.—

A permanent local chapter of Allied Youths for Prohibition was organized at the First Baptist Church, it was announced by Robert L. Winston, publicity director of the movement. Miss Nettie Allen Thomas, of New York, field secretary for Allied Youth, addressed the youngsters. Speeches were also made by Judge J. Hoge Ricks of the Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court and Dr. J. C. Robinson. A dinner in honor of Miss Thomas was given by the leaders of the young people. The committee arranging the meeting included T. Dix Sutton, general chairman; Alexander Armour, chairman of the program committee; Miss Phyllis G. Brown, secretary, and Robert Winston.

Commencement at Elon College.—

Commencement Day at Elon College is in progress as the last form of THE SUN goes to press. Graduation exercises will close one of the most unique Commencements ever held there. The Baccalaureate address by Dr. William Mosely

Brown on Sunday, was well worth a trip to Elon, and the enthusiasm shown on Elon Day, Tuesday, was most gratifying. Dr. Raymond, of Chattanooga, and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, of Suffolk, were at their best, and the Richmond orchestra kept music in the air all day until they were compelled to leave at 4:00 o'clock on their return trip. They have already received an invitation to return next year. The barbecue was a great success, and those who officiated both at the cooking and serving deserve all of the praise they received.

Reports Finding of Ancient Tomb.—

Discovery of a tomb believed to be that of the ancient Mayan kings at Chichen-Itza, state of Yucatan, was reported today in a short dispatch from Merida. The Carnegie Foundation, under the direction of Dr. Sylvanus Morley, has been engaged in excavation and reconstruction work at Chichen-Itza for several years, and it was presumed that the discovery was made by the Foundation's excavators. The dispatch said a tomb was found a short distance west of the temple of the warriors, and that legends and signs painted on its sides indicated it was the tomb of the Mayan kings, long sought as the possible key to the mystery of the disappearance of the once powerful race. The tomb has not yet been opened because its crumbling wall must be reinforced before anyone attempts to enter.

Dr. Poling on Amendment.—

Dr. Daniel A. Poling, chairman of the Allied Forces for Prohibition, in a recent address in Baltimore, declared that "only by amendment of Article 5 of the Constitution could a referendum be made legally binding." He said further: "We are opposed to the Amendment of Article 5 on any other basis, if at all, than for general application to the whole Constitution and to all matters that may arise under it. We are opposed to special privilege for liquor. This referendum question should be settled with a clear understanding that once the principle is established it will apply equally to all personal and property rights now guaranteed by the Constitution. The principle once established would substitute immediate mass action for representative government. The issue is not prohibition but representative government." The wets have the same right and privilege to work for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment by Constitutional means as the drys had to secure its adoption. They have no right to do so by any other means.

Dr. Speer Stands Firm on Missions.—

Dr. Robert E. Speer, at a recent Student Volunteer Convention, spoke out strongly against the modern sentimental notions of interchange of ideas and courtesies with non-Christian religions, so alien to the genius of Christianity. He said, part: "Jesus was as far above a pantheon as heaven is above earth. . . . The church wants the real Gospel preached, and it is the real Gospel that the world needs." Then he added: "The fact is that the great body of our Christian people in many of our denominations distrust some of the leadership of today, because they think it would shift the missionary enterprise away from its foundations on the New Testament conception of the Gospel. Those missionary agencies and activities will best weather the present storms and move out into larger things, which satisfy their constituencies that they are holding fast to the faith of the fathers." One of the things which is cutting the nerve of missionary activity and zeal today is the modernistic idea that Christianity is only one of many religions, rather than the only true religion. We are glad to know that Dr. Speer, who speaks with authority on all matters of foreign missions, has taken such a firm stand on this question. Certainly there would have been no need for the Great Commission to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," if one religion were as good as another. For "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

Maroon and Gold

Saito Named Premier.—

Prospect of a strong national emergency cabinet headed by Admiral Viscount Makoto Saito, former governor of Korea, emerged from the welter of anxiety and bewilderment in which terrorism and the assassination of Premier Suyoshi Inukai plunged Japan a week ago. Accepting the advice of Prince Saionji, venerable political oracle, Emperor Hirohito summoned Admiral Saito to the palace and handed him a mandate to form a cabinet capable of guiding the nation through one of the gravest crises in history. Admiral Saito, 74-year-old veteran of two careers—naval officer and pro-consul—is accounted one of the empire's ablest and most trusted administrators on the reputation he gained in two terms, totaling ten years, as governor-general of Korea. He was suggested for the premiership by Prince Saionji, sole survivor of the Genro, or elder statesmen, after four days of consultation with the nation's most powerful leaders. The call to the palace reached the admiral while he was at his seaside villa at Hayama, fifty miles southwest of the capital. Since retiring from the Korean governorship in 1931, Admiral Saito has lived mostly in Hayama. While other prospective premiers were making slates for the cabinets they hoped to head, Admiral Saito was not prepared to announce the personnel of the cabinet he was asked to head, or even to indicate its general composition. The reaction to his nomination was almost wholly favorable. He is recognized as free from political ambition.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Afro-Christian Convention will meet in regular session at St. Stephen Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., June 19th to 24th, inclusive. The program is in preparation and a well-attended session of the Convention is anticipated. The corresponding secretary is Rev. F. A. Hargett, No. 926 Lincoln St., Greensboro, N. C.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Roanoke, Ala., writes: "You may send me a few more coin cards. I am filling one myself and will be glad to do the best I can with them. I am not afraid that the Lord will not take care of his own, but I sometimes fear that we will not do our part in his program. I went to Daviston, Ala., last Sunday, and preached the commencement sermon to the High School. Prof. W. C. Edge is the principal. It was a good occasion, and we had a good day."

The demand for the coin card is still insistent and increasing. Many pastors, Sunday School superintendents and teachers are placing them with individuals and with classes as an invitation to self-denial of a dime a week, that the cause of the Kingdom may not suffer loss. If all pastors and all superintendents and all teachers would join in this movement, what a glorious acclaim there would be and what inspiring consequences would come to the cause nearest and dearest to the heart of our Lord.

The Durham Sunday Herald-Sun of May 15th, was an annual baby edition dedicated to the care and culture of children. The supplement was exceedingly interesting, carrying many cuts of the beautiful and promising babies of Durham. Among the lovely faces adorning one of the pages, was that of Mary Ann Harrell, four-months-old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell. This writer would not wish to be partial, but to him Mary Ann's smile and fine features carried the most captivating charm of the group.

A good sister, in a very needy church where finances are running low, writes: "The superintendent of our Sunday School has given coin cards to members of the Sunday School, and I have one. He is anxious to send a good contribution from the school in this way. I like the dime-a-week plan and hope to continue it all through the year." A pastor advised us recently that he believed that many of his members would continue the dime-a-week donation after their coin cards were filled, as it was certainly one way in which self-denial might be made for the kingdom's interest.

Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor of Palm Street, Greensboro, is not only a pastor with many pastoral duties and calls, but an evangelist who believes that the chief business of the church is that of telling to the world in person and in purse the evangel of the Lord. And so, while insisting that his people make missionary offerings to send the gospel where they cannot or will not go and carry it, he himself has ten weeks ahead of him, every day of which he is giving to evangelism, preaching the gospel of salvation and repentance and seeking to win souls to Christ and the church. He is happy in his ministry and full of zeal for the cause he has espoused.

Mr. W. B. Truitt, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, calls attention to the fact that the Convention meets in annual session with Union Church, Union Ridge, N. C., at 10:00 A. M., Thursday, June 23rd, and continues for two days. Mr. Truitt deeply regrets the conflict of dates between the Convention and the Summer School at Elon College, but the constitution of the Convention, fixes the date and it cannot be changed except by a two-thirds vote of the Convention in regular session. Mr. Truitt hopes that the Summer School will cooperate and will spend at least a day with the Convention at Union.

Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor of Palm Street Church, Greensboro, is enjoying a good meeting in his church there, which meeting has been in progress since May 8th. He is assisted by Rev. J. W. Combs, of Albemarle. The meetings are well attended and there have been many confessions of faith. Pastor Neese begins his evangelistic meetings at Monticello Church, Guilford County, on Sunday, May 29th, with three services—11:00 A. M., 2:30 P. M., and 7:30 P. M. He is to be assisted by Rev. Roy D. Coulter, Elon College, and it is expected that the meetings will continue, two services daily, through the following week.

We are not surprised that "The Good Earth," by Mrs. Pearl S. Buck, daughter of a missionary in China, receives the Pulitzer award as one of the outstanding contributions to literature the past year. While the book may seem sordid and morally obtuse to many who read it, it no doubt reflects in a very marked manner a large area of the Chinese people, and of other peoples for that matter. It is heartening, however, to come to the day when Americans can read with avidity and widespread concern a volume whose very character is Chinese. In this sense the book is international, since its revelation of character and attitude are not confined to any people or tongue.

Rev. G. N. Edwards, pastor, Circular Church, Charleston, S. C., writes: "We have twelve accessions to our church recently. An Easter play, entitled, 'He is the Son of God,' was given, and was repeated to large audiences just after Easter. The setting in the church was very simple and beautiful, no curtains. The words, the lighting effects and the costumes especially designed by an orientalist, made the play very impressive. People of many churches came to see it. On April 17th, Dr. Minor C. Baldwin, of Florida, a pipe organist of rare skill and long experience, gave a sacred concert which was much enjoyed by the musical people of the city and which showed to excellent effect the fine qualities of the organ recently installed in our church. An Easter offering was received amounting to $5.00." Many SUN readers met Dr. Edwards, pastor of our church in Charleston, at the Burlington Convention, in the proceedings and work of which he took a lively interest.

On Sunday, May 15th, the editor of THE SUN had the privilege of speaking to a large congregation on the occasion of their missionary and annual memorial services at Mt. Pleasant Church in the Western North Carolina Conference, Rev. H. V. Cox, pastor. It was a great occasion and a good day. The superintendent of the Sunday School, Brother Z. V. Brooks, was in charge of the school and morning exercises and taught the Adult Bible Class. Deacon E. M. Marks, whose zeal for his church and the cause knows no bounds, directed the program and the exercises of the day. After the morning service and the placing of flowers in the cemetery and luncheon served in the open to all present, a children's program, largely attended, was the event of the afternoon service. It was, indeed, good to be present at Mt. Pleasant Church, a church which had its origin in the zeal and consecration of Rev. D. M. Jones forty-nine years ago, the first foreign missionary going out from the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. One feature of the day's exercises May 15th, was the fine singing, several quartets, by the daughters of the pastor, Rev. H. V. Cox. If these fine girls sing at home as they did at Mt. Pleasant, that is indeed a house of song, as well as of preaching.

ELON DOLLAR-A-MONTH CLUB.

Friends of the Dollar-a-Month Club continue to increase. Every day since the Club started, we have received new members or money for the Club. This has been a very good week for the Club. We have received $97.00 during the week, and 7 new members. We are optimistic for great increases along all lines the coming week. The Commencement exercises began with the baccalaureate services Sunday. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday large numbers of friends and Alumni of Elon College visited the campus. They will all be given an opportunity to join the Dollar-a-Month Club. Don't miss next week's paper, for you will be anxious to know what the results of Commencement week have been.

We are herewith recording our new members:

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

THE NORTH GEORGIA ASSOCIATION will meet with the New Trinity Church, near Lawrenceville, August 1st and 2nd. The program committee is being directed by the moderator, Prof. Lisle C. Percy, Piedmont College.

REV. A. W. SPARKS is just entering the Carolinas to begin an important survey and inspirational work among our rural churches in the general region of Raleigh. There is a great opportunity for the kind of work Mr. Sparks is so capable of doing. He is thrice welcome to this region.

REV. WILLIAM T. SCOTT, pastor of the Salisbury and Winston Parish, including Salem Chapel, Trinity Parish, has taken up his residence in Winston-Salem that he might the better serve this important and growing parish. He is always in the center of things, and from Winston-Salem, as a base, his many friends are looking for unusual developments. He will continue to serve all three churches.

MIDDLE GEORGIA ASSOCIATION of Congregational and Christian Churches will hold its annual meeting at Meansville, July 28th. The moderator, Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, and Rev. Lawrence Stanly, pastor of the entertaining church, are in charge of the program. It will be a good one. The present plan is for a one-day session of intensive attention to the work. Each church is entitled to two delegates, one of whom should be the clerk. This is quite important. All such will be entertained by the homes of the people of this beautiful new church.

LEADING CHURCHES, like Fredonia, Barnesville, Rev. Lawrence Stanly, pastor, are making good on paying their apportionment to missions regularly. Even before July 1st, half of the apportionment of this church will be paid. Of course, every church will try hard to be paid up by December 15th, but how good and how pleasant it is to know that Christmas will be the merrier because all church bills and mission dues are paid beforehand. Any church which is paying its apportionment monthly, or at the outside, quarterly, is to be highly commended. It is the best way.

THE UNITED WOMEN of the Barnesville Parish set a good example this month when they met in the Bethany Church, at The Rock, for an all-day session. They had a wonderful time together. Woodbury, the farthest away, came with a large delegation. And, by the way, this church has but recently organized its women. Does it pay? You should see them work and know the good and profitable times they enjoy together. When the women of any church are well organized, there you will find a live church.

MIAMI, FLORIDA. The First Church had an interesting evening service recently. Commissioner Glenn and his wife, who is government agent for the Seminole Indians in Florida, accompanied by Miss Higgins, the Seminole Indian School teacher, with a group of her students, gave the program. The teacher and her students appeared in costume and sang songs both in English and in the native tongue. Others participating in the service were Mrs. Hicks Allen, president of the Seminole Club of Miami, and Dr. Horton Held, who gave an address. Early in June, Congressman Ruth Bryan Owen is to speak at a Sunday evening service in this church.

THE CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN Conference of the Carolinas will meet in Raleigh, June 7th and 8th. A full program has been prepared and a good conference is expected. The theme of the Conference is "Pioneering in Christian Union." Rev. George N. Edwards, of Charleston, S. C., is moderator. The sessions begin at 10:00 A. M., Tuesday, June 7th, and will conclude with two addresses after 8:00 P. M., Wednesday, June 8th, one by Rev. R. J. Tamblin, pastor of Grace M. P. Church, Greensboro, on the topic, "The Spiritual Guidance of Youth," and the other by Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, on "The Spiritual Foundations of the Christian College."

THE FIFTH SUNDAY FELLOWSHIP meeting of the Macedonia Parish, Rev. T. L. Leverett, pastor, will be held with the New Trinity Church, May 29th. This will bring members of the four churches together for the fourth time since they started this Fifth Sunday Fellowship notion, which has been so liberally adopted by others since. At least this Macedonia Parish was the first one to adopt this fine bit of good fellowship movement, so far as this writer knows. Macedonia, Sardis and Liberty Churches will assemble Sunday morning for service in Trinity Church. The pastor, who is on vacation in Yonkers, N. Y., will be home for this day. A special speaker has been engaged, a great luncheon and renewing of old acquaintances will be enjoyed by many. So large is this parish that the people from Liberty Church, near Bowman, will have to drive nearly one hundred miles to get there, but some of them will do it. They will come.

PIEDMONT YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE, under the direct leadership of Miss Annie Campbell, Extension Worker for Georgia, will meet in Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., for seven days, beginning August 11th, and continuing to the 18th. The cost is placed at the minimum—only one dollar a day for board and room with a registration fee of only one dollar and a half. A good faculty has been, or is already selected, and strong work will be expected. There will also be abundant opportunity for recreation under the leadership of competent directors. Auto trips to the mountains and lakes will attract some. The fellowship of students will be of the best and every Christian or Congregational Church in Georgia or near the border line is invited to send delegates. Regular hours for study and class work will be followed by directed recreation. The best of food will be served by the regular Piedmont College chef. Send applications to Miss Annie Campbell, 607 Hicks St., Waycross, Ga.

ANTIOCH CHURCH, near Bristol, Ga., entertains all the churches of the Friendship Parish, Rev. Alan Jones, pastor, the fifth Sunday, May 29th. Starting at Union Hill, Pearson, Saturday, May 28th, fifteen or more young people will board an eight-wheel truck driven by one of the members. They will drive to Waycross, add another fifteen young people of the Whitehall Community Church. These will then go to Baxley where fifteen young people of Friendship Church will complete the load. Then on to Antioch, twenty miles away. Arriving at a beautiful spot among the trees near the home of Mr. Gordon Williams, a prominent member of the church, a regular outing supper will be cooked by the young people themselves outdoors. After supper a fine vesper service, group conferences, and then to the homes of the Antioch Church. Sunday services by all in the church given by the young people. One will tell of Russia, of which country he has made a special study; another will discuss what to do with war; others of various themes keeping the end in view: "What is there in the world for young people to do?" They modestly announce they shall not try to solve all the world problems for they prefer leaving something for future generations to do; but they do not mean to sit idly by as the world in this generation moves on.

FACTS AND FEATURES FROM FLORIDA.

Camp Imokalee, toward which so many Florida Congregational and Christian young people look with eagerness, will again be the scene of the Florida Young People's Conference from June 7th to 17th. The camp is on a beautiful lake near Keystone Heights. About one hundred young people are expected, besides about twenty others who are members of the faculty and directors of the various activities of the Conference. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Extension Worker for Florida, is busy these days completing plans and also promoting the registrations. Mr. Chas. A. Hoyt, a business man of Jacksonville, has been a leader in this movement and devotes much time and thought to the plans and to the development of the Conference each year. As chairman of the State Young People's Committee he serves also as business manager of the Conference, assisted by his son Charles, a student at Georgia Tech.

The Dean of the Conference this year will be Rev. Frank Atkinson, pastor at West Palm Beach. Dr. Clarence A. Vincent, of Winter Park, will teach the Bible Course; Rev. C. Arthur Lincoln, of Daytona Beach, will conduct a Discussion Course, on the problems of Christian living. Miss Dorothy French, of Chattanooga, will take the younger group along this line.

Mrs. Edward C. Parsons, of Washington, D. C., a returned missionary from China, will conduct the course in World Friendship. Rev. Lawrence Gedcke, assistant pastor at St. Petersburg, will conduct the course on Young People's Methods and Materials. Miss Martha Race, of Jacksonville, will have charge of dramatics and Miss Clea Carson, also of Jacksonville, will have charge of the music. Miss Dorothy Allen will have charge of a group studying the problems of Vacation Church Schools. The director of athletics will be Rev. Frederick Held of Jupiter. Those participating will be as follows: Camp Mother, Mrs. Clarence A. Vincent; Camp Nurse, Miss Bettie Lou Beverly, of Tampa; Directors in charge of the dining room, Mrs. Warren Fitch and Mrs. Lawrence Burman, of Jacksonville. Rev. Gordon Brokenshire, of Orange City, will have charge of the Vespers. The Conference sermon will be preached by Rev. Frank Atkinson. The following will serve as counselors: Mrs. E. Richard Evans, of Key West; Mrs. C. G. Warner, of West Palm Beach; Mrs. Frederick Held, of Jupiter; Mr. Ralph Hills, of Miami Beach; Rev. Orville D. Ullon, Melbourne; Rev. Ralph Krout, of New Port Richey; and Rev. Gordon Brokenshire, of Orange City.

I believe that we, here on the North American Continent, have the unusual opportunity of proving to the rest of the world that war, whether economic or by clash of arms, is the greatest tragedy, and that scientific order and purpose in politics and economics must be the rule of action and life if this civilization is not to pass in the way of other world civilizations.—Dr. John T. Madden.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of unity among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ONE COMFORT.

Amid the turmoil of this torn time, one solace abides. We human beings may lose faith in one another and in God, but God does not lose faith in us. He believes in us. He trusts us. He is relying upon us. As the writer of II Timothy (chapter 2, verse 13) says: "If we believe not (that is to say, if we lose faith), yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself." The very nature of God, as revealed in his Son, is that of a firm, unshaken faith in man made in the image of his God. Jesus nerved his disciples to strength (except the one who had a devil from the beginning) by declaring his belief in them. He preached to them about their unbelief and chastised them because of their weakness of faith, but his faith in them never faltered, his confidence in them, even when they forsook him and fled, remained steadfast and unmoved.

And now in our day many have fallen away from lack of faith, they have lost confidence in him and in each other, but he is faithful. He cannot deny himself. He still believes in us.

He would be denying himself, his very being and nature, if he withheld his confidence from those who accept him as Supreme Lord and Leader.

We are being tested, we are being tried, yea, as by fire. It was, indeed, a wise man who in intercession prayed: "Give me neither poverty nor riches, lest I be full and deny thee, or lest I be poor and steal and take the name of my God in vain." We have been very rich in the past years. We have revelled in our abundance. Fields, forests, factories, mines and markets have yielded their abundance and brought their increase, and, through that abundance and the fullness thereof, many began to deny him and to say, "Who is the Lord?"

And now, since need has come, unemployment is prevalent and poverty stares us in the face, our only hope to prevent us from denying him, and to prevent us from stealing and taking his name in vain, is to deny ourselves for him, take up the burden of his cross daily and follow him. The time of our need and want is the time of God's opportunity with us, if we will yield ourselves to him, to obey him and to learn in these times to live not only within our means, but to learn to share with God, and the work of his church, the little that we have, that through this sharing he may come and abide with us, and share with us his fellowship and blessed presence. It is far better to deny ourselves than to deny him, for as we deny ourselves in his name, we are brought closer to the source of all riches and of all wealth. But if we deny him the worst possible form of starvation stares us in the face—the starvation of the soul.

Again, we repeat, there is one solace, one comfort, and that is, that God believes in us, will not forsake us in this time of trial, but in the fire of our testing, he will inflame us with a new passion and a new zeal for him and for his world.

DEFYING POWER AND AUTHORITY.

Within the last few days the world has been startled at the assassination of two of its great statesmen and distinguished officials—the President of France and the Premier of Japan. These dastardly deeds, perpetrated in different parts of the world, are outbursts of a disposition that seems to be working in the minds of the people of all lands and countries today. There is a defiance, a destructive attitude against all authority, and those who have been entrusted with power, both in State and in Church. Here at home we are faced with the brazen declaration that "we cannot enforce our laws. We cannot bring to justice those who defy our law. Therefore," we declare, "abolish the laws—they are wrong because they cannot be enforced."

A very thought-producing statement appeared in print somewhere recently, to the effect that it was not our prohibition laws or our kidnapping laws, or any other laws upon our statute books that were being assailed and defied at present—it was nothing else than the Ten Commandments that were being defied and broken down. From the first to the last, the whole Decalogue is being disobeyed, defied. Men and women are flagrantly disregarding the fundamental law, not of any nation, but of all nations and of the human mind—"Thou shalt have no other gods before me." And they are placing in their minds and in their thinking the gods of man's own creation, above the true God that created man. It was a divine command that we observe the Sabbath Day to keep it holy. There is widespread disobedience and defiance of this divine law. It was not a human being, or a parliament of men, who enacted the statute, "Thou shalt not kill." That was enacted by him who created man, and he enacted it and wrote it upon the tablets, not of stone through the finger of Moses, but on the tablet of the human heart itself, from which it has never been erased and cannot be erased. Our law-breakers, let it again be said, are not defying human laws any more than they are defying divine laws, and they are not trying to break down the laws on our statute books any more than they are trying to break down the laws of our very being written upon our hearts with the finger of God. Those laws have to do with our well-being, our safety and our security as members of society.

Never was the need greater than at the present time for the church to cry aloud and spare not for the observance of the Ten Commandments, for the preservation of the power and the authority of Almighty God, for this defiance of the law about us means defiance of the laws of Almighty God. We need to recover that faith that overcometh the world, that faith that is firmly fixed in the wisdom and the power of the unquestioned authority of God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Spirit.

STAGGERING THROUGH UNBELIEF.

The authorized version of the Scripture says that Abraham "staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief." The American version says: "He wavered not through unbelief, but waxed strong through faith, giving glory to God." It was a staggering promise with which Jehovah challenged the faith of Abraham. Souls of smaller caliber and courage would not have wavered and staggered, but would have faltered and failed in such a testing time as that with which the Lord tried the faith of Abraham. The one thing that carried Abraham through his day, and has brought his memory to our day, is the imperishable fact of his unwavering, undying faith. Faith certainly is the victory that overcomes the world.

It seems that we of our day are staggering, wavering from lack of faith. We have lost faith in our government. Men and women, young and old, everywhere are declaring that the government of the United States is unable to enforce its own laws. The chief argument used by those opposed to Prohibition, for example, is that the government is unable, impotent, incapacitated to put into effect its own constitutional requirements. They have lost faith in their government. This loss of faith is everywhere. There are those who have lost faith in God, lost faith in the church, lost faith in the Bible, lost faith in all that pertains to permanency, to power and to authority. From this, the world suffers today. We are simply staggering through unbelief, wavering through unbelief, hesitating and floundering because of our unbelief.

The Book tells us that Abraham "waxed strong through faith, giving glory to God." It is the only way that a man, a people or a nation can wax strong. We have simply got to recover our faith. We have lost faith, and we are not going to wax strong as individuals, as a church, as a nation, until we have fully recovered our faith and shall be willing, as Abraham was, to give glory to God. We are trying to give glory to human achievements. We are trying to give glory to human institutions. We are trying to give glory to new thoughts and theories. It will not carry us anywhere. The hope of the world this day lies in giving glory to God and pressing on toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus; for we are fully assured, as was Abraham, whether we accept that assurance or not, that he, Jehovah, God, "is able also to perform that which he has promised." In his promise there is hope if we but claim that promise and seek strength through faith in him.

SENATOR MORRISON ON PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT.

A speech of Honorable Cameron Morrison of North Carolina, delivered in the Senate of the United States, on January 31st, is being sent out as a part of the Congressional Record, but "not printed at government expense." THE CHRISTIAN SUN holds no brief for Senator Morrison, but this speech delivered before the United States Senate carries a note that is worth catching and a message that is worth getting and thinking over. We presume anyone can get a copy of the address by requesting the same from Senator Morrison, Washington. We quote a paragraph that will indicate its character:

"The Senators from Wisconsin and Maryland say that we ought not to do another thing to enforce the prohibition law, first, because it is corrupt. Mr. President, during the period of the life of prohibition to which they referred the enforcement of prohibition has not been the only thing in connection with which there has been unparalleled corruption in this country. Corruption! I think we had a little trouble with oil along during this same period. We have had corruption in many sections and high places. They talk about the corruption of prohibition 'touching the Department of Justice itself.' It touched it very gently compared to the cruel hand laid upon it by oil corruption.

"The great City of New York, the headquarters of the righteous whose souls are so disturbed over the corruption in connection with prohibition enforcement, has only to look within its own borders for corruption, for if there is anything there that is not corrupt, their own press fails to disclose it.

"I was astounded as I understood the concluding assertion of the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. Blaine) that Congress ought not to do anything further about enforcing the prohibition laws. I think, Mr. President and Senators, that prohibition, concretely and legally speaking, is the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and in my judgment it will never be repealed. Its opponents will hold their demoralizing, disorderly, unauthorized referendums about it wherever they please; but before it is ever repealed, Mr. President and Senators, three-fourths of the States must act for its modification or repeal; and there is not any more likelihood of its being done than there is that secession will be brought back and vitalized in this Republic.

"I do not believe that I wander much more away from the immediate matter before the Senate than other Senators habitually do when I say that the hope of the antiprohibitionists of this country is to capture both of the great political parties, to one or the other of which almost all Americans give their hearty and loyal support, and through them and their platform committees put a bridle upon the great, free, members of both parties. It will never be successful."

Evidently Senator Morrison stands firmly for prohibition without any referendum, except the referendum that will compel obedience to the law.

RELIGION AND SCIENCE.

In the study of religion and science, one must have clearly in mind at least three definite and fundamental facts: (1) Religion and science do not deal with the same subject matter; (2) they do not parallel each other in time—one is permanent and the other is temporary; and (3) they do not have the same kind of authority as support.

1. Religion deals with such problems as God, the future life, the soul, sin, and pardon of sins. What does science know of these questions? What comfort and aid can it render? Can it give us any assurance that man will or will not live again? From the scientific view, what constitutes sin and what is its remedy?

Jesus said: "Everyone that drinketh of this water shall thirst again: but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst." The word "water" represents things temporal and things spiritual, and these in turn correspond to man's dual nature. The earth contains food and other things such as the body needs, but the soul craves that which the earth cannot give. The "natural man" deals with the earthly materials and in his search can never find God. Nature does not reveal, nor does it explain eternal truth.

Since religion deals with eternal problems, it is not primarily interested in science; and since the Bible deals with God, sin, the soul, and salvation, it does not claim to teach chemistry, psychology, philosophy, and geography. He who tries to prove that the Bible is scientific attempts to make the Bible perform a service that its Maker did not intend. When the Bible has revealed God to man and has guided man to God, it has fulfilled its mission.

2. Science is primarily interested in the present life and in our material world. It has done wonders for man, and still promises more; but it can never reveal God to us, nor can it direct us to God. Science is temporal and earthly. It deals with time and its problems. Only incidentally and occasionally do science and religion parallel. Since A. D. 1900 science has added ten years to the average human life, and men now think that it will not be long until people may live for one hundred and fifty years; but science can never make life eternal. To find how to live forever we must consult religion.

Because science and religion differ is no reason why they contradict. Each has its own field, and each has its own work. Why should the preacher and the scientist quarrel? Is there not room enough in the sky for two suns? My eyes and my hands perform different tasks, but they do not contradict one another, and both are useful. This viewpoint will help us, and will add appreciation for both the Bible and science. Let each have its place, and let each perform its task, and the results will be well.

3. Religion has divine authority as its basis, but science has what men think as its support. The Bible was completed nearly nineteen hundred years ago and has not changed since. Here religion halts. The only change religion can safely make is expansion. It can grow and spread, but cannot add new elements. Innovation in religion is dangerous and harmful.

The Bible is the most important religious book in the world, and its age makes it the more valuable. It carries us to the fountain of truth, and there we can find the "water that lives." Religion must remain the same—in all essential respects—and must avoid changes. It has authority from God as its support. Science has only man's opinion as its foundation, and this changes as often as men revise their views. A book on science that is ten years old is antiquated. A new edition every five years is much better. All the things that men make need frequent revision and changes.

In case the Bible had been written in terms of science at the time it was composed, how scientific would it be today? If it had been written then to conform to science now, what would the world have thought of it then? At the time the New Testament was written it was the common belief that the earth was square, flat and stationary. It rested on pillars. For the Bible to have said that the earth was round, that it moved, and that the sun was the center of our world, would have created a consternation. We think today that the sun is the center of the solar system; but this may not be true, and science may some day locate another center. Then what? How could the Bible conform to any scientific view?

The fact is that there are many things that have never changed. For many thousand years the sun, moon, and stars have furnished light to our world. The sun has not changed in size, shape, or work. It travels the same path now that it did when Adam first saw it. It provides heat the same way now as then. Rain falls the same today as it did in ancient Egypt. The seasons still rotate in regular fashion. Children enter the world now just as they did at first, and death is the same to us that it was to the ancients. Sit down and make a list of things that have never changed since time began and will not until time shall end, and you will be surprised. Why should the sun change its path, adopt new methods, or in any way modify itself? Is it not perfect? Why should it change? Do we need a new Bible? Is the one we have out of date? Has God changed?

But science must change. It expresses the human view, and this constantly changes. You cannot expect men today to think as they did a thousand years ago. Science is in the making, but Christianity is perfect and complete.

ARE YOU RICH?

Right at this time, when some men, lacking courage and strength of character, are voluntarily ending it all, others are finding a new meaning in life which is bringing them real happiness.

This new point of view is well expressed by Roy L. Smith, in The Hub, of Saskatoon, Sask., who writes:

"We have passed through a panic, suffered from a crash on the stock market, and are now more than half-way through the depression, and I am still rich.

"It is true that I have much less to live on than a year ago, but it is certainly true that I have just as much as ever to live for. The real values of life are unshaken and solid. . . .

"The depression has not lowered the value of a single friendship. Neighbors still greet us in the same old cordial way, business associates believe in us, and our sons hold us in high respect. The wife's welcome at the close of the day has not depreciated in the least, and our daughters continue to lavish their affection upon us with the same old extravagance.

"My faith in the goodness of the universe is unimpaired. By that faith I am emboldened as I face defeat and despair. The prayers my mother taught me and the faith in God instilled in me by a devout father remain as priceless treasures no depression can touch.

"No nation becomes great by becoming rich. Neither does a man find enduring satisfaction in life by owning something—only by becoming something. The most degrading poverty is that which results from killing the spirit that the body may be served.

"This depression is a challenge, not a catastrophe. A generation that has conquered the air and sent giant planes circling the globe, which has plunged into the deeps and disported on the ocean's floor, which has climbed above the clouds and lived in the atmosphere, is now faced with the challenge to rise above its dependence on mere things and seek an emancipation of the spirit of man.

"The last six months have been for many men a thrilling spiritual adventure through which they have discovered their real wealth. Bereft of dividends and profits, they are discovering the sustaining powers of a strong religious faith, the abiding values of courage, heroism, honor, charity and trustworthiness.

"A financial crisis can wipe out profits and bring business to a standstill, but character is beyond its reach. It can rob us of all we have, but it cannot affect what we are.

"The deepest satisfactions of life—those which come from sharing and serving—remain secure.

"I am still rich because I am independently rich—none of my wealth depends upon business conditions or market reports."—Patchwork.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The graduating exercises of the nine, from Lakeview Hospital Training School, were celebrated in Oxford Methodist Church, Suffolk, Va., on Thursday night, May 20, 1932.

The attendance was good, the program was appropriate and interesting, and the audience enjoyed the occasion. The Processional was rendered by the First Baptist Church orchestra, and Rev. C. E. Pleasants, pastor of Oxford Church, pronounced the invocation. A quartet was then rendered by Miss Margaret Ellis, Miss Odelia Austin, Mrs. W. A. Hart, and Mrs. Claudia Jacobs.

The address to the graduating class was delivered by Dr. J. E. Rawls, head of Lakeview Hospital. His address stressed three points in the making of a useful life. 1. To feel, that is, to have a real conviction of what should be done. 2. To think, that is, to examine into and consider all the elements that enter into the work to be done, and the life to be lived. 3. Do, that is, to put into actual service all that feeling and thinking discover as necessary to complete life at its best. Even feeling and thinking accomplished nothing unless something is done. Therefore, (a) Feel; (b) Think; (c) Do. That was his exhortation to the class and a good lesson for all of us. After the address followed a beautiful duet by Mrs. W. A. Hart and Mrs. Claudia Jacobs.

The diplomas and pins were presented to the class in a brief, but fine address, by Rev. L. F. Paulet, of Smithfield, Va., and pastor of the Baptist Church in that town.

Rev. W. M. Jay, pastor of the Holland Christian Church, presented the medal to Miss Mabel R. Blanchard, of Fortville, N. C., who had won that honor.

A closing selection by the orchestra, and the final benediction by Rev. J. T. Allen, pastor of the Main Street Methodist Church.

After the close followed the handshakes and congratulations for the nine young ladies who had completed the training course for nurses; and and they were the following: Ruth W. Edwards, Windsor, Va.; Mary L. Brinkley, Ahsokie, N. C.; Jane M. Amos, Guinea Mills, N. C.; Doris G. Moser, Graham, N. C.; Elsie G. Ward, Merry Hill, N. C.; Otelia E. Holt, Ivor, Va.; Kate M. Forehand, Colerain, N. C.; Virginia F. Harrell, Cypress Chapel, Va.; Mabel R. Blanchard, Fortville, N. C.

There are schools at the present time for all occupations and all professions—mechanics, agriculture, teaching, law, medicine, music, painting, preaching, art—but none of them prepare for better service to mankind than the training to nurse the sick. The doctor is one of the most available servants for man and the nurse, in some respects, surpasses the doctor, for she remains with the patient. The hospital is one of the most useful institutions in society, and it is the product of Christianity. "Jesus went about preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." (Matt. 4:23.)

Hospitals are products of Christianity, as there were none before Jesus Christ went about healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people. The oldest in this country is the Pennsylvania Hospital, founded in 1750. The oldest of the London hospitals was St. Bartholomew, 1546. Now they are scattered over the entire Christian world, and all kinds for children, eye, ear, cancer, tuberculosis, military, and incurables. The hospital service of the world is among the most valuable institutions and the nurses, who devote their lives to cooperate with physicians in caring for the afflicted, are among the benefactors of the race. Patients who have spent weeks in the hospital can testify to the kindness and patient service by day and by night of those faithful young women who have been trained and know how to render the service which one needs when suffering the agony of acute pain.

A FINE MEMORIAL SERVICE.

At the close of this Conference year, Rev. J. F. Morgan has been our pastor for seven years. Each year during these seven years of service, Bro. Morgan has held a memorial service in our community cemetery, known as Berea Cemetery, May 22, we held one of those services. The speaker of the occasion was deprived of the privilege of being present because of funeral ceremonies. Bro. Morgan acted as master of ceremonies, and he did so well that we never missed the other fellow. Bro. Morgan read the Scripture telling of a ruler of the synagogues coming to Jesus beseeching him to go with him to his home to heal his daughter, who, said the ruler is at the point of death. For a basis for his exhortation, Bro. Morgan used these words, "Weep not, she is not dead, but sleepeth." He said while standing on this sacred mound he wished to remind those present—the relatives and friends of the departed loved ones—that they so silent, and so long resting beneath the sod of Mother Earth, were not dead, but sleeping, for said he, at the last day, at the sound of the last trumpet, when Jesus again shall appear, these departed friends and relatives shall awaken out of their long sleep and come forth to newness of life, and to ever be with the Lord.

He said, in his imagination, he sometimes wonders what would be the wishes of our loved ones if they could come forth and speak to us. He said he believed they would tell us to just keep on keeping on. Live an upright, Godly life, seek to make the world better, and so let our lights shine that others might be brought into the Kingdom. That they would implore us not to give ourselves too much concern in reference to them, for they were resting in peace, but for us to strive on along the upper road ever looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of faith, and at last we too could and would enter into that rest prepared for all that are faithful in his service.

MEMORIALS.

Memorial Day—Day of Memories—and we seek to honor those who have laid down their lives upon the battlefields in our own fair land and also those who crossed the seas to aid other nations in their desperate fight for freedom. Flags and flowers call to mind all of the high purpose and bravery which led them from home and loved ones to follow the flag they loved so well into the terrible carnage. Eulogies by eloquent and fervid orators will be spoken in their behalf. Not alone for those who sleep in the "silent cities" will this day be commemorated, for there are broken bodies that bear the scars of war; bodies which are weary and worn with the years of suffering that they have been called upon to endure. Many cannot mingle with their fellowmen who are still battling against their enemies, discouragement and despair. These will also receive homage and many will seek to make the day brighter for them by acts of love and devotion.

The terrible guns are silent now and the soldier boys are not in battle array; they are gathered together to pay tribute to the soldier boys of other years, who live, many of them, in memory alone. Yes, this Day of Memories should be observed as the years come and go bringing to the minds of the younger generation the terrible price which was paid for their present privileges.

But there is a battlefield even yet, the battlefield of life, on which are lying many shattered bodies and broken hearts. It is a battlefield which many pass with unconcern not realizing that there are brave hearts that are needing a word of cheer, who wonder if they are forgotten and feel so alone.

She was in her declining years and probably destined to have the hospital for her home for the remainder of her life. A chance caller brought to her a bouquet of beautiful roses at an inopportune time as she was conferring with an intimate friend concerning some business matter. The roses were admired and words of appreciation spoken, yet the caller was peremptorily informed that her presence was not desired at that particular time. The day was gloomy and chill and the atmosphere seemed to have overcome the sick one for she said, "I am just as blue and discouraged as I can be. I have been here for six months. This dear friend is good to me and does so much for me, yet she has a little baby to care for."

The caller answered, "Probably that is what the Lord wants her to do, to be a help and encouragement to you." A look of incredulity overspread the countenance of the occupant of the wheel chair and she said: "Perhaps."

She is only one of many who may have become bitter in their affliction but who need just the encouragement that you may give, the love that you may show even though you may not think that your efforts are appreciated. Love can find a way into such hearts.

This Day of Memories may bring to our hearts thoughts of loved ones who have gone before; of lonely graves scattered from coast to coast; of loved ones who are even now upon beds of affliction, whom we cannot minister to; but may we think of those whom we may comfort within our reach and may we go, for some one may be going to our loved ones, blessing them as we seek to bless others. Oh, may we go in the name of Jesus, showing forth his love, showing forth the abundant life that others may live.

"God's love hath to us wealth upheaped;

Only by giving it is reaped.

The body withers, and the mind,

If pent in by selfish rind.

Give strength, give thought, give deeds, give self,

Give love, give tears, and give thyself;

Who gives not is not living.

The more we give, the more we live."

W.

THE HOME.

The home and the family antedate all other human institutions and Jesus placed special emphasis on this institution. He knew, as did no other man, the inevitable law governing human life and how the home became the most substantial of all other institutions in safeguarding the destiny of human life; and in the building of a permanent civilization. It is the fundamental factor in the creation of Christian ideals and in the motivation of every life and Christian service.

Every civilization and every religion has been measured primarily in its contribution to human needs, by the standard of the home.

One great educator says that, "There is no standard, so reliable in measuring the status of a nation's greatness as the home." Another says, "As long as life, in its various spheres, is molded, shaped and inspired by Christian home ideals, it is safe and constructive." But I have learned, to my entire satisfaction, that in those sections of the different states in which I have worked, the home ties were in the initiative of whatever good or bad influences existed. Destroy the Christian home and all our boasted industrial achievement our educational and religious institutions will mean little in the defense of a civilization that will stand and function in the upbuilding of human righteousness. Every nation's best thinking and noblest acting, in all the different spheres and callings of life, have been the fruits of effective home environment, and parental training.

"The fundamental quality of good teaching is getting the emphasis on the things of most value," and there is no better place, on earth, for this than the Christian home. One of the most pathetic things I have to think about in connection with conditions in our country is the idea that some people have that other institutions should usurp the fundamentals of home-making and child training. Jesus could find no better illustration for the expression of the great truths of a higher life than the home; the husband and the wife or the father and the son. Every trend toward the disintegration and destruction of the home should be viewed as a most serious problem and with great alarm. Save the home and the family, and the country will be safe. The hearthstone of Christian homes is the cornerstone of a great nation.

THEORIES OF HOMICIDE.

Dr. H. C. Brearley, Professor of Sociology in Clemson College, South Carolina, in his volume, "Homicide in the United States," to be published by the University of North Carolina Press sometime in the near future, discusses the most likely reasons for the crime, and shows how most of the believed causes may be easily explained as unaccountable for homicide. The increase in material wealth and the development of industry during the past few decades is believed by some to have provided a great number of previously unknown temptations, and thus caused crime to increase. If this were true, the rates would be higher in the East than in the less industrialized South, but the latter section has the lowest wealth and the highest homicide rate. The idea that a psychological effect caused killing to become imbedded in children's minds during the war so that an increase in homicide resulted is unfounded since the trend is not noticeable immediately after the war. Statistics from tests given children show that motion pictures do not help the cause of crime. Prohibition has resulted in the loss of many lives employed to enforce the law, but the total number of deaths is only one per cent of the homicide rate. Newspapers and other publications are supposed to develop in an unstabilized population a thirst for sensations which results in crime, but the evidence to that effect is scanty and not conclusive. Immigrants are said to be more likely to commit homicide due to their prejudices, but the East with the largest foreign-born population, has a better homicide rate than the South or West. The rapid increase in the rate of insanity may provide a good cause for crime development but there is no definite proof. Our educational system is said to neglect greatly training in good citizenship and altruistic behavior which results in crime. Since the South rates lowest in education and highest in homicide this is apparently true, but on the other hand western education according to Ayre's Index system, is regarded as being better than eastern and the homicide rate in the west is much higher than in the east. Since divorce rates are high in this country, children are inadequately trained for social responsibilities and the resulting family disorganization breeds crime. This seems to be true in the case of the United States. However, the best reason for homicide is found in culture patterns. Moral or social standards among any group which are antagonistic to the rules and customs of a larger society are said to increase homicide. In some sections, as in the south, there are certain unwritten laws which call for death as vengeance, and the pressure of public opinion combined with the honor at stake forces the act. Insult, abuse of parental status, the disruption of a home by seduction or adultery, all demand the death of the wrong-doer. Great importance is attached to these folkways which have been handed down from times when human life was little esteemed.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

Our loving Father, thou gavest to man a world of beauty. Sin veils its loveliness. By Satan's hand difficulty and distress abound. In mercy, Father, hasten the day when comfort and gladness shall fill the earth; when avenues of woe shall become channels of holy acclaim. Thine is the power, ours the part of faith and works. May we ever remember that when these are finished, with the swiftness of lightning Satan shall fall to utter destruction. Make our strivings pure. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE CAUSE NEAREST OUR SAVIOUR'S HEART.

Our friend and co-worker in Missions, Dr. Egbert W. Smith, who, for the past twenty years, has been executive secretary of Foreign Missions for the Southern Presbyterian Church, this week resigns from that work, having reached his three-score years and ten, and his mind having been made up, when reaching this time in life, to withdraw as an executive, and "commit to younger shoulders the burden and let younger feet lead the missionary advance."

This does not mean that this faithful man of God and very capable worker in the mission field has lost interest in the mission cause, or is to relinquish his efforts in behalf of missions. In his letter of resignation, Dr. Smith says: "I expect, however, to devote the rest of my life, and the knowledge and experience I have gained in mission lands, to the promotion of that cause that lay ever nearest our Saviour's heart and formed the burden of his last command." It is to be hoped that Dr. Smith will give his pen to the writing of other mission books, in which field he has made a rich contribution already with volumes that have stirred the hearts and minds of thousands of missionary societies and other mission groups.

The cause that lay nearest our Saviour's heart and was the burden of his last command is a cause that should be nearest every Christian heart and is a burden that should be borne by all who have a disposition to obey the final and the supreme command of our Lord. Our Lord himself is responsible for missions, and this should be borne in mind by those who are supposed to criticize missions. The question is one of obeying him and helping him to bear the burden that lay heaviest on his heart.

THE MT. AUBURN MISSIONARY RALLY.

The last of the Missionary Rallies of the North Carolina Conference for this spring was held with Mt. Auburn Church, Tuesday, May 10th. Surely, the committee, in planning the Rallies, saved the best for the last. Miss Margaret Alston, the superintendent of the Vance-Warren District, had worked faithfully among the societies and churches of her district to get a good delegation and to create interest in the Rally, and her work was not in vain. Mrs. Murdock Newman is the efficient secretary and rendered excellent service in making the Rally a success. Miss Priscilla Chase, extension worker, Mrs. J. P. Barrett, Elon College, and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, president of the North Carolina Woman's Conference, were the visitors and speakers outside the district, who added much to the interest and the enthusiasm of the meeting. Mt. Auburn, of course, received the session with joyous greeting and gracious hospitality. Mrs. J. A. Kimball, president of the local society, with her associates and friends of the society and the church, by the preparation of special numbers on the musical program and the beautiful array of flowers in the church, and an elaborate luncheon, gave to the day an air and a touch of fellowship and good feeling that made all feel welcome and happy. Every number on the program was rendered as arranged, and the entire meeting was full of interest, carrying just such information to the societies and delegates as they desired and needed, and giving to each much that they might use in their societies during the year. The questionnaire especially provoked hearty discussions, and the day was, indeed, well spent as "we took sweet counsel together in the house of the Lord." Mt. Auburn Church may always be counted upon to make any meeting there one of interest and enthusiasm. It was voted to gather in the next annual session at Fuller's Chapel. Mr. and Mrs. Sam Coghill, delegates from Fuller's, parents of Miss Pattie Coghill, were present at the Mt. Auburn meeting, and were instrumental in securing the next session for Fuller's, Mrs. Coghill declaring that the Mt. Auburn Rally seemed to her the very best she had ever attended, and the meeting well worth while. All present seemed to have a similar feeling.

NOT I, BUT CHRIST.

A noted English clergyman, F. B. Meyers, was spending his vacation in a Swedish hotel. In the hotel was a piano and also a young lady eight years old. The young lady delightedly banged the piano to the intense distress of everyone else.

But a famous musician came to the hotel, sat down beside the young lady at the piano, and, taking her discords, he made them the basis of such splendid music that all the guests at the hotel drew near to hear. This pleased the young lady very much and she went about telling with pride about her attractive music. Isn't that just like some of us in our Christian work?

More than fifty years ago, Dr. Lyman Abbott came to Oberlin to lecture. He seemed to me then to be the best example of walking encyclopedia I ever saw. But of all he said, the only thing that has staid in my mind was a story he told of his little girl. He had a rule in his household that during certain hours of the morning no guests were to be admitted to his study. But one morning there was a knock at his door, to which at first he paid no attention. It continued until at last in wrath he went to the door to scold a servant who might be guilty of disregarding his orders. But when he opened the door, there stood his little six-year-old girl, looking up joyously into his face and holding a single rose with most of the petals gone. But she was saying, "Papa, see what a pitty posy I brought you."

Abbott's wrath faded and picking up the little girl, he kissed her and sent her away pleased to her mother. And he said, "How like that are all of us. We bring our imperfect work before the Lord, and he accepts it with all its imperfections because he sees the love which is behind it all."

In I. Cor. 15:10, Paul recognizes the fact that the glory for any of his achievements was due to the grace of God which was in him. In Colossians 1:27, he says our great riches is "Christ in us the hope of glory." And when we pride ourselves on what we have accomplished, is it not humbling to read Phil. 3:13, "For it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do his good pleasure." Not much glory there for man!

The English version of Judges 6:34 is, "And the Spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon." But the French translation says, "The Spirit of the Eternal clothed himself with Gideon."

Not the wire has the power, but the electric current flowing through it.

Lord, if thou dost condescend to dwell in me, to use me to do thy work, help me always to remember my own smallness and that all the power is of thee.

MISSIONARY PROGRAMS FOR JUNE.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

WOMAN'S SOCIETIES.

I am wondering how you are enjoying the study of India by this time. Hope the poster meeting in May proved to be successful and helpful, too. This month we have a Question Box meeting, and this ought to be just as helpful and interesting if worked up well. The general plan is as follows: Three young people dressed to typify History, Facts and Christian Opinion, will answer the questions. History might be enfolded in cardboard cut as a book cover with "History" lettered in the center.

Facts might be draped severely in black and white and the word, "Facts," worn on a strip of paper across the front.

Christian Opinion in drapery of blue or white cheesecloth (perhaps with a gold cross in hand). Distribute the twenty-four questions among the audience, who will ask them in turn. If this plan is too elaborate, the questions may be distributed and asked in turn, one of three assigned leaders giving the answer without reading, if possible. If the audience could be induced to discussion, it would greatly add.

Program.

"India in Transition."

Hymn—"Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life."

Leader's introduction.

Question Box.

Special Solo—Gandhi's favorite Christian Hymn, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross."

Scripture—Portions of the Sermon on the Mount, in which Gandhi and many of India's leaders find inspiration for service.

Prayer for India's Leaders—For the Indian Church; for the Indian Missionary Society; for the pastors; for the social workers; for ourselves that we may be conscious of fellowship with these others of the great household of God.

Plenty of good material for an Indian program may be found in our public and school libraries. Avail yourself of the opportunity and see how much it will help your program.

WILLING WORKERS OR JUNIORS.

Children's Program.

Have this a public program and take a special offering for Missions.

YOUNG PEOPLES' SOCIETIES.

Topic—"God and the Census."

Theme—"Living the Truth."

4. Offertory.
5. Hymn—"Gracious Spirit, Dwell With Me." (1st verse.)
6. Benediction.

PROGRAM FOR CRADLE ROLL RALLY.

Song—"Jesus Loves Me."

Recitation—"My Speech of Welcome," by a wee boy:

"A welcome speech they want from me,
And though I'm little, they shall see
I'll speak it out so loud and clear
That everyone can surely hear.

"I welcome you with sweet delight—
It seems to me that sounds all right;
Now smile, and I will give you this—
Just catch my great big Welcome Kiss."

Superintendent's Welcome to All (closing with "God Bless the Babies"):

"God bless these babies dear,
All who are gathered here—
Our Cradle Roll.
Jesus, in thy dear arms,
Keep safe from all that harms,
And guard from all alarms,
Our Cradle Roll."

Solo—"Jesus Bids Us Shine."

Exercise by four children:

"Such little hands! What can they do
To make somebody glad?
The bright sweet flowers they can bring
To cheer the sick and sad.

"Such little feet! Where can they go
The gifts of God to bear?
To run his errands to and fro,
They're needed everywhere.

"Bright little eyes can always find
A Bible verse or hymn,
To give sweet peace to heart and mind,
Of one whose sight is dim.

"One little tongue can always say
Kind words of truth and love;
And to the gentle Saviour pray,
Who listens from above."

Song—(Some favorite that the children know.)
Offering—"Give Freely."

(A boy): "Our baskets are empty, we are sorry to say.

But hope you will fill them this Cradle Roll Day."

(A girl): "Oh, not for ourselves will your fine offering go,
But for other children whom Christ does not know."

(A boy): "Give freely, give freely, for those still outside,

For each little one has the dear Saviour died."

Pastor's Remarks, closing with prayer.

Note to Cradle Roll Superintendents—There is a leaflet entitled, "Let the Little Ones Come Unto Him," for the Cradle Roll mothers. If you will write to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., and state the number you need, they will be sent to you free.

CHINA AND PRAYER.

By EDWARD HUNTINGTON SMITH.

Chiang Kai Shek for the last four years has been the acknowledged head of the Nanking Government. He is today a Christian member of the Church, with a Christian wife—a Wellesley graduate—and a Christian home. The New York Times has told us how during the past months in their home in Nanking they have repeatedly had prayer-meetings, calling his Cabinet together.

His Cabinet—how was it composed? You will recognize two of the names: H. H. Kung, our own Oberlin graduate, Principal of one of our American Board schools in China, the Minister of Industries, Labor and Commerce; T. V. Soong, the Minister of Finance, probably the ablest financier of all Asia, an earnest Christian from his earliest childhood.

Many of you must know C. T. Wang, the former Minister of Foreign Affairs. I have a feeling that C. T. Wang and his splendid foreign adviser, Robert E. Lewis, our great American layman who went out from Cleveland, have been the inspiration of the policies that have controlled China during the last six months in the midst of all of this turmoil and confusion.

Wasn't it splendid! that Christian group of statesmen in Nanking, refusing to fight, but appealing to the Christian sentiment of the world, appealing to the League and to Washington, for Christian justice.

We are still hoping that those young men out there, the Christian leaders of China, are not to be repulsed and turned back. Think what a calamity it is going to be if the Christian sentiment of the world is to be unable to raise a hand to help them, and the word has to go back to Nanking that there is no justice in this world, that the only security is to be found in fighting. Some of you saw Will Rogers' telegram the other day, saying that the missionaries had been telling the Chinese to put their trust in the Lord, and the diplomats were telling them to put their trust in the League of Nations—and both had gone back on them.

That is not true.

We ought to unite our prayers with those of Chiang Kai Shek and his closest associates, with those of Robert Lewis and Sherwood Eddy in their great effort.

It was Chiang Kai Shek, you know, who, in December, after Serwood Eddy had made his very successful campaign throughout Chinese cities, speaking to crowded houses, with thousands of students and hundreds of conversions, went to him and besought him to give the next five years of evangelistic work among the students of China.

The great tragedy of these days is Japan's attack upon China, which threatens the stability of that little group of men who for the last four or five years in Nanking have been overcoming insuperable obstacles, struggling to carry China forward, to win out, and this attack has almost overthrown them.

I remember one little boy praying in Christian Endeavor meeting one evening: "Oh, God, make China just like America." I had to take him aside after meeting and say: "No, that is not what we pray for. Christ taught us a much better prayer than that: that America and China together may be like the Kingdom of Heaven." That is what we are looking forward to, what we are fighting for, and Communism and all these other enemies put us on our mettle, and drive us upon spiritual security, upon a Rock that cannot be shaken.—Missionary Herald.

"WILL A MAN ROB GOD?"

The latest statistics show that the United States spends every year for luxuries the enormous sum of five and a half billion dollars. Of this, $1,847,000,000 is spent for tobacco; $820,000,000 for soft drinks and ice cream; $934,000,000 for theaters, movies and similar amusements; $689,000,000 for candy; $87,000,000 for chewing gum; $453,000,000 for jewelry; $431,000,000 for sporting goods, toys, etc., and $261,000,000 for perfumes and cosmetics.

Note that these eight items are all either almost useless or positively harmful. We spend for these luxuries about $50 a person or $200 a family every year. From a tenth to a fifth of our average income is wasted, or worse than wasted.

Now how much do we spend for God, for the church, for missions and other great Christian enterprises? We are tithing them for the Bread of Life. We are certainly not robbing the corner cigar store; are we robbing the house of God? We are not robbing the movie producers, or the candy manufacturers; are we robbing God? How does the matter stand with each one of us? There is no more important practical and spiritual question for America to answer today than this: Is our nation robbing God?—Amos R. Wells in Church of Christ Advocate.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

WILL YOU THROW THE STONE?

Sometimes a person can "kill two birds with one stone," as the old proverb says. Here's how it can be done.

Rev. Zenas Bean, R. 1, Wedowee, Ala., the son of a Christian-Congregational preacher, wants to go to college. To do so he is getting subscriptions to the Christian Endeavor World. He has reached fifth place in this contest, which indicates that he has a chance to win. He can receive subscriptions from any where at the regular price of $2.00 per year to individuals, or $1.75 per year to Christian Endeavor Societies. The contest closes June 15th.

Individuals who are interested in Christian Endeavor need the paper. All Christian Endeavor Societies should have it for the leaders. Program material is found in this paper.

By sending a subscription to Rev. Mr. Bean right away, you can help yourself and society, and probably help him to get into college next year.

Will you throw this stone and kill two birds at once? Thank you.

HEROES OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

WILFRED GRENFELL.

Under this department—Service—we will bring you some modern heroes of service whose lives are so outstanding that they challenge the admiration of modern youth. Of different nationalities are they, yet each in his own way is performing the service for which he is fitted.

The one chosen for this week is one who is contributing in a large way to the uplift of the people of Labrador.

"While the brother finishes his prayer, let us sing a hymn." Thus spoke D. L. Moody in a meeting in London and at once Wilfred Grenfell put back his hat and stayed for the meeting. As he listened to Moody's message he made up his mind that he would put aside pretending to be a Christian and, as he put it, "Do as Christ would do as a doctor."

This was the beginning of one of the most dramatic lives of present-day history. Wilfred Grenfell was not afraid of hard work, discomforts, and inconveniences if that would help someone else. He was brought up on the water; skillful in swimming, boating, fishing, hunting, and athletics—all of which prepared him for the dangerous, rugged, and uncharted coasts of Labrador, where he was to make his greatest contribution of service to mankind.

At the age of 21 he received his degree. He became interested in the fisher folk of the North Sea off the coast of England about this time, and soon after joined a small body of men who were engaged in helping the fishermen in a religious and social way, and needed a doctor who might render medical aid and assist with the spiritual side of the work. For five years he worked among these North Sea fishermen, going about in his little boat. Here he found a real need—one that challenged the adventurous spirit of the man until a field of greater need called him into a similar work off the coast of Labrador.

And here he has been ever since. His little hospital ship goes everywhere that a ship can go. Hospitals have been built, and with his faithful dog teams, he has carried help and healing to many suffering ones in these cold bleak frozen regions. He has been a doctor and a friend, too.

He has helped them build stores where they can get the necessities of life without paying exorbitant prices. He has endeared himself to them because he has proven his love for them by risking his life for them. Everywhere in England and America, and in other lands, the name of Wilfred Grenfell is honored. He is one of the best loved men of the world, and all because "he is among you as one that serveth" in a most unselfish way.

BIRDIE M. ROWLAND.

VALLEY VIRGINIA S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Valley Virginia Central Conference will meet with the Timber Ridge Christian Church June 16th and 17th. President Roy A. Larrich says that plans are being made for a great convention, and if the future can be judged by the past, those who attend will receive much benefit. All Sunday School and Christian Endeavor people in the Valley should plan to be present for this meeting.

YOUTH CONGRESS.

News comes this way of meetings of young people in various parts of the southeast. It is to be hoped that every Conference and Association will get right to work. Before this year is ended there should be a meeting of young people in every section of our churches. The North Carolina and Virginia Conference young people met in Mebane, N. C., last Sunday. The Eastern Virginia Congress expects to meet either in July or August, the exact date to be announced soon. Other groups are probably planning now for their meetings. This editor will be delighted to know of all proposed meetings, and will do all he can to help with publicity, or in any other way.

But now is the time for officers to get busy. The summer is a fine time for young people to get together in Congresses, or whatever the organization may be called.

There is work to be done—much work to be done—and the King's work demands haste.

WHICH REMINDS ME.

The Young People's Bulletin, which is published in Boston, and edited by Dr. Harry Thomas Stock and Miss Lucy Eldredge, says that the young people of Congregational and Christian Churches should give some money to missions. It seems from the account in that little paper that an old man by the name of D. Pression came along and took away about a million dollars that should have been sent to China, Japan, India, Africa, and about a dozen other countries to support hospitals, schools, churches, and all kinds of Christian work. The American Board is having to call home many missionaries and close the work in some places. That is bad. In fact, Old Man D. Pression is a bad man.

Now it is believed by certain optimists, namely, the editors referred to above, that the young people in our churches can raise $167,397.00 in perfectly good money to help keep hospitals, schools, and churches going in needy places. Why not get the other young people in your church to join with you and each of you give an extra dollar for missions? Congregationalists will send theirs through the regular channels, which will likely be to the State Treasurer, and Christian Church people can send theirs to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, at Elon College, N. C. This is a good work, and worthy of real sacrifice. A dollar is not the top limit. Let it be the bottom limit only.

By the way, The Young People's Bulletin, above mentioned is so full of information for young people that a copy should be in the hands of every youth leader in our churches. If you desire a copy, write to Herman Truitt, president of Youth Fellowship, or to the editors, Dr. Stock and Miss Eldredge, at 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

FELLOWSHIP SUPPER.

The Three S Christian Endeavor Union of the Tidewater District held a Fellowship Supper on Friday, May 6th, at the Oak Grove Methodist Protestant Church. This is the second Fellowship Supper the Union has had, and we feel that the attendance was fine, since the Union has not been organized many months. The Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor of the Christian Church, Waverly, Va., served as toastmaster and the Scarborough Brothers, from Savedge, Va., furnished music during the supper. Also, musical numbers were rendered by several of the young people. During the supper, songs were sung and jokes told and afterwards a social hour was had, with games and contests. At the close, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds" was sung, and the Christian Endeavor benediction was repeated.

REPORTER.

TRY THIS FOR FELLOWSHIP.

The Young People's Christian Endeavor of Waverly, Va., the past Sunday had the Epworth League of the Methodist Church of that town as their guests for a picnic supper and worship service on a nearby farm. The young people from these two churches went out to a grassy hillside near a beautiful spring at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon, played some simple games, ate their picnic supper, held a worship service, and returned home in time for the evening church service.

The topic was, "Jesus, the Outdoor Man." Around this theme which the young people selected for themselves they centered songs, poems, talks, scriptures and prayers. Both pastors were invited to share in the program, and so were members of both the Christian Endeavor and the Epworth League.

For a good time and real fellowship, try this sort of thing in your church. It works fine in Waverly.

NOTICE.

As the appointment now stands, our Summer School of Christian Education will convene at Southern Union College, Wadley, Ala., Thursday night before the 5th Sunday in July, and will continue one week. My purpose in giving this notice is to ask all pastors and churches to plan their revivals so as not to interfere with the attendance of our young people upon this school of methods.

I do hope that every pastor may plan to attend, and that every church shall not only require their pastor to attend, but to aid him in every possible way to attend.

It will be great if all our preachers can have the opportunity to spend a week together and have the fellowship of our Congregational brethren in that meeting. Everybody pray and plan to be there.

Sincerely,

G. D. HUNT.

JOSEPH THE WORKER.

LESSON X—JUNE 5, 1932.

LESSON TEXT: Genesis 39-41 Chapters.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings."—Prov. 22:29.

TIME: B. C. 1735-1710.

PLACE: Zoan, the capital of Egypt, on the eastern part of the Nile delta.

The Man of the Hour.

Between the time of the last lesson and the beginning of this one, twenty years have elapsed. Displeased at the dreams of Joseph and because of their petty jealousies, the brothers threw David into a pit, whence he was drawn out and sold into slavery in Egypt.

Here he arose by diligence to a position of minor importance, only to be wrongly accused of unfaithfulness to his master and to be thrown into prison. Here he remained until two of the servants of Pharaoh were also imprisoned. Then the dreamer of dreams became the interpreter.

In due time the drama unfolds. One of the dreamers is restored to favor at court, as had been foretold, and when Pharaoh himself was disturbed by dreams which his magicians could not interpret, Joseph was remembered by the butler who had been restored, and was hurried from prison into the royal presence.

Quickly was the dream interpreted. Egypt should be blessed by seven years of plenty, but these should be followed by seven years of famine. To this interpretation was added the advice that someone should be appointed to provide in the time of plenty for the need that was to follow.

Competent men, then as now, were scarce, and in a flash of inspiration the man who had foreseen disaster was chosen to alleviate it. At one step Joseph advances from the prison to Prime Minister of Egypt.

How blessed would we of today have been, had we found a man appointed of God in our time of plenty, that he might have prepared for the lean years that are now upon us. Even now, if we would turn our faces toward God, would he deliver us. It is lack of moral stamina, says Roger Babson, that keeps us from a come-back.

Making Preparation.

Joseph had unwittingly been preparing himself for the task before him. His very humbleness and simplicity aided him in this. He had performed well the smaller tasks that had been given him. Now harder ones were thrust upon him. The higher the place of preference we are given, the heavier the burdens we bear. But God does not give us a greater burden than we are able to carry.

Joseph, with his characteristic thoroughness, began preparation for the times of hardship that were to follow. A fifth part of the abundant harvest was saved each year. It was probably gathered as a tax. Our government could well learn a lesson here. Taxes can be more easily paid in times of plenty, but it has been forced to tax most heavily when we are least prepared to pay. Those advocating unemployment insurance might also take a page from Joseph's notebook.

The important thing is that when the time of distress arrived, Joseph was prepared.

A Victory Attained.

The famine was severe and long. Not only did it reach throughout the borders of Egypt, but to the lands beyond, as well. We have known comparatively little of actual famine in our land, but what a lesson this would be in China or India. Yet we have had brought home to us most forcibly the meaning of depression, and we find that we stand today upon the threshold of universal want.

But Joseph was prepared, "For in all the land of Egypt there was bread, And when all the land of Egypt was famished, the people cried to Pharaoh for bread." So today we call upon our President. And Pharaoh answered: "Go unto Joseph; what he saith, do." Well might our President paraphrase that answer: "Go unto God in prayer; what he saith, do." And the victory will be ours.

"IF WE FAINT NOT."

Saint Paul, writing to the Galatian Christians, says: "And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." These calm and weighted words are intended to put into the soul a spirit of rugged perseverance while we wait for the harvests of salvation from the sowing of gospel seed.

Have you observed the patient struggles of nature to come to the harvest with ripened seed and with ability to reproduce its life? Everywhere this persistence may be observed. Some years ago, while traveling in the mountain country of the west, I found much inspiration in the evident struggle of the mountain pines growing in the scanty soil of the nooks and crannies of the Rockies. Many of these hardy trees were dwarfs, so meager was the soil in which their roots were clinging, and often they were bent with the prevailing winds, and twisted into curious shapes, but they clung to the granite cliffs and patiently endured through the passing seasons. There was a nature in them that would have been tall and symmetrical in a more sheltered place and in a friendlier soil, but they seemed like soldiers, like heroes to me, and the memory has often been an inspiration to struggle on in the affairs of life. These little Jack Pines brightened the face of the cliff with their rich green foliage, and here and there one could even see the brown seed cones that gave promise of another generation of hardy evergreen trees.

"Give me the man who holds on when others let go," says a writer, "who stiffens up when others retreat, who knows no such word as can't, or give up; and I will show you a man who will win in the end, no matter what obstacles confront him."

In due season—if we faint not! Let the people of God be fully persuaded that the riches of divine grace are worth all they cost. Whatever the price may be, and however long the harvest time may seem to be in coming, never give up until prayers are answered.—Wesleyan Methodist.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

INSIPID.

"Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt has lost its savour, wherewith shall it be salted?" Matt. 5:13.

"So then I will spue thee out of my mouth." Rev. 3:16.

The Moffatt version of our text from Matthew says, "If salt becomes insipid, what can make it salt again?"

This furnishes us a new window through which to view an old landscape. It represents the peculiar danger of a Christian. One of the greatest dangers which confronts any one is not that he may fall completely, but that one may become lax, indifferent, and stand for nothing particular. He becomes lukewarm, insipid, useless and undesirable to the Lord's service. Such God spues out.

Jesus is looking for folk who have convictions and the courage to stand by them; for followers who are penetrating in their influence. Are we?

Prayer—Dear Lord, who art able to do all things, do unto us as thou wilt. Mold us as the potter does his clay. Make us willing to so be used. Amen.

TUESDAY.

SLIPPERY WAYS.

"No man, having put his hand to the plough and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." Luke 9:62.

How many slippery ways there are of becoming insipid! One author has said that the morning prayer of Napoleon was, "Give us this day our daily platitudes." Does it not seem that we have reduced our prayers to generalities, reduced Jesus, yea, even God, to mere platitudes, which have long since lost their power to arrest or pierce.

We do side-step live questions sometimes. We do straddle issues and try to play safe. We do hesitate to thrust our faith out into life, don't we? But Jesus says, if we become insipid, what good are we?

The apostles went forth like fire-brands and set the world on fire with Jesus. Their testimony cut with truth. How far are we from the apostolic spirit today? It appears to be an age of reason, and reason has become sane to the insipid state.

"Insipid." A good word to look at, and ask, "Lord, is it I?"

Say the Lord's Prayer.

WEDNESDAY.

"RICHER AND FULLER BE."

"Give and it shall be given to you." Read I Cor. 13.

Seth Parker said over the radio some time ago, "You'll never get much out of this world unless you love one another." We must pray as we sing, "O, Love that will not let me go."

Prayer—Our Father, we have been stricken as others are, and we may be stricken again. O God, help us to surrender to Thee our whole lives, body, soul and spirit. Make us see the wisdom of thy way, and willing to suffer, if need be, to learn the higher meanings of life. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THE ART OF MALIGNING."

"Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment; and whosoever shall say to his brother, raca, shall be in danger of the council; but whosoever shall say, thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire."—Matt. 5:22.

In other words, whosoever maligns his brother, reaps God's condemning judgment.

"Without cause," means very much what the words imply—"flagrant offence."

"Raca," we are told, means "empty head," or "scamp," and "fool" is said to refer to "stubborn and rebellious," which in the divine mind involves malevolent intentions of the heart.

There is a subtle art in maligning, and what depths do men go to practice it! It is called a branch of murder. It murders reputation and influence, both of which are sacred and inseparable parts of personality. We can malign by insinuations in which no guilt can be established. This is done by the lift of the brow, or a half sneer. But the most deadly maligning is done by misstatement.

There is an old adage which comes to us from our youth. "Be careful of whom you speak, to whom you speak, how, when and where." And always remember that the mere glance of the eye or shrug of the shoulder may be eloquent with speech.

Prayer—Our Father, have mercy upon us and forgive us of everything we have done amiss. Help us to keep Christ, Our Lord, in view, and to strive to be like Him. Amen.

FRIDAY.

CANAANS STILL.

"Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto the land that I will show thee." Read Genesis 12:1-9.

Ex-Mayor Morris, of Bermondsey, London, urges the millions of willing workers, men and women, who can not find work to do in Great Britain, to go out to North Australia. There they may gain a good livelihood in a vast, fertile and almost unoccupied territory.

Wherever our remaining in any place or condition does not remedy matters but rather makes them worse, God calls us to move on. The world has many Canaans still: where are the Abrahams to occupy them and use them for God? Fie upon those that stay at home, complaining, grieving, and accepting doles, while the world holds out the invitation of North Australia.

Christianity means progress. It is easier to stay in one place and live on the past, but all heroic souls have pushed out from their Harans and found their Canaans.

Prayer—"Bid us go forward, God of all advancement! March at the head of the line, Christ of the coming years! While Thy world moves, grant that we may move with it. Amen.

—Amos R. Wells.

SATURDAY.

YELLOW.

"If any man serve me, him will the Father honor." Read John 12:23-32.

Many young people of today—and not a few of their elders—have strange notions of honor. They accept these ideas from their friends and acquaintances rather than from their own consciences and the Word of God.

For instance, the newspapers are telling about a young woman twenty-two years old who calls herself a "bandit queen," and says that she had carried out a hundred small holdups. She built up her gang, she said, by "vamping" the boys, and, if they refused to join it and commit crimes, she simply called them "yellow," and that usually brought them to terms.

Can we not surround the youths, and even the "bandit queens," with a more sensible atmosphere? Can we not make them see in what real dishonor consists, and real honor? The home, the school, and the church must all work together, but it can be done.

Prayer—Honor is from Thee alone, O Thou that sittest in the heavens! Let us seek only what Thou dost praise and shun only what Thou dost blame. Amen.

—Amos R. Wells.

SUNDAY.

CONSIDERING THE HEAVENS.

"When I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which Thou has ordained; what is man, that Thou art mindful of him?"—Read Psalm 8:1-9.

David spent years of nights under the open sky, considering God's heavens. He considered to some purpose, probably to better purpose than any star-gazer the world has known, though he was ignorant of the motion of the earth, and the sizes and distance of the planets and stars.

How David would exult in modern astronomy! And especially in such an aid to understanding it as the Adler Planetarium just opened in Chicago. Sitting awed and quiet in an immense room, the spectator is beneath a vast dome, apparently the mighty sky.

It is good to know astronomy, even such a rapid outline of it as a planetarium will give. As we begin to realize the majestic power of our God, we enter into the fear of Him which is the beginning of wisdom; and the beginning of wisdom leads to the beginning of love.

Prayer—For Thy power, O Creator, is one with Thy kindness and Thy mercy. Not without thought of the least of Thy creatures dost Thou uphold in their revolutions these stupendous spheres. We shall praise Thee forever and ever. Amen.

—Amos R. Wells.

"A PINT OF LIMA BEANS."

Mr. M— has been unemployed for more than a year. He has been in bed with a serious illness for six months. The prospects for early recovery or for employment are not encouraging.

Mr. M— has been a loyal worker in the Sunday school of an Eastern city for many years. He has been especially interested in foreign missions and in missionary education in his Sunday school.

A few days ago the members of the Sunday-school staff, in appreciation of his years of service, presented a testimonial gift of $150 to Mr. M—. A little while after the presentation committee left his home, Mr. M— turned to his wife:

"My dear," he said, "please deposit this money in the morning. Send $20 to the church treasurer, $20 to the League missionary fund, $20 to the Board of Foreign Missions to help avoid a cut in missionary money, and use the rest for taxes."

"But what about something for yourself?" asked his wife.

"Well, if you are down the street and see some nice lima beans, and they are not too high, you might buy a pint. I've been wanting some for several days."—Christian Advocate.

I find it easier and easier to find contentment in the riches of the mind. Take from me all the so-called riches of the world and leave me imagination and I shall still be rich; but give me all the wealth of the world and take from me my imagination and you will plunge me deep into the pit of indescribable misery.—Unknown.

THE PERFECTION OF BEAUTY.

"Is this the city that men call the Perfection of Beauty, the joy of all the earth."—Lam. 2:15.

I. Beautiful—Many of us would like to think that ours is a land of Perfection of Beauty, for it is beautiful. I have not seen a great deal of this country of ours, but I have seen the sunset on the Pennsylvania mountains and its lavish gold on the Delaware; I have felt a summer's rain on Carolina farms and known the perfume of flowers of wild grapes in the Piedmont hills; I have stood above the clouds on the peaks of Mt. Mitchell and watched the storm pour its torrent over cataracts and leaping falls in racing streams far below; I have seen the moon rise over Virginian hills, and smelled the fragrance of pine trees; I have seen ripening grain in the great mid-west, and have rested on the banks of the Ohio; I have stood above towering buildings of New York City, and observed some of the magnificence of the mighty works of Creator and creature as they are there so rarely blended together; I have seen the ocean at Virginia Beach beneath the rising sun in resplendent beauty; I know the call of many birds and I have seen the forest in autumn in many States. Ours is a beautiful country. Where is it not beautiful? "Is this the city that men call the Perfection of Beauty, the joy of all the earth?"

What a country it is. A land of gold, and growing grain; a land of honey, and numberless herds of the best bred cattle; rich it is in every mineral product, and rare in its harbors, and streams, and open with a complete network of wired and wireless communication; glorious in heroism, rich in history, and famous for its progress and inventions. "Is the city that men call the Perfection of Beauty, the joy of all the earth?"

II. Beautiful?—Is it? With ten thousand murders in a single year; and thousands of men, and women, and boys, and girls behind bars in a single State? Think of the heartache of a single murder, and multiply that by ten thousand, and then multiply that again by every year that trips across our national calendar! What State but has its thousands of prisoners behind the bars requiring a heavy burden of expense laid upon its citizens? And into what city, or hamlet, or countryside may not creeping, slinking thugs come and bear away a heavenly burden of a little innocent babe and batter its little life out in the nearby dark! "Is this the city that men call the Perfection of Beauty, the joy of all the earth?"

Is it? When men and women of mature years and in their right minds sneer at the constitutional law of the land, and laugh it into derision before their growing sons and daughters; when thousands think it brave to defy the law, and to speak wantonly of its worthiness; when there is a tremendous sale for the lurid and licentious magazines; and millions see unspeakable pictures thrown on the screen week after week?

Is it? When we still spend more than sixty-five per cent of the billions which we tax from the people on the works of war; and continue to call the profit motive the heart of business; when millions are unemployed, and still lesser millions are pushed out into the heart-rending avenues that hunger provides; and when hate still runs high between races and classes, and privilege is still selfishly sought at unfair prices? "Is this the city that men call the Perfection of Beauty, the joy of all the earth?"

III. Beautiful!—The text I have been repeating comes from the lips of a young man weeping over his own country many long years ago. And he in turn is quoting from the songs of his people sung many centuries before. This fifteenth verse from the second chapter of Lamentations is a quotation from the fiftieth Psalm, which reads: "Out of Zion, the Perfection of Beauty, hath God shined." There is a secret which our land dare not overlook, namely, that real beauty, or the perfection of beauty, is inseparably linked with goodness. "Beauty is as beauty does," is a bedrock philosophy of the race. It is inescapable.

I wish to mention three things that are beautiful. A life that is really, dependably Christian is beautiful. When God finished all the beauty of a beautiful creation he topped his work with man made in his own image. Most beautiful thing, after all, is man, or woman; boy, or girl, good like God! "Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect," is a crowning dream of a Christian conscience! What the story of that beautiful Babe in Bethlehem has done for this old world can never be measured. What the story of that rightly reared, religiously minded, Spirit led boy of twelve in the Jerusalem temple has done for this old world can never be measured. What the story of a Young Man who, rising up from the Jordan banks, followed a passionate love for his fellowmen, and an unswerving devotion to purity and duty, has done for this old world can never be measured. But more still, Jesus Christ's devotion to duty, his love of fellowmen, and his denial of self led him into hardest possible places, but even unto the cross he remained true. Beautiful! And it makes every life that learns that story and loves it, blossom like a rose from the hovels of the slums of India to the selfish hearted masters of the mansions of Madison Avenue!

Our new sophistication, and our new psychology have over-worked our new pedagogical phrase, "self-expression," to the detriment of a very old, but time-honored word, "obedience." "Self-expression" carries us back, far back to the age of the fishes. The mother fish had no control over her offspring! They had self-expression! Self-expression running wild has crowded our juvenile prisons far beyond their normal capacity. I heard Judge Mason Douglas say this past week that the Boys' Reformatory at Mansfield, Ohio, was crowded to more than three hundred per cent of its capacity!

That brings me to the second thing that I wish to mention as beautiful—a Christian home. There is heaven's first, and only real ally on earth. Mark that. The home is God's hope for society and civilization! Many parents feel the urge to have their children to obey them at home, and in some of our new-fangled schools, and Sunday School classes, they are taught "self-expression"—in all too many instances—to the direct opposition to the home. And on the other hand, all too many so-called homes have refused to bear that portion of early teaching which can never be borne by outsiders. God forbid that I should be classed as a reactionary, but unless there is a return to the home to teach obedience, reverence, politeness, love of honor and duty and truth, the beauty of our country is sure to fade. Paradise on earth is a home with a Christian gentleman as a loving father, and Christian woman as a mother, and they twain in perfect love and devotion to each other, teaching their children both by precept and example, the principles of kindness, politeness, honor, and truth; and holding ever before them ideals of challenging service to others. Find that sort of place—make (Continued on page 14.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

If the Christian Orphanage ever needed your prayers, your sympathy, and your help it is now. The children are here. They eat. They wear clothes. They have to have training. They are dependent on the Christian Church for these things. The Sunday School is one source from which we expect much of our support, yet we have quite a number of Sunday Schools that don't seem to realize that the support of more than one hundred children in the Christian Orphanage is any part of theirs. Oh, if every Sunday School in the Southern Convention would join in and give a monthly offering each month, how much it would help us in our work of love here in this institution. We have more than one hundred little children with bright faces, happy hearts, and intelligent minds, looking up into our faces asking us to give them a chance. They are asking you for bread—will you give them a stone instead? God has been kind to you and blessed you more bountifully than they. We sometimes wonder if he does not suffer little children to be left homeless and helpless to touch and tender our hearts and give us an opportunity to reach out and touch the little fellows by helping them and thereby bring us into closer fellowship with him. Eighteen years ago a little baby boy two years old came to this institution to live. He had the misfortune to lose father, mother and home and was left helpless. You gave him a home, care and a chance by your gifts to support this institution. He grew to young manhood—a fine young fellow. He graduated Valedictorian of his class in High School. He wanted to take a course in electrical engineering. We secured for him a scholarship in the State College of North Carolina. The first week in June this fine young boy will graduate, with great ambitions and high ideals. Don't you feel happy that you had a part in giving him this opportunity in life?

When I was a little boy and commenced to go to church, and heard long sermons, long prayers and a few songs, I thought that was all there was to religion; but when I was older and could read the teachings of our Saviour and his ministry to mankind, I learned that these things were not all there was to religion, but service to others was also a big part.

You are not giving your money away when you send a contribution to the Christian Orphanage. You are making an investment in young children left helpless in life. If they grow into fine young men and women to be a blessing to society, what better investment can you make?

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

that sort of a place—and live! That is beautiful!

And the third beautiful thing I want to mention is a nation made up of such homes as the first units of organizations. Young Jeremiah's nation was getting further and further away from that as he cries: "Is this the city that men call the Perfection of Beauty, the joy of all the earth?" As I have already said, he was quoting from a verse that runs: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, hath God shined." Zion represents the church. If we are to have Christian individuals, let us hark back to God's altar of prayer, to God's house of praise; if we are to have Christian homes, let them draw their inspiration from the church, and retain their closest contact with God's house; if we are to have a beautiful nation, "the joy of the earth," let our people return to their places of worship, and their houses of praise! "Out of Zion . . . hath God shined!" Zion is the "perfection of beauty," and outside of Zion all the beauty there is is but passing—not permanent, not satisfying, not eternally beautiful; for "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, hath God shined."

Dead is the religion which does not aim at these two things: personal purity and active charity.—Thomas Guthrie.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4¼ inches x¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4¼ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

W. A. HARPER, Editor.

(Any book reviewed in this Department may be had of THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the publisher's price.)

PARAGUAY, by A. E. Elliott. Teachers College. 210 pp. $2.50

Paraguay is studied culturally, socially, educationally and religiously. Statesmen, educators, social workers, and missionaries will find the book of especial value. The development of Christian character is shown to be the ultimate of missions and of education. Specific suggestions for achieving it are given. This dissertation is far more serviceable to the average reader than the ordinary thesis submitted for a doctor's degree.

WINNING WAYS FOR WORKING CHURCHES, by Roy L. Smith. Abingdon Press. 240 pp. $2.00.

The breeziness of the title is incarnated in the treatment of the seventeen chapters of the book. The author is the go-getter type, typically American. He knows what he wants, where it is, and has many practical ways of getting it. There are enough plans in this volume to last a century. It is therefore a good investment for the resource looker.

PILOTING MODERN YOUTH, by William S. Sadler, M. D. Funk & Wagnals Co. 370 pp. $3.50.

Parental authority must be maintained, but psychology points the way. Here is a practical procedure for helping willful girls and wild boys meet the hazards of this new day. Case studies illuminate the discussion of such problems as shall Johnny have the family car to take his girl to ride? Shall Mary have a chaperone when Johnny takes her automobiling? Parents are plainly told wherein they will defeat their own high purposes unless they know how to employ psychological procedures in dealing with their children, particularly those of adolescent age. A scholarly physician, and his wife, also a physician, have tested the theories of this book on their own son, just emerging from the adolescent experience. It is an invaluable book for parents of adolescent children and for workers with them.

FACTORS RELATED TO SUNDAY SCHOOL GROWTH AND DECLINE IN THE EASTERN SYNOD OF THE REFORMED CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES, by Nevin C. Harner. Bureau of Publications. Teachers College, Columbia University. 101 pp. $1.50.

Thirty such factors are scientifically differentiated by this painstaking doctor's dissertation. Among them are these: small schools grow faster than large ones, gain in enrollment of 12 was greater than under 12 (contrary to the current idea), teacher training promotes growth, rural schools outdistance urban schools in growth, long pastorates conduce to growth as to division of schools into departments, orchestras greatly contribute and so do closely graded lessons, generous giving had no appreciable effect, competitive activities may accompany growth, liberal attitude toward the Sabbath does not retard growth, etc. It is a revealing book and worthy of reading.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AND THE CHURCH BUDGET, by Arthur Flake. Fleming H. Revell Co. 194 pp. $1.25.

The six-point plan of the Southern Baptist Convention is set forth in this book, whereby the Sunday School organization is made the basic agency in cooperation with the church finance committee in subscribing and collecting a unified budget. The claim is made "that those denominations which are putting into one budget all the causes and going to the churches with a united appeal are succeeding in getting their members to give better than the denominations which are making separate appeals for separate causes," and yet later it is urged "that it is not only permissible, but highly desirable and advisable for a church working under the Unified Budget Plan to put on an occasional extra-budget offering" for special evangelistic meetings, special Thanksgiving offering, special Christmas offering, special missionary offerings (two a year). Emergency offerings are also "highly desirable and advisable." It is a new use for the Sunday School. Those who object to it, says the author, are unacquainted with the plan. To use it will convince anyone. So buy the book, order the forms to set the plan going if you are convinced after reading the book, and perhaps you will solve your local church and denominational deficit.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

OBITUARIES.

EDWARDS.

Mrs. Martha Powell Edwards was born June 22, 1855, and died April 17, 1932, age 76 years, 9 months and 17 days.

She leaves a husband, Mr. Cicero Edwards, one son and 9 grandchildren.

She was a charter member of Fuller's Chapel Christian Church, but for some years has been confined to her room and could not attend.

Services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. C. E. Newman, a former pastor. She lived a beautiful consecrated Christian life, and was loved by all who knew her.

Interment was in Fuller's Chapel Cemetery. May the Lord bless the bereaved.

H. E. CRUTCHFIELD.

HERNDON.

Mr. William Marchial Herndon was born June 13, 1852, and died at his home in Caswell County, N. C., April 23, 1932, lacking 20 days of being 80 years old.

He was married June 29, 1892, to Miss

Bettie Powell. To this marriage four children were born, all of whom, with his wife survive him. They are: Mrs. A. Y. Allred, High Point, N. C.; Mrs. G. E. Simpson, Miss Lillie Herndon and Mr. T. G. Herndon, all of Altamahaw, N. C.

Mr. Herndon was a very active and industrious farmer, a good neighbor and honest man. He will be missed in his community.

Some years before his death he had expressed a hope in Christ as his Saviour, which gives comfort to those left behind.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Elder Carrie King, Primitive Baptist minister, at Concord Church, on the fourth Sunday afternoon in April. A large and sympathetic congregation was in attendance.

PEACE.

Give that deeper nature of yours a chance. St. Augustine spake for us all when he wrote: "O God, Thou hast made us for Thyself and our hearts are restless until they rest in Thee." Deep down in our nature we desire to be at peace with the Eternal. And the condition is that we seek God sincerely and with all our heart believe the Gospel—not believe about it but believe it. Then will Christ's word be fulfilled in experience. "If the Son . . . make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—"Frederic S. Syrr."

.. THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ..

Central England Swept by Floods.—

Hundreds of square miles of country in Central England were under water recently, following a series of cloudbursts and consequent overflow of rivers. Scores of towns and villages in nine counties were swept by floods, said to be the worst in 50 years. Farmers throughout the wide area were in a desperate plight.

Medical College Offered Gift.—

A gift of $10,000 toward the maintenance of the new library building of the Medical College of Virginia, was announced during the closing exercises last Tuesday. This gift came from the Carnegie Corporation, and was received at a most appropriate time, since the school will need assistance in maintaining the new building. Besides this gift, there were others amounting to around $40,000. In spite of the depression the school has quite a large graduating class.

Summer School of Leadership Training.—

The Elon Summer School of Leadership Training will be held at Elon College, June 20th to 26th. A wide-awake program has been prepared by Rev. F. C. Lester, who is Dean of the school, and a faculty consisting of the strongest leaders in this work among the Congregational and Christian Churches, will present the different phases of the work. Every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society in the Carolinas and Virginia should have at least one representative present. Both individuals and organizations will be well repaid for the expense involved.

White Assassins.—

The assassination of two of the administrative officers of the five leading nations of the world within a period of ten days is something unique in history. Perhaps still more striking is the fact that both the president of France and prime minister of Japan were slain not by anarchists or radicals or communists, but by representatives of the opposite groups. Facists and militarists of the white, rather than the red persuasion, are responsible for these tragedies. This is an entire reversal of previous history, and is only another indication of how topsy-turvy is the whole structure of civilization at the present time.

O. D. Poythress, Evangelist.—

For the past several weeks, Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor of the Christian Church at South Norfolk, Va., has been holding a most successful evangelistic meeting in Durham, N. C. Rev. Poythress was in Durham earlier in the year, assisting Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of the Durham Christian Church, and so well liked was he, that a return engagement was given him of an interdenominational character. This meeting was under the auspices of Durham men who have at heart the evangelization of their city, and their zeal has been well repaid by the results that have been accomplished. Other cities might well copy their example. This is a time when evangelistic work is needed and is well worth while.

Presbyterians Continue Study of Church Unity.

The meeting of the seventy-fourth general assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of North America closed on May 31st. The committee on union which had been appointed to consider merger with the Presbyterian Church of the United States, was continued for another year. Thus the business of the Church Union goes merrily on. Both inter-denominational and intra-denominational mergers seem to be the style of the day. There is one essential necessary to ultimate church union. That is the elimination of non-essentials. When Christ is fully accepted as the head of the Church, then will all be one.

Army Construction Bill Approved.—

An item from the Associated Press of May 31st, says: "The James bill for a $22,500,000 army construction program was approved by the House military committee and will be offered as an amendment to the Garner relief bill." We are wondering just what phase of army construction work this bill will provide for. We believe that the Government should keep its police force up to a standard of efficiency, and yet we wonder whether this amount might not be considerably reduced without letting down to any marked degree that efficiency. There are many other things calling for Government expenditures. Those things that are of a permanent character should be given precedence over others. Capital expenditures of the right kind today, will give employment to the unemployed and thus tend to improve conditions, but the Government should be unusually wary in the expenditure of money for transient expenses.

How the Beer Parade Turned Out in St. Louis.—

The Christian-Evangelist, which is published in St. Louis, Mo., says: "It turned out there was no parade in St. Louis. All the papers discouraged it; the mayor was cold toward it; the Christian Ministers' Conference laughed it out of countenance with a very witty set of resolutions; the leading liquor men said it would not be dignified; the board of aldermen had voted $10,000 to support it, but backed down when several big contributors to the Community Chest said they would cancel their subscriptions if the City Council could devote that much to a beer parade; some said any kind of a big demonstration could easily breed disorder, considering the state of the popular mind, and so the parade did not get a chance to 'turn out.' And that is beer-loving St. Louis! Well, prohibition has made great gains here in latter years. The number of drys has greatly increased and is increasing daily in my opinion. The days of beer and beer parades are numbered."

The Automobile and the Death Toll.—

It seems that an ever increasing number are being sacrificed to the automobile demon of speed and recklessness. Richmond, Virginia, has suffered a loss of life of twenty-seven from motor accidents in the first five months of 1932. This is more than a ten per cent increase over last year. During the week-end, sixteen were injured to a greater or less degree. The Memorial Day holiday was accountable for this large number, but even it is no excuse for the crippling and maiming and killing that is going on today because of the disregard of the rights of others by the drivers and pedestrians as well. More rigid enforcement of driving laws will assist greatly in reducing accidents all over the country, but the one thing that will do more than all others is the recognition of the rights of others. One's rights stop when one infringes upon the rights of another, and that other one has a right to demand safety from the "road hogs" and "dare-devils" that exist today.

Our Eyes.—

"It is estimated that in American industry more than 2,000 workmen lose one or both eyes, 300,000 minor eye injuries are received, and approximately $50,000,000 is wasted in time lost, compensation and medical bills, each year. The report made public by the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness, states that probably industrial accidents are responsible for more blindness than any other cause, but it also indicts severely those who allow children to go without the proper attention to their eyes. The report says: "The sooner defective vision can be discovered and eye diseases recognized, the greater the chance of overcoming the handicap of poor vision and of effecting a cure." We further learn from the report of the society that it is continuing its activities in "cooperation with the National Safety Council and the American Society of Safety Engineers, and preparations have been made for a more extended safety campaign in 1932. During 1931, the Society gave 103 demonstrations of vision testing in 42 cities in nine States, before 6,789 school and public health nurses, teachers, doctors and social workers, many of whom are now carrying on this work in their respective communities. In one State alone more than 8,000 pre-school children had their vision tested in accordance with the methods advocated by the Society, and the results proved conclusively the importance of early eye examinations."

NOTES-PERSONALS

The final victory of good is the one great certainty of the believing heart; and our natural feelings lead us to expect that this victory will be gradual and progressive.—Dora Greenwell.

Rev. E. M. Carter, Youngsville, N. C., always alive to every interest of his church, was an attendant at the recent Elon College Commencement and enjoyed its exercises. His many friends were glad to greet him on his visit to Alma Mater.

All who attended Greater Elon Day at Elon College Commencement, May 24th, want the Richmond, Va., Orchestra to come again and do it all over in their whole-hearted, skillful manner. Their music was surely a great contribution to the day's festivities.

Among the list of graduates from Elon the past week were two Christian ministers—Rev. Roy D. Coulter, who is pastor of our Lynchburg Church, and Licentiate Raymond Thomas Grissom, Henderson, N. C., who with his wife, goes to take charge of our work in Carroll County, Va. No year passes without the College sending into some pastorate one or more ministers with four years of training and instruction in Elon College.

Our office the past week was gladdened by the presence and visits of many familiar and beloved friends, both of THE SUN family, the Elon College family, and the Christian-Congregational family. We cannot give the names of all, but it was good to greet these dear friends again and to hear expressions of grace and gratitude for Elon College, for its great life and the wonderful contribution it is making to the church and the kingdom.

Sunday, June 5th, is the Memorial Day at Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax County, Va. THE SUN's editor, who was some years pastor of this church, is to be with the present pastor, Dr. W. C. Wicker, for the memorial services, at which every year large numbers gather. Pleasant Grove is one of our grand, good, old country churches, which, like others of its kind, is making a real contribution to the religious life and Christian activities of the world.

From the Suffolk, Va., News-Herald, May 10: "Dr. William A. Harper, former president of Elon College and now a professor in the School of Religion at Vanderbilt University, has been named one of the 100 'Leaders in Religious Education,' chosen by the International Council of Religious Education, it was announced recently. Dr. Harper is one of three chosen from the South. Sixty Protestants, thirty Catholics and ten Jews were named among the 100 national leaders."

A teacher may be regarded (if he be honestly a teacher and not a burlesque) as an agent of God; for it is his function in life to deal with the most delicate and most perfect material, as far as we know, that God ever created. To work directly for and with people for their mental and spiritual advantage is probably the most fascinating task in all the world; and even if its material rewards were small, its privileges would remain inestimable.—Dr. Archibald Rutledge.

One of the regular attendants and well-known figures at Elon Commencement was Bro. J. A. Kimball, Manson, N. C. He no doubt comes on general principles, since where there are gatherings of his church, he is sure to be there, but his peculiar interest is the fact that at each Commencement he has a son or daughter either finishing school or headed in that direction, and next to his own home with its family circle, he has peculiar joy and delight in the whole Elon College family. It is always a joy to shake his hand at Elon Commencement, because he brings to the occasion the faith and the loyalty of a great and good life.

Lee Scott, Waynesboro, Va., and possibly others, whose names do not come to us now, were among the busy pastors who came back to Alma Mater and enjoyed the Elon Commencement the past week.

The free barbecue dinner on "Greater Elon Day," May 24th, went off to a glad success. We have heard nothing but words of praise and commendation on every side. President Smith feels that we should repeat it on the opening day of the College in September, substituting a fish fry for "roast pig," he and his friends to catch the fish at Ocean View and other fertile fishing places—Dr. Staley, and Dr. I. W. Johnson, and other noted fishermen to join in supplying "the necessities" in which their skill and practice would greatly aid. At any rate, the long tables on the campus, the happy gathering of Alumni and friends, twelve hundred of them, eating together, renewing acquaintances, making new acquaintances, expressing their joy and delight, made an occasion that is worthwhile. There was plenty and to spare, from the barbecue dinner of twenty-one pigs, and the boys and girls and the visitors at the dormitory continued to feast at the evening meal from abundance of fragments brought over in which they took further delight. It was, indeed, a fine conception successfully carried out. The Greater Elon Day was a really great and good day for Dear Old Elon.

Agitation for a referendum on the Eighteenth Amendment has led a number of prominent dries to give their consent to a constitutionally conducted resubmission of this law to the vote of the people. The sole motive of the dries is to secure better enforcement of prohibition. If a referendum is held according to constitutional methods, the dries do not believe they have anything to fear. A popular vote might clarify the present situation and go far toward refuting wet propaganda. A referendum would also call for a realignment among the wets, many of whom profess to want something better than the present prohibition law. The dries also want to find the best method. If there is anything better than the Eighteenth Amendment, let us have a look at it. But the dries are not to be deceived by any brewers' schemes or outmoded plans of control by the States. In its hundred years of struggle against the drink evil the temperance crusade has gone forward from good to better. But already the wets are beginning to suspect a trap in the referendum acceptance and are retreating from their former position. Of one thing the wets are sure: if the referendum is acceptable to the dries, it is not what the wets want.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

IS CHRIST A SAVIOUR OR THE SAVIOUR?

There are voices abroad that provoke this question. It is being said that the different countries of the world with their varying civilizations should be respected and that to attempt to obtrude upon them alien ideas is an impertinence. Particularly is this stressed as to the matter of religion. We are being told that the religion of each country is sacred to those people and likely to be the best suited to them. At any rate they are entitled to it without being disturbed. Propaganda, it is suggested, tends to strife and savors of the pride of a superiority complex which is not becoming. The assumption underlying this attitude, is not only that one civilization is as good as another, but also that the matter of religion is not vital, that one religion may be best adapted to some people and another to others. In other words the religion and message of Christ is just one of the religions of the world—if it suits some people, the Western mind, for instance, why all right, but Buddhism and Mohammedanism may be just as acceptable for others.

What is the answer to this? Well, two things may be said. First, some facts as to conditions. The great countries of the Orient, India, China, Japan, today are in a state of great unrest. For centuries these peoples plodded along in a circle of activities getting them nowhere practically in the path of progress and betterment. Today they are stirred and seething with new strivings and ambitions. Until contact came with the nations of the West they seemed content with their monotonous, wearisome doings and experiences. Centuries of existence scarcely saw any change in their conditions. Today they are thrilled with new ideas and aspirations.

Has the East affected the West in any such manner? What have we as a people adopted from China or Japan that has affected our civilization?

Even Turkey and Persia are patterning after the West. Some would say that this is explained by the superiority of the white race. But as Christians we see the explanation in the Gospel of him whom we call Lord, in the heroic service of men and women who believing in Jesus as the Christ of God have gone to "all nations" witnessing to the fullness and adequacy of his saving power. So, secondly, according to the Bible, Christ is not merely one of the Saviours, but the Saviour, the Supreme Messenger of the Eternal God, that there is no other Name given among men whereby they must be saved. Are we to abandon this understanding and this faith and loyalty?

Was it only to a particular portion of the world that his message was to be carried? Have our missionaries been a mistake, an affront to the people to whom they have gone? How far is this attitude of tolerance and "broadmindedness" to go? If the Christ of the Bible is not the Lord of all, then he is no Lord at all? It is well to be alert and observing as to where this tendency is drifting. Some of the leaders in church life in their teachings seem scarcely aware of the logic of some of their ideas.

We are being challenged today to a loyalty to Christ as the Son of God, the Saviour of the World.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

DR. LUMAN H. ROYCE is welcome as a visitor to the Southeast. He spent Sunday, May 14th, with a Congregational Community Church at Birmingham, Ala.

MRS. A. CALVIN NELSON, wife of the pastor of the Clanton, Ala., East View Congregational Church, has just undergone a major surgical operation and is recuperating nicely.

REV. CHARLES W. SMITH, in the campaign to build churches in Southeast Alabama, has met the church leaders of several Congregational Churches and has organized the building campaigns.

THE CHURCH AT KEY WEST has been improving and redecorating the church auditorium. They have spent several hundred dollars in the process and the improvement is marked. New lighting fixtures are among the improvements. Rev. and Mrs. E. Richard Evans are most efficient leaders in the church work.

THE PREACHER of the Baccalaureate Sermon in the great auditorium at Vanderbilt University on Sunday, June 5th, is Dr. McIllyar H. Lichliter, of the First Congregational Church of Columbus, Ohio. Dr. Lichliter is one of the Directors of the Atlanta Theological Seminary Foundation in the School of Religion at Vanderbilt.

CONGREGATIONAL CONFERENCE dues for 1932, which are not paid, are due. In some States more are overdue than are paid. Conferences expecting to send representatives to the General Council at Cleveland, Ohio, next year, will have to have their General Council dues in by early June, 1933; it is, therefore, important to have their 1932 Conference dues paid by June, 1932, if possible.

IN THE SUMMER OF 1930, Rev. A. William Loos did summer work at Evarts and Corbin, Ky. Returning to the same responsibility this year, Mr. Loos decides that he will spend his efforts in building up the religious lives of the people. While the gospel is social as well as individual in its application, it seems to be more appropriate when people are beset with difficulties and agitations on every side, to have them fortified by personal faith, and Mr. Loos is looking forward to a summer of fruitful service.

THE SCHOOL OF RELIGION at Vanderbilt University graduates twenty-four this year. Six who are to receive the degree of Bachelor of Divinity are from one United Fellowship. They are: Sidney H. Davies, Atlanta Theological Seminary and Oglethorpe University, Durham, England; David Winfield Shepherd, B. A., Elon College, Elon College, N. C.; Arnold Slater, B. D., Atlanta Theological Seminary, Durham, England; Dwight Spence, B. A., Elon College, Lillington, N. C.; Arthur G. Swartz, Atlanta Theological Seminary, Plymouth, Pa.; Don L. West, B. A., Lincoln Memorial University, Hindman, Ky.

EIGHT HUNDRED PEOPLE is something of a crowd, but that many members and friends of Duncan's Creek, Ga., Church crowded the auditorium, hung onto the windows and stood around the church doors on Sunday, May 22nd. It was the occasion of their annual Memorial Service. Miss Annie Campbell, Extension Worker for Georgia, was present and reports a wonderful day. Had it not rained that day, making the dirt roads hard to negotiate, there was expected fully 1,500 people. Not so bad! And what a fine thing it would be if such services could be held more often. Why not shorten the year to six months, and give us two such services in twelve months of time?

ROLLINS COLLEGE graduates seventy-five students at the Commencement June 4th. This is a large class and it is interesting that forty-four of them come from outside of Florida. Rollins is coming to be one of the most cosmopolitan colleges in the South. The Commencement exercises will be held in the beautiful new Knowles Memorial Chapel. Dean Charles A. Campbell will preach the Baccalaureate Sermon. President Hamilton Holt is to head a delegation of American college students which will visit the Soviet Union this summer under the auspices of the National Student Federation of America at the special invitation of the students of Moscow University. They will spend three weeks in Russia, sailing on June 25th, and returning in August.

THE TABLE OF APPORTIONMENT receipts by States for the period from January 10th to April 30th, as issued by Dr. Charles C. Merrill, indicates that the churches of the Southeast made a 44 per cent increase in their contributions over the corresponding period of 1931. Florida's record was one of the best in the country, having increased contributions 122 per cent. This is a result of an effort toward earlier remittance of apportionment contributions. The record for the country, including not only contributions to the American Board and the Home Board, but also to the several independent States, indicated a loss of 10.3 per cent over the corresponding period of last year. May we not make special efforts that our satisfactory record be continued in the months that are ahead?

THE PASTOR-AT-LARGE has been visiting the churches of Georgia, beginning May 6th. When he returned home May 31st, he had visited seventeen churches, preached twelve sermons, given four other addresses, held nineteen conferences with churches, besides innumerable individual interviews with pastors and church officers; and attended one ordination service. On the whole he thinks the churches are hopeful and facing their problems with a splendid faith. Many are looking forward with expectancy to the coming of the S. S. S. workers in July and August. Interest in the general work of the denomination was manifest everywhere. The "Dollar Plan" is claiming interested attention. Some are already up-to-date in paying their apportionment for 1932. Others promise to be by July 1st. Pastors are happy in their work and all are working hard. The fine fellowship shown everywhere was abundantly worth-while.

REV. ZENAS BEAN, Route 1, Wedowee, Ala., son of Rev. Joseph P. Bean, pastor of the Alabama Congregational and Christian Churches, is out to win the first place in the Better World Campaign for subscriptions for The Christian Endeavor World. He has worked up to seventh place in the field of 51 in the Alabama contest. If he wins a prize, he expects to be able to go forward with his ministerial studies next year. The Christian Endeavor World is the official world paper, and well-nigh indispensable to Christian Endeavor Societies and to Christian Endeavorers. A year's subscription is $2.00 when sent to an individual, or $1.25 when sent to a Christian Endeavor Society. The contest closes soon. Subscriptions from any address can be counted. Friends of this fine young man are requesting Christian Endeavorers, who should take The Christian Endeavor World, to help him win this contest in Alabama.

PIEDMONT YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE is something new this year for our churches. It is open from August 11th to August 18th, and young people from Christian as well as Congregational Churches are urged to be represented by as many as can come. Remember, it is to be held at Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga.,—a beautiful site—in every way an ideal place for such a Conference. College dormitories and dining room, as well as the campus and surrounding mountains, will be used. Careful supervision with enjoyable freedom consistent with the best there is in life will make everybody happy. And the cost is so low! Only a dollar a day for three good meals and a comfortable bed for the night. Study, fun, and fellowship with games of all sorts, including horse shoes, tennis, baseball, hiking, etc., will help everybody to know he has been somewhere. Send applications with registration fee of only $1.50 to Miss Annie Campbell, 607 Hicks St., Waycross, Ga. Do it now!

TRAINING CLASS AT PLEASANT HILL, TENNESSEE.

On the day of the graduation exercises at Pleasant Hill Academy, the training school for the Vacation Church School and community workers of the summer opened. There were about forty-two enrolled—from the Academy, from outlying districts on the plateau and from two churches near Chattanooga. Thus this school touched a wide area. The young people came together for four full days of hard work. Every minute was full and one of them said: "If my head was as full as my note-book, I surely would know a lot." The days opened with devotional services conducted by Rev. C. L. Venable, of Dayton, Ohio. A period of concentrated study of Primary or Junior Methods followed. Miss Clare White taught Primary Methods, and Miss Edith Harbough, of Knoxville, the Junior Methods. The third hour was an inspiring presentation of Personal Religion by Mr. Venable. A Story Telling Hour, taught by Miss Harbough, closed the morning schedule. After lunch, which was served at the Pleasant Hill Academy Dormitory, the group met in the community house for hand work. An hour of practice in Informal Dramatics, led by Miss Marguerite Davison, followed. The Vesper Service was held on the lawn in front of the Girls' Dormitory immediately after supper. Rev. E. E. White conducted these helpful out-door services. The evening programs were open to the public and consisted of a music hour, led by Miss White, and a recreation hour, led by Miss Davison. The young people who attended this training school gained a great deal from it and felt that they could go back to their home communities to do more efficient work during the summer months. An extensive summer program is being planned by Mr. White and his helpers.

Resolved, to live with all my might while I live. Resolved, never to lose one moment of time, to improve it in the most profitable way I possibly can. Resolved, never to do anything which I should despise or think meanly of in another. Resolved, never to do anything cut of revenge. Resolved, never to do anything which I should be afraid to do if it were the last hour of my life.—Jonathan Edwards.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ELON COMMENCEMENT.

The Elon College Commencement was great; great in attendance; great in good fellowship; great in public addresses; the greatest in all of its forty-two years in the number of graduates receiving diplomas—fifty-eight A. B. degrees, besides certificates and diplomas in special departments.

The real beginning was Sunday, May 22nd, when the large class, with those who were to participate in the service, capped and gowned, in academic procession, filed into Whitley Memorial Auditorium for the annual sermon. Dr. William Moseley Brown, Atlantic University, Virginia Beach, was the preacher for the occasion. His subject was "The Measure of a Man." His text was II. Timothy 2:3: "Endure hardness, my son, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." The thought uppermost in the preacher's mind, as he revealed it to the congregation, was that a man is measured by his ability to endure. Soldiers may have brilliant fighting qualities, and may flare forth in captivating glamour and array, but that which enables them to win out in the end is their ability to endure hardness. Christ subjected himself to that test, as did Paul. Paul looms very large in the measure of human character, because he stood the test, learned how to endure, had the strength to fight under handicaps and difficulties, and thus to win out in the race, because his was an endurance contest. The times in which we live are trying men's souls, and those will win out who learn to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, who are willing to go, if need be, to the cross with him and share the cruelty of his crucifixion, and thus have the promise of sharing the joy of his resurrection. The measure of every man and woman is the ability to endure hardness as good soldiers. It was a noble utterance, conceived by a great mind and delivered with forceful eloquence.

At 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon, Miss Margaret Shaw, of the Music Department, in a vesper service, gave selections on the great pipe organ of the College, which was enjoyed by those who were fortunate enough to attend.

At 8:00 P. M., the Class, with their friends and a large audience, again gathered in the Whitley Memorial to hear the final message of the College, through its President, Dr. L. E. Smith. It was a sermon that the Class will not forget. It was a heart-to-heart appeal to the members of the Class to "know themselves," to learn their own limitations, to take stock of their equipment and then employ that equipment to meet the conditions and issues of life. Dr. Smith spoke not only with his accustomed eloquence, but with emotional appeal. He plead with the first Class going out under his administration to lead lives worthy of the institution, whose sacrifice had made this hour possible in their lives, and whose aim it was to reflect the spirit of Jesus Christ in unselfish service to mankind. Our institution certainly in its aims, aspirations and deals, is Christian, and the only hope of realizing those ideals is through those who come here to learn and go out to teach, to preach, to labor and to live. The institution lives in vain, save as its aspirations and ideals are realized in the lives of those who claim the institution as their Alma Mater. It was a message worthy of the man, of the institution and of the Class.

Monday was Class Day. At 10:30 A. M. the graduates had their exercise of prophecy, history and farewells. At 2:30 P. M., the Junior Class put out its representatives and held their good exercise. At 3:30 P. M., there were class reunions, and good fellowship prevailed. At 5:00 P. M. a Community Tea was served in the reception room of the Y. W. C. A., and the day culminated with a general vocal recital at 8:00 P. M., which was enjoyed by a large audience.

The great day of "the feast" this year was "Greater Elon Day," Tuesday, May 24th. The exercises began in the Chapel, where a large audience assembled to hear Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, of Suffolk, Va., and Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, of Chattanooga, Tenn., as they brought home to their audience the needs, the problems, the trials as well as the triumphs, victories and achievements of Elon College. The Richmond Orchestra, thirty strong, with their various musical instruments, were enabled, through the generosity of friends, to come to the College from Richmond the night before and spend Tuesday at the College, and certainly added much to that occasion. It was at this exercise that the President of the College told of the launching of the "Dollar-a-Month Club," and of the moratorium of two years granted by the principal creditors of the institution if the smaller creditors would join them. An appeal was made for membership in the "Dollar-a-Month Club," and during the day about one hundred and seventy-five names were secured as members of the Club, each one agreeing to pay to the Treasurer of the College a dollar a month until notice was given to the contrary, and the College is relieved of its financial strain.

Following the exercise in the Chapel, a great barbecue dinner was spread on the grounds and twelve hundred people were fed in picnic fashion. The weather was perfect, the dinner was all that appetite could wish, and the long, well-loaded tables afforded all that the assembled guests could desire in the way of food. Twenty-one pigs had been roasted the night before. These pigs, with pickles, and cabbage for slaw, bread and other necessities for the dinner, were, for the most part, supplied through the generosity of churches and good friends. Dr. W. M. Jay, pastor of Holland Church, said that his people were a little too far removed to send a pig, or other "preliminaries" for the dinner, and in lieu thereof had sent $100.00 in cash as a donation to the College on "Greater Elon Day." At 2:30 P. M. the Richmond Orchestra gave a real concert to the delight of the great audience and made all of us present wish that this same orchestra might gladden all our succeeding Commencements and do it as well as they did on this occasion. The general Alumni meeting was held at 3:00 P. M., lasting for almost two hours; the Alumni entering most heartily into a discussion of ways and means of showing their loyalty and devotion to the College and of making plans to help relieve the institution of its present embarrassing financial stringency.

At 5:00 P. M., the "May Day Festival" was beautiful, many of those present declaring it the most delightful ever witnessed here. It was certainly a festive occasion, and the great array of young women in their beautiful costumes taking part made it seem as if all were May Queens, in addition to the one who had been chosen for that honor.

The Alumni Dinner was at 6:00 P. M., and was largely attended. At 9:00 P. M., Rev. H. Lee Scott, of the Class of '23, Waynesboro, Va., delivered the Alumni Address. Certainly no more appropriate, eloquent and thrilling address has been delivered by any alumnus than this by Mr. Scott. His subject was "The Discontented Optimist," and with keen discernment of the many forces that work today in human society, Mr. Scott laid bare the impotency and inadequacy of these forces as now directed, and if our civilization is to survive and achieve, we will have to have more than a mere optimism. We will have to re-discover that stalwart faith and motive on which our civilization was established and our own country had its origin. His was not a plea that we go back to God, but that we go forward under the leadership of the Nazarene, who is marching on, and is ever revealing himself to us through new duties, new situations and larger visions.

Wednesday, the 25th, was the day of climax in the Commencement activities, and a great day it was, indeed. Fifty-eight graduates received their diplomas from the hand of President Smith, who realized with the rest of us that if the high standard set by this number is to be maintained, strenuous efforts will have to be put forth to increase the attendance of the College.

On opening the graduating exercises, Dr. W. W. Staley, a former president, led in prayer. President Smith introduced as the speaker of the day, Dr. William Louis Poteat, President Emeritus of Wake Forest College, who, in his address, plead for a truer, higher, broader conception of scholarship in our institutions of learning. In the words of Mathew Arnold, he defined culture as "the fruit of acquainting ourselves with the best that has been known and said in the world. Our guides to culture are men and books, which is to say men; for Milton taught us that a good book is the precious life-blood of a master-spirit embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life."

The speaker continued, addressing himself to the graduating class: "You have here the high privilege of fellowship with men of culture. They have walked with you through the literatures of the world and the laboratories of science. They have themselves followed the history of the human spirit and marked its triumphs. And you—you were shy and awkward, gaining by degrees confidence and ease of manner. The subtle sculptor, Intelligence, has rechiseled your countenance, your vagrant interests have settled into a consistent purpose; your ideals have organized themselves in character; your attitude has softened into catholicity; in short, boys and girls have grown into men and women, alert and thoughtful, self-controlled, and at home in the world of men and of things."

Dr. Poteat concluded his very illuminating address with the plea for humanizing knowledge. "Culture is not ornament but equipment. A barren intellectualism wants justification. As Brown- ing said:

"Know, not for knowing's sake,
But to become a star to men forever."

After the address, Dr. N. G. Newman, pastor of Holy Neck Church, and former pastor of Elon College, in most fitting and appropriate words, presented the Bibles to the members of the graduating class, and Dr. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the Burlington Church, pronounced the benediction.

Thus passed into history the 42nd Commencement of Elon College. Surely, the spirit of optimism, faith in the College, its power to endure, its vital necessity to the church, were never more in evidence than at present, and the great and happy host that gathered for this Commencement were an evidence, and an earnest, that the future holds for Elon achievement that we of the past little dreamed of, and contributions to the world that only a great Christian institution can give. Elon College is making, and has made, a contribution not to the Christian Church only, but to the Kingdom of God, that more than justifies every dollar and effort put into the making of the institution.

Through the day, Wednesday, except during the graduating exercises, the Trustees were in session, and late into the night, endeavoring to plan for the future and grappling, as best they could, with the problems and prospects of the College at present. J. O. A.

UNCLE WELLON'S MONUMENT COMPLETED.

The Trustees were not too busy to adjourn for half an hour in the afternoon of May 25th, and invite friends who were present at the Elon Commencement to journey with them to the grave of the late, lamented "Uncle Wellons," that we might stand together there in recognition of the service that this man of God had rendered the College and his day in the past. Dr. Staley, at the head of the grave, led the company in prayer. The occasion that brought the assembly together was the completion of the beautiful marble memorial erected by the friends of Uncle Wellons. The cost of the memorial was $450.00, and all pronounced it quite fitting and very appropriate. It was announced that there was yet due on the work $33.00, and if any friend, anywhere, would send Mrs. L. E. Carlton, Paces, Va., any of this amount, it would be appreciated. Now that the beautiful marble is placed and completed, it is the desire of the committee to finish paying for it at the earliest date possible, and any friend who feels disposed and wishes to have a part in this good work, will please send their contribution at once. I TEACH A HICK IN COLLEGE.

By MARGARET ESTHER WHITNEY.

Full of whimsical charm is this really unusual article by Wendell Brooks Phillips in the March number of the Atlantic Monthly, about the little college among the mountains of northeastern Georgia which he serves devotedly as Professor of English—the story of its founding by a Southern Methodist minister "in the hopeful nineties, when all things were possible," of its continual struggles, of its undeniable failures and limitations and of its equally undeniable and unique success. No one can appreciate such a college quite like one of its own professors, one who has seen student generations come and go, who can say with Professor Phillips, "Like Falstaff, I have drunk medicines; the place has cast its spell over me." And then in seemingly casual, even colloquial, but charmingly written sentences, he proceeds to weave the same spell over the reader, until, before a third through the article, in spite of never having been there, one feels almost a nostalgia for this "presposterous but enchanting place."

"Most colleges think they are poor," conversationally writes Professor Phillips, "but have you ever heard of a college without a single college building? . . . I buy milk from a neighboring farmer, but I wouldn't think of paying him money for it. Each month I write him an order for thirty quarts worth of tuition, with which the farmer's son pays his bills at the college treasury. So we have to scheme, and patch our clothes, and when tempted to have an appendicitis operation simply subdue the impulse."

With Professor Phillips and three college boys, the captivated reader climbs into a rickety Ford on a holiday, and with joyous abandon, "drives too fast along the narrow winding roads—sings and shouts aloud and becomes intoxicated without resort to alcohol," . . . stops at an old-fashioned mill to invest a quarter in golden corn meal in anticipation of corn pone for supper "baked Georgia style before the fire place," and finally reaches the Professor's mountain cabin—later before the flickering fire listens to him wax eloquent on the subject of Walt Whitman, and feels like chiming in with the boys when they say, "Seems as if you teach better up here in the cabin, Professor, than you do down yonder in the classroom."

Many teachers in just such small colleges will nod understandingly over Professor Phillips' frank recognition of the restricted view of life given the students, the confused sense of values, the rather narrow and negative standard of morals, over his picture of the ideal student in the eyes of the administration, "docile, conforming, who makes fairly good grades, but has no original ideas, nor any questioning fire in him," but after all this is a side of the picture which is disappearing, and they heartily share the feeling with which the writer adds, "but even as I cast these reproaches, I am repentant. The last few paragraphs would be terribly false if they stood alone. If we are petty in small points of student conduct, we are not petty in larger concerns. The place has a soul, a unified and definite soul to which many brave lives have contributed." A college with a soul—certainly that rings familiarly.

It would seem that wherever read, this little article should be followed by a rising tide of renewed appreciation of the small church college, on the part of educators, of parents, and of the church people who sponsor and support these unique institutions with their strange power of gripping peoples' souls.

Yes, we can understand the ill success of Professor Phillips' Harvard room-mate in trying to wean him away from this "land of the hicks." "He is now resigned," writes Professor Phillips. "It is no use, he says, because I am only a sort of super hick myself. Well, why not? Being a super hick is something new in the way of a career, and it suits me exactly."

Who knows, perhaps there will be those of Wendell Phillips' brother professors in similar institutions who will lay his article aside, heartened as well as entertained, and reflect, "Teaching in a small church college, . . . really to make a career of it. . . Well, why not?"—In Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

CHRISTIAN INTEREST IN CENTENNIAL OF THE TELEGRAPH.

By SAMUEL MCCREA CALVERT.

The centennial anniversary of the invention of the electric telegraph by Samuel F. B. Morse, which is being observed this month, has a special interest for the churches because of the deep religious character of its inventor. Every school-boy knows that the first message sent by the telegraph was, "What God hath wrought." It is too little known that the message is a fitting summary of the inventor's own philosophy of life.

The Christian experience of Samuel F. B. Morse was no accident. It had its antecedents in his ancestry. Born in Charlestown, Mass., April 27, 1791, he was the son of a distinguished Congregational minister, Rev. Jedediah Morse, and received an early Christian nurture that enriched his whole life. The contribution of the Morse family to Christian history has continued to our day, a nephew of Samuel F. B., Richard C. Morse, having been for many years the general secretary of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association and having only recently passed to his reward, rich in his record of service and in the affection of the entire brotherhood of the Y. M. C. A.

That Samuel F. B. Morse was an artist of distinction as well as an inventor is a fact with which most of our generation are not familiar. As a matter of fact, his life was divided into two productive periods, the first as a painter, the second as a scientific inventor. While still in Yale he began to paint portraits—at the rate of one dollar for a profile and five dollars for a full face—to help defray the expenses of his education. After a brief and unsatisfying apprenticeship to a bookseller, he found happiness in studying painting in London under Benjamin West. His best known accomplishment in the artistic field was his painting of Lafayette's portrait, which he was commissioned to do by the City of New York.

An achievement of a different kind in the field of art was his work in establishing our National Academy of Design on a firm footing. He became the first president of the Academy. On March 24th, last, there was an exhibit of Morse's paintings at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and a medal of honor was conferred upon his son in recognition of the father's work.

While in Paris in 1831-1832, Morse first became alertly interested in the possibilities of telegraphy. In the spring of 1832, the first inspiration for the use of the electric spark and code to transmit messages through space came to him. Henceforth, in the face of obstacles that would have daunted a spirit less courageous, his field was to be science instead of art. For eight years he tried to raise adequate funds for experimentation. Finally Congress appropriated $30,000 for the building of a telegraph line between Washington and Baltimore. It was over this line that, in 1844, Morse sent his historic message, "What hath God wrought!"

"The Letters and Journals of Samuel F. B. Morse," edited by his son, make it clear that one of the creative and sustaining influences in his life was his Christian faith. An almost child-like confidence in God, an implicit trust in the teaching of the Bible, and a grateful sense of a salvation that was his through Christ, are disclosed in many of his letters and diaries. Especially noteworthy is the evidence in his letters of an unshaken conviction that in God's Providence he was destined to accomplish some great good for his fellowmen. That he did accomplish it is indisputable. How much of the reason lay in his faith that God had a real mission for him to fulfill none but his Master can know.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The forty-second annual Commencement exercises of Elon College, North Carolina, were held on May 21-25, 1932. The graduating class numbered 60—34 males and 26 females. There is a gradual increase in the higher education of women that, no doubt, accounts for the increase of the influence of women in all the walks and professions of life. The only way to keep people down is to keep them illiterate; and the only way of progress is by education; and the best means of progress is through Christian education, and Elon College stands for that—first and always.

In addition to A. B. degrees, diplomas were given in Fine Arts and Voice; and certificates were given in Piano and Public School Music.

On Sunday, May 22nd, the Baccalaureate Sermon was delivered by Dr. William Mosely Brown of Atlantic University, to a large and appreciative congregation. The Vesper Organ Recital followed at 4:00 P. M., and the Baccalaureate Address at 8:00 P. M., by President L. E. Smith.

Monday was filled up with class exercises, Junior representatives, class reunions, community tea, and fellowship hour, and a general vocal recital.

Tuesday, Greater Elon College program, Richmond Christian Church Orchestra concert, which aroused complimentary praise, the general Alumni meeting, May Day Festival, Alumni dinner and Alumni address, by Rev. H. Lee Scott, of the Class of '23.

The Literary Address before the graduating class, and a great audience, was delivered on Wednesday at 10:30, by Dr. William Louis Potat, of Wake Forest College. The address maintained the Potat reputation for scholarship and delivery, and was greatly enjoyed by the graduating class and the audience. His keen historic and literary insight and artistic composition suggested diligent study as a lesson for all and ample reward for such study.

The diplomas were presented by Dr. L. E. Smith, the President of Elon College, and the Bibles by Dr. N. G. Newman, of Holland, Va.; and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. G. O. Lankford, of Burlington, N. C. Through all the five days the exercises were good, the attendance was large, the spirit was fine, and the graduating class the largest in the forty-two years of Elon's history.

Now that Commencement is over, it is an opportunity and an obligation for members of the Christian Church to send their sons and daughters to Elon College for the next year. The College needs money, but students play a large part in the building of a college. Give of your money and send students to Elon for next session and you will be rewarded for your liberality and your loyalty.

Two facts loom in the public mind of thinking people who are interested in the education of young people and the welfare of society. 1. The struggles of small colleges in their financial operation in competition with tax supported and heavily endowed institutions. Elon is among that class of small colleges. 2. The consensus of opinion in the mind of thoughtful observers is that the best education is produced by small colleges. The personal contacts of teachers and students, and of students with one another, in small colleges is democratic and religious in the best sense, and such human contact and personal acquaintance and friendship is of great value in education. Men and women have to live together and they should be educated together. That is the chief reason for co-education and woman suffrage.

W. W. STALEY.

HE GIVETH MORE.

It was an old hand-bag, such as women carried under their arm a few years back. Battered and worn without any beauty on the outside, and the inside looked even worse. Upon the flap the owner had pasted a scripture text "sticker" with the words: "The Son of God loved me and gave himself for me," a part of one of her favorite Bible verses.

The old hand-bag had held much money in its time, at least it seemed so to its owner; enough to meet the needs of the family after the tithe had been taken out. As Time passed a hole was discovered in the lining at one corner and it was found that coins slipped through, but with patience they could be restored to their proper place.

Finally the lining was torn out as the holes kept increasing. Then the pasteboard began to break and the owner emptying all the money out, as she supposed, took the pasteboard out. From some unseen place two dimes dropped to the bottom of the bag. How good they looked to the owner, for money was not so plentiful as it had been, and every penny was needed. More time passed and the bag held less and less, yet there was enough for the actual needs, after the tithe had been given to the Lord.

But one day the owner made out the list of the needs for the day and counted the money—there was a lack. The list must be revised, yet what could be omitted. Looking into the empty bag for—inspiration, perhaps—a hole was discovered in the outer covering.

With a sigh, the owner realized that the bag must be discarded as it would be no longer safe to use, and began removing the receipts and tracts which the pockets contained. Reaching her fingers in to see if there was anything left she touched another dime. Oh, joy, it made her money more than enough for what was needed. The Lord had given more than was needed.

Yes, the Lord supplies our temporal needs. But they are of minor importance when we consider the needs of the spiritual life; the soul which lives after the bodily needs are no longer to be considered.

God, in his justice, spoke through his prophet, Ezekiel, saying: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." His apostle Paul said: "All have sinned." Oh, the darkness of despair in the souls who know not the grace of God. "But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

Jesus Christ, through his death upon the cross, opened up to us the great store-house of grace so that we, when we realize our sinful condition, could reach into the riches of grace, marvelous grace that exceeds our sin and our guilt, and receive pardon and new life—freedom from the guilt of sin. But, oh, how weak we are and how the enemy of our souls would bring us into captivity to the law of sin, yet we still have access to the riches of his grace.

The words of encouragement to Paul are for us also: "My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness." So his grace gives victory over the power of sin and we can go singing on our way. Sometimes it may be a minor strain when the circumstances of life would defeat us, but, "He giveth more grace," he supplies every need of our spiritual life.

Yes, there is grace for the bright days and for hindrances; grace to supply all our needs; grace to live a victorious life and to open the portals of heaven. Oh, may we tear out the lining of despair and the pasteboard of unbelief and may we reach into the secret place of the most high and ever receive of the grace that conquers doubts and fears.

"Through many dangers, toils and snares,
I have already come:

'Tis grace hath brought me safe thus far,
And grace will lead me home."

DOES THE ATHEIST NEED A SAVIOUR?

He says he does not; he has nothing to be saved from. Then he hastens down town to his best lawyer to begin proceedings against the man who has swindled him out of his property, or who has set fire to his house, or has broken faith with his daughter, or has kidnapped his son for ransom; or because of a thousand sins or crimes to which the flesh is subservient. Surely he needs a saviour every day of his life from some or other form of ill treatment or injustice. He seeks his salvation in the courts of man's ingenuity; but smart lawyers contend with smarter lawyers and justice is perverted. He then seeks salvation in his trusty six-shooter, only to find that someone else needs salvation and protection, and he becomes amenable to the very saving power which had proven false to him. He is a criminal, he is a sinner, and needs to be saved from the result of his own misdeeds as well as from the misdeeds of others.

Leaving out all thought of God, does he not need a Saviour, some means to free him from the bonds of injustice and relieve him from the sinfulness and devilry of his fellow man? Or, perhaps his father sinned in dissipation and debauchery and bequeathed him a diseased body; or such a condition to some other member of his family; perhaps a drunken youth has mangled his child by reckless driving, or some unscrupulous sinner has spread contagion in his neighborhood, or some vengeful butler has poisoned his cup; he rushes to the best physicians because he needs to be saved—he needs a saviour. The people of the world have been in such plights as this throughout their existence and have ever manifested their need of a Saviour by supporting skillful men in different professions. The best skill obtainable may fail, and he sees his loved ones closing weary eyes in death, or he feels his own poisoned or diseased body failing him. Does he need a Saviour—some one to snatch him or his out of the bony hand of death? In that hour he would give his all for a Saviour.

Without thought of God or of a future existence after death, does not every man need a Saviour? The atheist, as well as all others, sees the results of his own and others' sins, crime, evil, call it what you will, and earnestly desires to be freed from such results. Sickness and pain of body are the result of somebody's sin. Murder, theft, lying, incendiarism, swindling—all of these contribute to the suffering, disappointment, failures, bereavement, sorrow, poverty, etc., that encompass the human race from generation to generation. Man seeks by his own legislation, experiment, researches, inventions, to save himself from them. He strives to lift himself out of the mire by tugging at his own boot straps, all to no avail. Great men have arisen as political, social, financial, mechanical wizards who would surely save the race, but within the stretch of recorded history humanity has not profited by such means. In spite of modern improvements, humanity is just as dissatisfied and restless as it ever was, or perhaps more so.

Nature provides no Saviour, only a promise (vague at that) of a gradual improvement. Future generations a million years hence may be perfected, if evolutionists are to be credited. But does that promise any salvation to the man today who suffers blindness, or deafness, or is a cripple, or tubercular; or whose child is dying, whose own life is broken by the result of that same exercise of natural passions, or whose honors or wealth have vanished, or who suffers any of the multitude of ills and disasters that strike daily at the souls of men in this twentieth century? If they need a Saviour, they need him now—not a million years hence. A few years more (without God) and they will have closed their hopeless, unprofitable existence, and will be plunged into eternal oblivion without having attained to any great degree of happiness or success. No wonder the wise man saw but vanity and vexation of spirit when viewing life from a purely material standpoint. Without God's influence, directly or indirectly, life would be unendurable.

If man is so in need of being saved from the consequences of the evils of men, as all must admit, or if man simply needs to be saved from his present status of evolution, which is ludicrous, where will he find a Saviour? According to the atheist, a million years has failed to produce one. Millions more of godless years will not find one. There is no salvation for this generation from its present unsatisfactory condition. The few who are wealthy, healthy and well favored may contend that life is all right as it is, but sooner or later the pall will hover over their lives and the soul will cry out for some one to save, to bring back bygone pleasures and lost opportunities. But no power can stay the encroachment of age or the chilly hand of death. Suppose the next thousand years may produce an elixir of life whereby one may live many years longer, what advantage is that hope to the man who lives today without that elixir?

There is a God. He sent a Saviour who can save the man of today from many of the results of sin while he lives in this world, and promises a "new earth" as a landing place after death, where sins, crime, evil, injustice, with all their miserable consequences, cannot come; where life will be wholly satisfactory and no one will hurt or destroy or misuse or intimidate—a realization to the man of today of what the evolutionist hopes (?) for his posterity a million generations removed. But there is a hitch in it; there is a catch to it somewhere. The great God, through this Saviour, requires that he who would aspire to this enviable culmination of life must "deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world." There's the rub. Men do not want to repent and do righteousness; so they choose to go on and suffer hopelessly for a season, then pass over and continue to suffer eternally to satiate the Devil, whom they have served.—J. T. Amis in Gospel Advocate.

THE TRULY GREAT.

Who are the great? At this challenge Fame recounts in our hearing the names of warriors, orators, poets, and philosophers, whose deeds have secured them a distinguished place in her crowded temple, and by the light of history they are made to pass in review. First, the warrior at the head of his armed legions, whose measured tread shakes the earth, passes before us. It is true that desolation marks his track, that burning cities light his midnight marches, that the earth is stained by the blood of his victims, and the air rent by the cries of the widows and orphans he has made; but the multitude add their acclamations to the trumpet tongue of Fame, and with one voice call him great.

The orator sways at will all the passions of the soul; every feeling is aroused. At his voice vindictive hate or tender pity reigns; at his will shouts of vengeance or tears of compassion prevail. He well knows the secret cords of the human heart, and, like a skillful player, he draws forth varied notes from that wonderful instrument: the rapt throngs, unconscious of the power by which they are moved, gaze on him as one of a superior nature, and with one consent they call him great.

The poet by the magic power of his verse enthrones himself in the hearts of thousands. The age in which he lives bears the impress of his genius. He changes the current of popular feeling by the sorcery of his song; the strain he sings is more potent for good or ill than the sword of the warrior or the tongue of the orator, and when he dies his tomb is wreathed with flowers and those who survive him tell their children and children's children of the greatness of him whom the cold marble covers.

The philosopher gives himself up to the luxury of thoughts and observations, and, intoxicated by his discoveries, almost imagines himself the maker of the worlds which have first appeared to his watchful eye, or the author of the laws of matter or mind which have flashed upon his inner vision; and the awe-struck multitude, wondering at the marvels he has made known, deem him worthier than all his fellows of the title "great."

Far different will be the judgment of the great Judge of all, for he looks not as man looks, on the appearance, but on the heart. Many who have won the title "great" from their fellowmen in the judgment will be shown to have been the scourges of their kind, and many who have been honored here shall there be condemned to eternal infamy; the man who has dried the widow's and orphan's tear shall shine brighter than earth's noblest hero, and he who has led an erring soul to God be more honored than he who, directing his gaze into the blue expanse, caught the first glance of a new planet, and called it by his own name; the man of a meek and humble heart, who was here the object of the cold world's scorn, shall there appear in his true character, and be approved before a gazing universe; the man of faith who fearlessly stemmed the torrent of a corrupt age, the martyr of God who loved the truth more than life, the devoted missionary, and all the benefactors of the souls and the bodies of men, the Pauls, the Judsons, the Howards, shall in that day be called the truly great.—William Baxter.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

PRAYER.

Lord, thine arm is not shortened, nor dost thou disregard the believer's faith. The smallness of our faith prevents thy power and souls are slipping anchor. God forgive and reclaim. Corruption assails every phase of the common law. Perchance only by a chastisement yet unfelt can righteousness be made to prevail. Send, O God, such chastisement as thou must, upon whom thou wilt, that our nation, the nations, may yield to thy reign. For the glory of Jesus' name. Amen.

L.

THE BREAD OF LIFE.

There never was greater need for seeking spiritual strength, and relying upon spiritual activities, than today. While men and women are hungering for material bread to feed their physical bodies, they hunger also for the bread of life to sustain and increase their spiritual strength. In our missionary giving, we break the bread of life to a world burdened with sin and to souls hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Through benevolence and charity, we help care for the needy ones about us; through Missions, we help extend the Kingdom of our Lord, by making him known to those who need him, and who are dying without him.

Our Christian Churches are only asked to make an offering once a year for Missions, and that is on a Sunday between March 1st and July 1st. It is now June 1st and quite a few of the churches if they have taken the offering, have not sent it in. We cannot believe that in this time of spiritual need and spiritual longing, the church, which is the body of Christ, will deny its Lord in doing the one thing for which the church itself was founded. The church alone, of all the institutions and movements among men, does missionary work, sends out missionaries, builds churches, preaches and supports the gospel. Unless the church does this, no other organization will do it. Every missionary and every church in the homeland and in the foreign field are products of church and missionary activity. When an individual member of the church repudiates Missions, and fails to support Missions, he repudiates, and fails to support the one movement for which the church is responsible, and in which the church alone is engaged.

There are some in every church who will give something to Missions, if given a chance, for there are those in every church who long not only to share the physical but the spiritual blessings with others and who are anxious to share the benefits of the gospel with others. Through Missions alone can this be done. It seems a tragedy, indeed, for any church to go through the year without giving its members an opportunity of breaking to other souls the bread of life that sustains them. Let every church, by all means, take a missionary offering and thus share with others that bread of life without which the soul must perish.

J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Sec'y.

MEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

(Editor's Note.—The following is of deep interest and significance. Knowing the great work the women are doing through their missionary societies, and the great benefits accruing to them through this work, we have wondered why the men did not enlist in the cause of the supreme task, the vital task of the church. It is, indeed, heartening that one organization has been formed and is functioning, for this no doubt means that others will follow. Or is this a dream too fond to indulge? The letter, which was entirely personal, is, without permission, re-printed verbatim. —J. O. A.):

"Dear Dr. Atkinson:

"I am enclosing $5.00 as a contribution to Missions by the Men's Missionary Society of Rosemont Christian Church of Norfolk County. Our society has been organized only a comparatively short time; and this is our first contribution, but we hope to increase our membership and be able to help more in the cause after a while.

"I suppose that a Missionary Society for men is something new; so far as I know ours is the only one in the Conference at the present time. It is our purpose to get all the men over eighteen years of age in our community interested in missions, and we believe that if we can arouse interest among the men they will be faithful to the cause as well as the women.

"We began about the first of the year, with Mr. W. H. Farrow as our president and leader. We had a membership at first of fourteen, and have added three members since. We hold our meetings on the second Monday evening of each month. Rev. J. F. Morgan, our pastor, usually teaches a chapter from a missionary text that we can use. No monthly assessment is placed on a member, but a free-will offering is taken at each meeting. So far our average attendance has been only about ten or twelve, but this should increase a little during the summer months.

"With kindest personal regards and best wishes, I am,

"Very truly yours,

WM. M. SPARKMAN, Sec'y-Treas."Men's Missionary Society,

WHITER THAN SNOW.

Dr. F. B. Meyers tells of a visit he made to a washer lady in the winter time. While he was making the visit, the snow fell and all her wash was on the line. As he left the house, having finished his visit, he remarked to her that there was a great contrast between the whiteness of the clothes she had washed and the whiteness of the snow. "Yes," she said, "the clothes on the line are clean, but there is nothing in the world so white as God Almighty's white."

David was a great sinner, thief (he stole another man's wife), adulterer, murderer, but he repented, and in the agony of his prayer for forgiveness in Psalm 51:7, says: "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." When the world ridicules David, this is the part which they forget, the cleanness, the purity, the holiness which God puts on sin-purged souls. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

Oh, the wonder of it; oh, the joy of it!

Fifty years ago such inventions as the phonograph, the telephone, the wireless and the flying machine would have been considered dreams of madmen. But because we are familiar with them, largely we cease to wonder. For the same reason, too, God's marvelous work of grace in the heart seems commonplace. Astronomers go thousands of miles at great expense to see an eclipse, but who troubles himself to see the beauty of the sunrise? Do we lose the keen edge of our feelings and our vision when we consider the common glories with which God has surrounded us?

Have we been guilty of great sins? According to the Book, the disobedience of eating a forbidden apple was the primary cause of all our woe. "But all we, like sheep, have gone astray." D. L. Moody says, "We should not make provision for sin, but God has done it." In consequence, no matter how far into the depths we may have fallen, God holds to each one of his children the blessed fact that in his sight they have been washed in the blood and have been made whiter than snow, so that in each one of us is an example of a marvelous work of grace.

A. D. WOODWORTH.

JULY FIRST.

The emphasis which has been placed upon "The Dollar Plan" through the coin card, during recent weeks ought not to diminish among our people a sense of the importance of regular contributions. Indeed, it is these regular contributions, diminished as little as possible over preceding years, which are our chief dependence. In each church the effort ought plainly to be made to secure the regular offerings and to see to it that at least as much is sent in by July 1, 1932, as was sent in during the first half of 1931.

The readers of this paper doubtless constitute our most interested and our most devoted constituency in their respective churches. Not only do we ask for your contributions, but we ask you to do what you can in behalf of the contributions of others.

Lest the word may escape the eye of the church treasurer, or teacher, or Sunday School superintendent, will you use your influence to have every dollar that has been contributed to Missions sent in on or before July 1st? The interest on borrowed money is just so much taken from the work in the field. We do not want appalling debts to face after the depression lets up.

The tragedy of reduced receipts for our missionary work at this time is that such reduction diminishes the effectiveness of what after all is our essential hope for the future of the world. Without more religion and better religion in the days to come, there is nothing but catastrophe ahead. The sacrificial, thorough-going gathering in of contributions from individuals and their churches by July 1st will help to avoid this catastrophe. If any church has failed to take the annual missionary offering, it certainly should arrange to take the offering and send it in before July 1st.

WOMAN'S SOCIETIES.

I am wondering how you are enjoying the study of India by this time. Hope the poster meeting in May proved to be successful and helpful, too. This month we have a Question Box meeting, and this ought to be just as helpful and interesting if worked up well. The general plan is as follows: Three young people dressed to typify History, Facts and Christian Opinion, will answer the questions. History might be enfolded in cardboard cut as a book cover with "History" lettered in the center.

Facts might be draped severely in black and white and the word, "Facts," worn on a strip of paper across the front.

Christian Opinion in drapery of blue or white cheesecloth (perhaps with a gold cross in hand).

Distribute the twenty-four questions among the audience, who will ask them in turn. If this plan is too elaborate, the questions may be distributed and asked in turn, one of three assigned leaders giving the answer without reading, if possible. If the audience could be induced to discussion, it would greatly add.

Program.

"India in Transition."

Hymn—"Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life."

Leader's introduction.

Question Box.

Special Solo—Gandhi's favorite Christian Hymn, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross."

Scripture—Portions of the Sermon on the Mount, in which Gandhi and many of India's leaders find inspiration for service.

Prayer for India's Leaders—For the Indian Church; for the Indian Missionary Society; for the pastors; for the social workers; for ourselves that we may be conscious of fellowship with these others of the great household of God.

Plenty of good material for an Indian program may be found in our public and school libraries. Avail yourself of the opportunity and see how much it will help your program.

WILLING WORKERS OR JUNIORS.

Children's Program.

Have this a public program and take a special offering for Missions.

YOUNG PEOPLES' SOCIETIES.

Topic—"God and the Census."

Theme—"Living the Truth."

II. Study Period—Chapter IX—The Church—and Bread and Butter.

1. Water is Life in Arizona, pp. 106-110, a member.
2. What is the business of a home Missionary enterprise in a community? Answered by a member, pp. 113-114.
3. New Conditions in Porto Rico, pp. 114-117, a member.
4. Leader may bring out strong points in chapter emphasizing fact that we must get God counted in the market place.

III. Worship Period.

1. Hymn—Prayer.
2. Leader's Talk—"Great Lives of Service Have Been Great Souls at Prayer."
3. Prayer Hymn—"Holy Spirit, Truth Divine."
4. Offertory.
5. Hymn—"Gracious Spirit, Dwell With Me." (1st verse.)
6. Benediction.

PROGRAM FOR CRADLE ROLL RALLY.

Song—"Jesus Loves Me."

Recitation—"My Speech of Welcome," by a wee boy:

"A welcome speech they want from me,
And though I'm little, they shall see
I'll speak it out so loud and clear
That everyone can surely hear.

"I welcome you with sweet delight—
It seems to me that sounds all right;
Now smile, and I will give you this—
Just catch my great big Welcome Kiss."

Superintendent's Welcome to All (closing with "God Bless the Babies"):

"God bless these babies dear,
All who are gathered here—
Our Cradle Roll.
Jesus, in thy dear arms,
Keep safe from all that harms,
And guard from all alarms,
Our Cradle Roll."

Solo—"Jesus Bids Us Shine."

Exercise by four children:

"Such little hands! What can they do
To make somebody glad?
The bright sweet flowers they can bring
To cheer the sick and sad.

"Such little feet! Where can they go

The gifts of God to bear?

To run his errands to and fro,

They're needed everywhere.

"Bright little eyes can always find

A Bible verse or hymn,

To give sweet peace to heart and mind,

Of one whose sight is dim.

"One little tongue can always say

Kind words of truth and love;

And to the gentle Saviour pray,

Song—(Some favorite that the children know.)

Offering—"Give Freely."

(A boy): "Our baskets are empty, we are sorry to say.

But hope you will fill them this Cradle Roll Day."

(A girl): "Oh, not for ourselves will your fine offering go,

But for other children whom Christ does not know."

(A boy): "Give freely, give freely, for those still outside,

For each little one has the dear Saviour died." Pastor's Remarks, closing with prayer.

Note to Cradle Roll Superintendents—There is a leaflet entitled, "Let the Little Ones Come Unto Him," for the Cradle Roll mothers. If you will write to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., and state the number you need, they will be sent to you free.

BE A MISSIONARY.

You can be a real missionary by getting someone else to attend a Summer Training School. It will be a real service to them. Perhaps some young person in your church, or one that you know some place else, does not know about these schools with their inspiration and training. A word from you may be all that is needed to get a friend of yours to attend. Do that friend a favor by getting him or her signed up for the camp or school.

There should be at least one choice young person from each church. But there is no limit to the number that may attend. If you know about the school, and you know someone who could or should attend, then this is your call to service. That is being a missionary. And you can never tell how much good may come from this little service. A life might be dedicated to the Christian service because you helped to get that individual to go to Imokalee, Elon, Wadley, Piedmont, or Blue Ridge.

FARM PRODUCTS FOR TUITION.

Owing to the present shortage of money among country boys and girls, chickens, vegetables, meat, molasses, and other farm products will be accepted on tuition at the Textile Industrial Institute, Spartanburg, S. C., during the coming school year.

This new project for helping students to obtain an education is creating much enthusiasm among the young people of agricultural districts in the section of the Textile Institute. President R. B. Burgess reports that many ambitious country boys and girls, who were forced because of lack of funds to remain out of school this year are already making plans for "raising" their own tuition during the coming spring and summer.—Ex.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

WHY A YOUNG PERSON SHOULD READ OUR CHURCH PAPER.

Many questions are being asked by the young people of today concerning the purposes, spirit, and ideals which we find embodied in the Universal Religion. And their many questions show that they are hungry for something that will give them ease of soul, rest to the weary mind, something refreshing, recreating, and restoring. Because of this fact, groups of older men and women who have experienced the values of the panacea for hungry youth have given their life, time, and substance to the publication of our church papers and other material which they have found helpful in this new day and age.

There are many things about our church and its work that we like to know. Then, cultivate a habit and desire to read our church paper. It contains valuable helps pertaining to any form of church work; especially Christian Endeavor, Young People's work, and mid-week prayer service. And, too, we are kept well informed regarding the activities of the various churches throughout the Convention. Many things may be suggested to the mind of an inquisitive reader of the activities of other churches.

Several young people in the Congregational-Christian Churches are asking what is the value of Christian literature? Very few seem to know its value. To me this is a pertinent question. Again, it seems those who have become interested enough to ask questions of this nature are willing to investigate further by reading the church papers for information. Today our country is being swamped with "Yellow Journalism" i. e. thrilling murder stories, criminal acts of all kinds, kidnappings, etc., which is poisoning the very soul of the youth of today. It is like pouring water around the roots of a thirsty tree during a dry summer—everything is picked up by the mind of the growing youth, and once it has been absorbed it is difficult to remove. The church papers include nothing of this nature; it is all clean, wholesome, and usable for the advancement of the Kingdom of God. Every young person who desires to become a leader of Christian work should read the church paper seeking these things.

CARL R. KEY.

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP IN WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The young people of the Western North Carolina Conference were organized during the last meeting of the Conference in November, 1931. Then, all the officers of the Conference attended the Elon Holiday Conference in order to make plans and accumulate ideas that would help them in approaching the task in the proper way.

Since the Elon Holiday Conference the officers have secured representatives, better known as key-workers, in eleven of the thirty-six churches in their Conference. With a little more cooperation they feel that they can get things going in a better way than in the past; and they are asking the cooperation of all the pastors in their Conference. They wish to thank the pastors who have cooperated so nicely so far; and with their prayers and advice we are expecting a great success for Youth Fellowship of our Conference.

And the key-workers we have thus far should have received a letter and folder regarding the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training. It is vitally important that young people who are leaders in their churches should get the training that is being offered; so we again urge you to go to Elon. Our goal is twenty students and your presence will mean one more deducted from that number.

MEET THE FACULTY.

ELON SUMMER SCHOOL

Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, pastor of the Elon College Church, and professor of Bible and Religious Education, is a new-comer to our Conference, a very welcome addition to our summer conference faculty. He is a graduate of Defiance College and holds his M. A. and B. D. degrees from the University of Chicago. His two years as president of Palmer College and three as college pastor at Elon, together with ten years of preaching, give him a splendid background for the course he is to teach, that of Appreciation of the Bible. This is a new course at Elon, but one that we feel will appeal especially to the younger group of students and is very essential for any intelligent use of the Bible.

Pattie Lee Coghill needs no introduction to the young people of the Southeast. We all know and love her and welcome her again to the Elon Conference in which she has always had such a large share. Miss Coghill is a graduate of Elon College, and has studied at Boston University. Her years as Field Secretary with the Board of Christian Education and as extension worker for Florida, have given her a wealth of experience that makes her a most effective leader and teacher.

Prof. Simon A. Bennett, of Elon College, is well-known to young people of the Congregational and Christian Churches. He is a graduate of Union Christian College and the University of Illinois and received both his M. A. and D. D. degrees at the University of Chicago. During the period of 1911 to 1922 he held pastorates in Illinois, Ohio, Colorado, and served as a field worker for the Christian Church Forward Movement. He has served as Professor of Religious Education and Bible at Elon College for the last eight years. He is an experienced teacher at Summer Conferences, having taught at Craigsville for three summers and Elon College for four. This summer he will teach a course on the New Testament.

We are unusually privileged to have as a member of our faculty this summer, Mrs. Edward Parsons of Tunghsien, China. Mrs. Parsons is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College, and received her R. N. from the University of Michigan. In 1925, she went with her husband, a doctor, to China. Dr. Parsons built up at Tunghsien a perfectly wonderful small hospital. It had been started before, but he increased its extension work into the country districts, not developing the institution itself, but enormously broadening its influence. He started one of the first tuberculosis experiment centers in all North China, turning a series of chicken coops into tuberculosis wards for sun cure. Dr. Parsons died just before leaving for his furlough. He was in a terrible state of fatigue due to famine relief work, and fell prey to pneumonia. Mrs. Parsons has returned to Washington, D. C., with their three children. Mrs. Parsons will teach the course on World Missions intended especially for older leaders. We welcome her most heartily to the Southeast and to our Elon College Conference.

Prof. A. R. Van Cleave, a native of Indiana, is a graduate of Indiana University, with an M. A. from the University of Chicago. He has had wide experience as a teacher in both elementary and high schools. He spent two years as a professor at Union Christian College and the past five years as professor of Philosophy and Sociology at Elon College. He will teach the course on "The Pupil." His wide experience as a teacher and his sympathy and understanding make him a teacher of rare ability.

Miss Ruth Johnson, who is to teach Young People's Methods, is a teacher in the Fuquay, N. C., High School. She received her academic training at Elon and Columbia and for two years had charge of Young People's work in the Riverdale Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio.

NOTICE.

As the appointment now stands, our Summer School of Christian Education will convene at Southern Union College, Wadley, Ala., Thursday night before the 5th Sunday in July, and will continue one week. My purpose in giving this notice is to ask all pastors and churches to plan their revivals so as not to interfere with the attendance of our young people upon this school of methods.

I do hope that every pastor may plan to attend, and that every church shall not only require their pastor to attend, but to aid him in every possible way to attend.

It will be great if all our preachers can have the opportunity to spend a week together and have the fellowship of our Congregational brethren in that meeting. Everybody pray and plan to be there.

Sincerely,

G. D. HUNT.

JUDAH THE TRUE BROTHER.

LESSON XI—JUNE 12, 1932.

LESSON TEXT: Gen. 44:18-34.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brothers to dwell together in unity."—Psa. 133:1.

TIME: B. C. 1715.

PLACE: Joseph's palace at Zoan.

The seven years of plenty had passed in Egypt, and the seven years of famine were upon her. Yet there was food and to spare. Meantime the famine had spread beyond the bounds of Egypt even unto Canaan, where dwelt Joseph's father and his brothers.

As the need for food increased, Jacob called upon his sons that they go to Egypt to purchase food that they perish not. The ten sons of Leah he sent, but not Benjamin, the (as he supposed) only surviving son of his beloved Rachel.

In due time they reached Egypt and appeared before Joseph. Immediately he recognized them, though they knew him not. Imagine their surprise and indignation when, instead of selling the food they so greatly desired, he accused them of being spies, sent to spy out the land. Finally, learning from them the things he desired to know, as they talked freely before him, not knowing that he understood their language, and having questioned them severely as to their former lives, he agreed to let them have food for their father. But, still concealing his identity, he demanded that Simeon be left behind as an hostage till they should return with their younger brother, thus proving the story which they had told him.

Returning home, the brothers tell their story to Jacob, who refuses to allow them to carry Benjamin to Egypt. But the pressure of hunger was felt again, and at last, when Judah promised to be surety for his brother, Jacob agreed, and they again set out for Egypt.

Upon their arrival, they were invited—Joseph's invitation was a command—to dine with the prime minister. We can imagine that this invitation filled them with awe if not with terror. They feared that they would be seized, when once in the palace, and sold into slavery along with their younger brother, Benjamin. How heavily did the fate they had so lightly placed upon Joseph rest upon them. Yet, they must accept.

Joseph's steward brought them into the reception room, and when Joseph entered they arose and bowed before him, fulfilling his dream of years before. They gave him presents reminding him of his boyhood home. Eagerly did he enquire: "Is your father well, the old man of whom we spake?" And joyously did he receive their answer. They were banqueted in regal style, and were further astonished by being seated exactly in accordance with their ages, and by Benjamin being sent an unusually large supply of food.

Then came Joseph's final test of his brethren. He caused each man's money to be packed in his sack, and in Benjamin's sack he caused to be placed also his silver goblet. And the brothers departed on their way unknowingly. Immediately they were followed by Joseph's steward, their belongings searched and the goblet found.

Here the text of today's lesson begins. Brought back to Joseph's palace, the brothers again supplicate themselves before him. Judah pleads for Benjamin in one of the noblest speeches of all literature. Judah was the brother who had suggested the selling of Joseph into captivity. Now

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

W. A. HARPER, Editor.

(Any book reviewed in this Department may be had of THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the publisher's price.)

AN ANALYSIS OF THE SUPERVISORY ACTIVITIES AND TECHNIQUES OF THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL TRAINING SUPERVISOR, by Harry N. Fitch. Teachers College. 130 pp. $1.50.

More than 400 supervisory activities are presented and analyzed and nearly 100 techniques are given. The religious supervisor will find this book exceedingly helpful.

A TEACHERS COLLEGE FOLLOW-UP SERVICE, by Effie C. Bathurst. Teachers College. 89 pp. $1.50.

The Teachers College graduates studied were of Eastern South Dakota State Teachers College. The questions discussed have a very practical value and tend to show the mutual helpfulness of such follow-up service for graduates engaged in local teaching work and for the improvement of teaching in the college itself. It is a good supervision project.

CHARACTER EDUCATION, by A. L. Threlkeld, Chairman. The 10th Year Book, 1932. Department of Superintendence, the National Education Association. 535 pp. $2.00.

No subject is claiming more attention today than character education. This is a very incisive study from the public school viewpoint. Character education is conceived as the integration of values, doing the best thing in each situation. The place of the superintendent, the principal, the teacher, the counselor, are presented in illuminating and satisfactory way. Every experience is declared to have character building significance, as indeed it does. Concrete suggestions are made with reference to building character through the school plant and its equipment, the playground and other activities, and in cooperation with other agencies such as the home and the Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls. There is no need of the church—at least no mention is made of it in the book—nor of God, who is likewise ignored in the discussion. Neither is there recognition of any obligation to a moral order that exists in its own right. In addition, we cannot admit, as the report assumes, that religion is properly conceived as mere conduct. Nevertheless, the Christian builder of character will profit greatly by this sensible and dispassionate discussion of one of the burning issues of our day. The book is worthy of a most careful study and will handsomely repay it.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

GOOD CHEER.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee."—Isa. 26:3.

What a promise! And yet, where is there one, who has tried this out, who has not found it true? From the beginning to the end of Christ's life, this is his gift to man. It is one of the characteristics, named by Paul, of a true Christian. It is through this characteristic that God's satisfying ministries surpass all understanding and supercede all outward circumstances.

Christ said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." This, with our text, is one of forty-five references to Peace in the Bible. Jesus defines it as the peace which he himself enjoyed, as much as to say, "That which has protected me in a thousand fights I make over to you."

When Jesus makes his will and leaves peace with us, it means he has endowed us with the chiefest good, and has given what, beyond all men who ever lived, he himself enjoyed. We challenge one and all to read his life as recorded in the Gospels and see with what peace he met every moment of his life.

Prayer.—Our Lord and our God, make thine own this hour. Give us thy peace. Make us not only the possessors but the spreaders of thy peace everywhere. Amen.

TUESDAY.

REGENERATION AND RENEWAL.

"Jesus said unto him, he that is bathed needeth not, save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit."—Jno. 13:10.

Regeneration is not necessary every time we fall—not any more than one who, having bathed in the morning, need repeat his total ablution at dinner time, but is content with washing his face and hands to remove such defilement as may have been contracted during the day.

We believe that Peter was clean because he sincerely believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, and Jesus was not trying to regenerate him, but he undertook to remove from him the particular defilement of his desire for earthly power and greatness. Though Peter fell into a greater crime after this, his faith held true and he came out of it an endowed Apostle.

It has been said that many gifts of the Holy Spirit do come to some unregenerated men, but they come and go like the waves of the sea on a receding tide; they break away and leave the shore bare. Not so with a regenerated man: with him they come and go on an advancing tide, and every coming is a progression of fullness Godward.

Prayer.—Dear Lord and Master, we are thine and we want to be thine that our hearts may consciously progress daily toward thy glorious fullness. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GOD'S WORKMANSHIP.

"For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them."—Eph. 2:10.

This is a good answer to the oft-recurring question, "What are we intended for anyway?" "What is God's purpose for us?" How beautifully God's word answers our questions! How slow we are to search his word for the answer to our questions!

If we are elevated or refined, it is because we (or others who have contributed to our well-being) have taken advantage of God's care for us.

The teaching of God's word is that men and women are not the sole architects of their own character—the Supreme Architect is God. We are what we are by a continuous series of Divine interpositions, heavenly compulsions and impulses, ceaseless energies that complete Divine symmetry and heavenly designs.

The success of a ship is dependent not only upon perfect worthy construction, but also upon every man of the crew doing his duty, and every part from engine to pilot house functioning perfectly.

No ship moves toward its destination until it has received within its furnace the fires that produce the power, and no man moves heavenward until he receives in his heart the Holy Spirit, and every part of his being functions toward that end. This was the reason Paul asked, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"

Prayer.—Our Father, make us earnest over religion as we are over worldly affairs. Amen.

THURSDAY.

LIFE LIKE A POEM.

"Thine hands have made me and fashioned me."—Jno. 10:8.

We are told that "Workmanship" signifies "a poem," the idea being that as a poem owes its conception to the singer's intellect and fancy, so a believer in Christ owes his character and standing to God. As a poem means beauty, harmony and truth in rhythmical form, so to be God's true child, among other things, means beauty of character, peaceful, and truthful, all woven together in the rhythm of life. It was this that inspired the poet, C. Jerdan, who wrote:

"Come unto me, O ye children!

And whisper in my ear,

What the birds and winds are singing,

In your sunny atmosphere.

"For what are all our contrivings,

And the wisdom of your books,

When compared with your caresses,

And the goodness of your looks?"

"Ye are better than all the ballads,

That were ever sung or said;

For ye are living poems,

And all the rest are dead."

Prayer.—Our Father, tune our souls to heavenly harmonies so that others who know us may detect thy melodies and heavenly harmonies, amid the clash of those things that conceal it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"CREATED . . . FOR GOOD WORKS."

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father, which is in heaven."—Matt. 5:16.

If we are to believe God's word, good works cannot be our salvation, but it must be the issue of good works—which is the fruit of the consequences of our salvation. We are said to be created for good works just as a tree is created and exists for its fruit. Hence, when good works are undertaken as a means of grace, the true relation is reversed and distorted.

As the roots and the vital sap is to a tree, so is fellowship with our Lord fundamental in our thoughts, words and deeds. To be so rooted and grounded in the Lord brings an ever-increasing power of discernment in Christ and his works, and a super faith by which we apprehend him. Thus, the true Christian appropriates in his actions, little by little, what has been done by the Holy Spirit in him, and gladly recognizes the work which God has called upon him to do. His character is a reflection of the Lord Jesus (though imperfect), which he has gained in the common business of life as he walks in his presence.

Prayer.—O Lord, send thy Spirit beating thy will in our very hearts. May those who know us hear thy truths, see thy ideals of thy kingdom. Amen.

SATURDAY.

LOOK OUT!

"Watch therefore, for ye know not the day nor the hour."—Matt. 25:1-13.

Fire is proverbially the treacherous element. It creeps along hidden ways, it gives no warning, and when it has come to its strength and is ready to declare itself, it has grown to a destructive and conquering power.

For example, a woman sat in her back yard the other day calmly feeding her pet ducks. Behind her, in the kitchen of her new house, the kitchen stove was setting fire to a wood-box filled with paper. Gradually the blaze increased, and swept from room to room. At last a passing motorist saw the fire, and the arrival of the fire apparatus was the woman's first intimation of the conflagration. Her loss was $4,500.

How often Christ bade his followers keep on guard! And how few even of his followers lead sufficiently watchful lives. On guard against temper. On guard against worry. On guard against mean suspicions. On guard against jealousy. On guard against secret sin. There are tongues of fire in our lives, here, there, in many places, ready to spread as fanned by the breath of Satan. If we turn our backs, the flames will run, faster and faster, till all the house of our life is ablaze.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, keep us awake, may we be ever on guard. Lord Jesus, warn us by thy Holy Spirit, that our lives may continue in safety and may never suffer the eternal loss. In thy name. Amen.

DEATH VALLEY ALIVE.

"The wilderness and the dry land shall be glad, and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose."—Isa. 35:1-10.

An Associated Press report tells of the wonderful and unexampled transformation of Death Valley. That fearfully torrid zone in Nevada, one hundred and fifty miles long and ten to thirty-five miles wide, is so far below the sea that no one can live there in the summer, even the lizards and horned toads disappearing, while the parched ground is bare of vegetation.

But this year showers fell on Death Valley for nineteen consecutive days in May, and seeds that had been hidden there for years came suddenly to life, so that the whole valley burst into a riot of gorgeous colors.

This marvel may never happen again in Death Valley, but in the world of spirit it happens constantly. It is always foolish to give up any life as barren and dead, however forbidding it may appear. Let the showers of divine grace fall on it, as in some blessed revival, and seeds of beauty and of goodness planted no one knows how long ago will suddenly spring into loveliness,

WHAT WE DO WHEN WE WORSHIP.

By REV. G. N. EDWARDS,
Circular Church, Charleston, S. C.

"God is Spirit; they that worship him worship him in spirit and truth."—John..
4:24.

Read Psalm 42; Matt. 6; I. Peter 2:1-10.

It is quite plain as we read some parts of the gospels that Jesus intended to teach a religion that should be in sharp contrast to much that passed for religion among his own people and among other nations. They had been taught to revere the law: He taught them to live in a new spirit toward their fellowmen; they had been taught to worship God by offering sacrifices at Jerusalem; he taught them to worship in the privacy of their own hearts; they had looked upon worship as a performance carried on for them by a priest: He taught them to offer the spiritual sacrifice of a willing and humble heart. Devotees of the older religions thought to win favor with God for their long prayers and with conspicuous gifts. Jesus taught a prayer of the briefest words and praised the smallest gift in the temple above those that were given lavishly from the superfluity of the kivers or with a selfish purpose.

Jesus honored the law and worshipped in the temple himself, but he set little value on external obedience to an external law, and he looked forward to the abolition of the temple and its worship without and loss to real religion. Since God is Spirit, worship must be spiritual. "All that was symbolic was to be left behind." The essential thing is not the right place but the right spirit and that spirit must be a genuine sense of God if it is to be no more than the Publican's penitent cry: "God be merciful to me a sinner." Jesus did not absent himself from the synagogue nor despise its ministrations but he lived in the constant presence of God that made worship possible everywhere. So we find him teaching the profoundest truths of religion by a well-side at noonday to a strange woman of alien faith. We also find him spending the night in communion with God alone on the mountain side. The essential thing in worship is to realize the presence of God.

We must also consider worship as contrasted with work. There is a Latin sentence loved by Thomas Carlyle that says, "To labor is to pray." Jesus said, "Let your light so shine that men may see your good works and glorify your Father." He also took pains to say that "not everyone that said to him 'Lord, Lord' should enter the kingdom of heaven, but he that did the will of God." Good works are indeed a true testimony of the genuineness of our religion but when we work we think primarily of our work and when we worship we think of God. The worship may well inspire our work. It is a kind of conference with the chief workman to learn his plans. Worship is more than that; it expresses our admiration, our reverence, and gratitude toward the Chief. Worship humbles the soul before the holiness of God and fills the empty heart with new love and power. Work exercises the soul as it meets the difficulties of living. It is our contribution to the kingdom. Work and worship go side by side. Neither can take the place of the other.

Worship and meditation lie close together but worship is something more. Meditation is communion with oneself, worship is communion with God. Meditation may be thought about divinity, but the worshiper meets the divine One, speaks in the second person and expects an answer. Meditation is the mood of the hymn beginning.

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire
Uttered or unexpressed;
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast."

Worship is the voice of the hymn beginning.

"My faith looks up to thee,
Thou Lamb of Calvary, Saviour divine;
Now hear me while I pray,
Take all my guilt away,
O let me from this day
Be wholly thine."

Meditation speaks in the words of the First Psalm: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in in the counsel of the ungodly." Worship bursts forth in the eager words of the 42nd Psalm: "As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God . . . O my God, my soul is cast down within me; therefore, do I remember thee." One runs into the other and back again as the 23rd Psalm begins meditatively: "The Lord is my shepherd, he restoreth my soul, he maketh me to walk in paths of righteousness . . . then in the "Valley of the shadow of death," the thinker becomes worshipper and cries out, "thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me."

The worshipper is expectant, confident. The thinker is reminiscent, didactic. He deals with memories, ideas, and arguments. The worshipper waits upon God. He brings a confession and seeks ablution. He comes in the dark seeking light. He comes with heart full of gratitude and seeks to give expression of his feelings to his Lord.

We may as well ask ourselves, do we really worship? Is it possible to worship in a congregation or must we go apart by ourselves?

There must be a great deal of false or pretended worship not merely false in the sense of being directed to false or nonexistent gods, but false in the sense that it is done with a view chiefly to people about us who see us worship. Like the ancient Pharisees who prayed in the synagogues to be seen of men, it is false worship when we pretend to pray, using words with no attention to their meaning, thinking not of God but of how it sounds to our neighbor, thinking of what kind of an impression we make. Jesus said to that Samaritan woman that she worshipped she knew not what. Can it be said of us? Worship is not physical performance for magical benefits. True worshippers worship the Father in spirit and in truth.

How can we be genuine when we worship? There are a few simple rules.

First, we must withdraw our attention from external sounds, sights and distracting thoughts. A church is constructed so as to suggest worship. Architecturally it should be both restful and uplifting. If it has symbolism it should be the symbolism of faith. It is quite possible, however, that decorations, pictures and various features become so complicated and so challenging to the eye that they divert the worship to art. But the main external hindrance comes from the people themselves. A church filled with the buzz of conversation is no place to worship God. Those who come to church to see who else has come or to see who has a new hat or gown and how it is made will scarcely think of the church as a holy place. If there has been steady talk

Dear Friends:

The Octagon Soap people mailed us a check for $165.00 for the soap coupons we had already mailed in to make the first payment on our refrigerating plant for our dairy. The company we bought it from has agreed to put the plant in and let the little children have the benefit of its use during the hot summer months, and let us pay for it as we collect soap wrappers. We appreciate this kind offer. We have faith in our people, and as this is such a unique plan to supply this real need without it costing any one a penny we feel sure our people will rally to our request. We are depending on our good women to put this across for us.

We have tested all kinds of soap in our institution, and have found Octagon Soap to be as economical as any to be had.

We have received up to date 43,000 soap wrappers. We had hoped to reach 50,000 by June 1st, but did not quite reach it. Now let us put forth a big effort during the month of June and see if we cannot reach the 75,000 mark by July 1st.

I feel sure if everyone will put forth a little effort, it can be done. Every little boy and girl can have a part in collecting Octagon soap wrappers to help the little orphan children in the Christian Orphanage.

Ask your neighbor for some—tell them you wish to send them to the Orphanage. Let everybody get busy—now!

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

what a change, when nothing else avails, he offers himself as a bondsman that Benjamin may go free, for Judah declared that if he should return to his father without the boy, "when he seeth not that the lad is with us, then will he die: and thy servant will bring down the gray hairs of thy servant our father with sorrow to the grave."

Up to this time Joseph had dealt with his brothers as utter strangers and foreigners, speaking to them through interpreters. But no longer could he control himself, so clearing the room of his attendants, he broke down and wept. Then he uttered the startling words: "I am Joseph, your brother." Wonder and amazement held them speechless, and terror again gripped their hearts. What penalty would he demand for their treatment of him. Soon, however, they were set at ease. They had been tried and had stood Joseph's test. Joseph was ready to forgive, and he said unto them, "Come near to me, I pray you." God tries us, but when the trying is past, we can hear his voice saying, "Come unto me and I will give you rest."

THE GUIDING HAND.

When Stanley was about to cross Africa for the first time, many of the strong men of his party burst into tears as they set out. They were not cowardly, but they were overcome by the thought of the terrific hardships which they knew lay before them.

Every human life is a journey as difficult and perilous; and we might well shrink from it, had we no Guide. What absolute madness it is to set out alone!

I have read the story of a conceited young captain who would not wait off the shore for a pilot to come on board, to take him through the narrows of the harbor. "I am my own pilot," was the proud reply to all remonstrances, and he promised to be in the harbor by daybreak. He was cast ashore, dead, amid the fragments of his wrecked vessel. Such has been the fate of many a man who would be his own pilot amid the rocks and shoals of life.

When travelers climb dangerous places in the Alps, they are fastened to their guide. They have become a part of him. They may slip and fall, but he will not. So may we be bound to our omnipotent Guide; and, thus united with wisdom and security, we may travel through life without a tremor of fear.—Amos R. Wells.

Have the courage to keep on keeping while others are quitting. They leave more opportunities for you.—Van Amburgh.

in an undertone about the week's events up to the time the minister offers the invocation there is a serious barrier in the mind to any spiritual impressions. One should compose one's mind to worship before the actual service begins. There may be other things to see and hear but one can withdraw his attention to his own thoughts.

Especially does one need to control his own thoughts. Worship means severe concentration. To fix one's mind on the invisible means to close one's eyes to the visible and hold one's thought to the suggestions of the word of God, the hymn of the prayer and the music so far as these stir the feelings of love, adoration and holy awe.

There is a kind of mental work about worship. It is not merely waiting in idleness for impressions. Listlessness passes over very easily into inattention. "People forget that the worship of the church is not made for the congregation, but by it." The atmosphere of worship is a joint creation of the congregation, the choir and the minister. We speak of a "waiting congregation." Waiting for what? For the minister to begin, for the choir to sing? Not at all. Waiting for the Spirit of God to move the silent hearts of the people. We read of Jesus that he could not do many mighty works in Nazareth because of their unbelief. Neither can the Spirit of God move mightily upon a congregation that does not believe in him, which has not so much as heard that there is any Holy Spirit.

When we worship there is doubtless nothing quite so important as that we should be silent. We need to hear reverberating through our souls the ancient command, "Be still and know that I am God." The first step is the initial silence. "In quietness and confidence shall be my strength." Pray quietly by yourself in your seat. Pray for the stranger who may come this day into the sanctuary. Pray for those you know. Use the prayers you may find in the seat. Affirm your faith in God. There should also be places for silence in the program of worship. We have become obsessed with the idea that there must be "something doing," that is, something being said or sung every instant of the service. We can well learn of our Quaker brethren to keep still, and let the Spirit move us. In a seldom used hymn of Charles Wesley, are these words:

"From the world of sin, and noise,
And hurr, I withdraw,
For the small and inward voice
I wait with humble awe;
Silent am I now and still
Dare not in thy presence move;
To my waiting soul reveal
The secret of thy love."

So we may well provide places for silence as the service moves on. Part of the pastoral prayer might be silent prayer and at the close of the service there may well be a pause when the Spirit may speak to us instead of the preacher.

In the very heart of the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus embodied his instructions on worship dealing briefly with almsgiving, prayer and fasting. He said that each of these should be done without ostentation. And each time he adds "Your Father who seeth in secret shall reward you." If you look for popular approbation you can get it, but that is all you will get. God cannot be deceived. He must be worshipped in spirit and truth.

Such worshippers he is seeking. There is a reciprocity about worship which sometimes we seem to be unaware of. We act and feel as if it were a mere performance of ours to be gone through with as is customary and proper. We might as well be still worshipping we know not what on Mt. Gerizim with the Samaritans.

To worship is to be clasped to the heart of God, to feel that "eternal God is thy refuge, and that underneath are the everlasting arms." For us to worship is to seek, to find, to know, and to love the Infinite Companion. If for us the "Great Companion" is dead, we cannot worship. Faith is the bond between our spirit and God. Worship is using that bond to commune with him.

and the entire life will be gloriously transformed. Nor we need fear, as in the geographical Death Valley, that the transformation will be less than permanent.

Prayer—Holy Spirit of all vitality and of all happy blossoming, enter our lives, we pray thee, and cause our wilderness to be glad and our desert to blossom as the rose. Amen.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

OBITUARIES.

MATTHEWS.

In the death of Sam W. Matthews, Jr., on March 29, 1932, from blood poisoning, the entire Shallow Well community suffered a shock and great loss.

Sam was a manly little fellow, 5 years of age and apparently in perfect health, until three days before his death.

He was loved by all who knew him as was evidenced by the throng that attended his funeral.

He is survived by his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Matthews, one sister, three half-sisters and two half-brothers.

Services were conducted from Shallow Well by the writer.

May God comfort the bereaved.

DR. POLING ON THE DIGEST POLL.

The following review of the balloting conducted by the "Literary Digest" (also known as "The Liquor Digest") is a copy of a postal telegram sent by Dr. Poling to the "New York Times." It is reported from the "Allied News":

"The real significance of the recently closed Literary Digest poll lies in the fact that when compared with the poll immediately preceding it shows little change in sentiment. The final vote is 3,431,877 for repeal as against 1,236,066 for continuance. Combining the 1930 poll for modification and repeal, which must be done for comparison purposes, since modification did not figure in the latest poll, the vote against the Eighteenth Amendment was 3,342,366, and the vote for enforcement 1,464,098. In the poll just closed the wets registered a gain of only 89,511, and the drys a loss of 227,438. But there is a loss in the total number of votes cast this year of 137,927. Manifestly the dry loss was not a wet gain. Equally significant is the fact that three out of four receiving ballots did not return them. Equally important it is that deductions made from this poll should consider the approximately 75 per cent not voting as well as the 25 per cent voting. Certainly, comparisons already made indicate a distinct trend among drys not to vote. It was generally conceded that the wets had made gains since the last Literary Digest poll. It is little short of amazing that the present poll does not show this fact. Has wet sentiment been over-emphasized? If the Literary Digest poll is a correct gauge then the wets have made negligible progress and the dry defense has tightened. Unmistakably the dry defense has tightened. "Literary Digest" is to be commended for the manner in which the poll has been conducted."

Dr. Booker Against Sunday Movie Idea.—

A suggestion that local theater owners set aside one day or one night a week and give their proceeds to aid the needy unemployed was made by Dr. George E. Booker, pastor of Centenary M. E. Church, Richmond, Va., in a recent sermon, in which he expressed emphatic opposition to Sunday movies to raise funds for the unemployed.

The Soldiers' Bonus.—

There are two sides to every question, and we believe that those who are advocating the payment of the balance of the bonus at the present time are honest in their conviction. Many ex-soldiers have marched upon Washington in an effort to impress Congress with their desires, and now they are practically without food. The situation is one fraught with distress. Yet would the country at large be able to stand the shock which would be caused by the payment of this large sum from our already depleted treasury? It is certain that the result would be to retard business recovery at least for a time. If Congress is in session on the 15th of this month, the question is to be put to a vote, and we do not envy our Congressmen, no matter on which side they may stand.

United States of Soviet Russia or?—

"Napoleon is said to have predicted," says Count Alexander Hoyos in The Contemporary Review, "that Europe would either be Russian or American before a hundred years were over. He did not realize what Soviet Russia would be. Had he done so the new impression would probably have confirmed this view, but would also have shown him that the difference between Russia and America is slowly losing its deeper shades. Much can be classed under the same heading in the two countries."—The Christian World, London. The deeper import of this question is whether America is to be Russianized or Russia to be Americanized. A snap of the finger is no answer. America does not want to impose its life or culture on anybody else, but America must remain America or it will be night in the world. There is a way to do this, and it is by the practice of the principles that made the nation in the first place.—Exchange.

Congressman French and War.—

In a speech delivered in the House of Representatives, Honorable Burton L. French, of Idaho, said some very sensible things. Among the rest he declared: "As we look to the Orient and again to Geneva there are forced upon our minds the lessons of the World War and what that cataclysm meant. We may now take stock. The treaties that concluded the war were drafted upon the basis that certain nations were victors and certain other nations were vanquished. As a matter of fact, no nations were victors. No principle of righteousness was established that ought to have been established by the intelligent populations of the several nations speaking through their chosen public officials about the conference table. The World War took its toll in death upon the battlefield and in hospitals by approximately 11,000,000 human lives. God alone can tell the loss of life and misery and sacrifice and want borne by those who were left at home." These are truthful words and are all the more timely because of the difficult situation which the Japanese militarists are now creating for the rest of the world. We must not allow the war lords in any one country to stampede us into a repetition of the folly of 1914.—Christian-Evangelist.

Carolina Goes Wet?—

The following from an editorial in the Richmond Times Dispatch: "In what Woodrow Wilson was wont to describe as a 'solemn referendum,' prohibition, as a national policy, collapsed in North Carolina before the candidacy of Robert R. Reynolds, a rather showy young man who entered the lists for the Democratic nomination to the United States Senate. His principal opponent was Cameron Morrison, now serving the unexpired term of the late Lee Overman. Morrison, formerly governor of North Carolina, is a staunch dry. The most comprehensive speech he has made in the Senate dealt with the question of prohibition," being an onslaught against the Raskob Liquor Control (?) Plan. THE SUN realizes the fact that there were other considerations entering into the race, and it also realizes that if Reynolds is nominated for the long term by a majority of 11,000 as present figures seem to indicate, then Morrison will be returned for the short term by a majority of 5,000 or more. Yet, we raise the question, whether or not the dries of North Carolina and other States as well are not growing careless as time passes. The question of prohibition is a question of education. It is hard for the younger generation to visualize conditions as they were before the country went dry.

Biggest Peace-Time Tax Bill Becomes Law.—

After months of vacillation and delay, the most drastic tax bill that this country has ever known in peace times, became law when President Hoover signed the bill at 5:00 P. M., on Tuesday of this week. After the compromise bill had been passed by the House, it was finally adopted by the Senate by a vote of 46 to 35. Eleven Republicans and twenty-four Democrats voted against the measure, which will reach into the pockets of every person in the entire country in an effort to balance the National Government's budget for the coming year. Even with the great increase in taxes this budget balancing will only be possible by the greatest economy on the part of the Government. Indeed, the tax law carries with it several conditions governing reductions in government expenditures. Well might our country take a page from the story in Genesis, where Pharaoh was enabled by the quality of leadership which Joseph displayed, to prepare for the lean years while the fat ones were upon him. How vastly easier it would have been for our country to have raised taxes when times were good. It might even be enabled to assist in the recovery of business by lowering them. The Bible has many lessons that might well be learned by business of today if it will but take the time to consider them.

The Kung Li Hui Would Eradicate War.—

The Kung Li Hui, or National Christian Church of North China, voted at its annual meeting in April, which was held at Techow, Shantung, to give their utmost support to the eradication of war and the establishment of world peace. The action taken at Techow, as reported in English, was: "We firmly believe that war is sin; that it is wholly un-Christian. But at the present time many people feel that patriotism can create prosperity and strength in a nation, and hence, in the name of self-defense, are increasing their armaments, ignoring the fact that this method is not only impotent to assure prosperity and strength for their own country, but is the source of jealousy, fear and hatred, and the cause of present international difficulties. We followers of Christ are deeply convinced that force cannot overcome justice. International strife cannot be settled by force but must be settled by understanding, cooperation, righteousness, justice and peaceful methods. We Chinese Christians, in the past have not exerted to the full our united efforts in behalf of internal harmony and international friendship. We regretfully acknowledge this fact. But we are now convinced of the truth of your statement that 'the union of Christian people in the movement for peace will result in the abolition of war.' As sister churches of Jesus Christ, we have already found deep joy in that fellowship. We desire now to unite with you in opposition to war and in eradicating all that leads to strife. In the future may we as children of one Father work together in promoting Christ's kingdom of love." The foregoing from the Kung Li Hui was signed by Li Ju-Sung and Hugh W. Hubbard, co-chairman of its council. Churches of the Kung Li Hui were founded by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, which sent its first workers to North China in 1860, following the Tientsin treaties of 1858. Institutions affiliated with the Kung Li Hui include Yenching University, at Peiping, which reports 809 students of college rank, and is the largest university in China. The New York Congregational and Christian Ministers' Federation has a membership of 540.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Valley Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention meets with Timber Ridge Church, Rev. A. W. Andes, pastor, Thursday and Friday, June 16th and 17th. A large delegation and attendance are expected.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Western North Carolina Conference meets with Biscoe Church, Tuesday after the first Sunday in July. Bro. George T. Gunter, Route No. 1, Ramseur, N. C., is president and is anxious that the schools and societies all elect delegates and attend the Convention, which promises to be a good one. The program is in preparation.

Our sympathy is extended to Dr. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, N. C., whose sister, Mrs. N. A. Dowdy, was claimed by death at her home in Durham, May 30th. The deceased was a member of the Durham Christian Church, and the pastor, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, conducted the funeral on Tuesday, May 31st. The deceased was sixty-seven years old, and besides Dr. Wicker, leaves a husband and children to lament her decease.

Rev. A. R. Flowers is to be the speaker at the State League Convention of the Young People's work of the Freewill Baptist Church, at Shady Grove, near Dunn, N. C., July 3rd and 4th. Bro. Flowers writes: "These young people would be glad to have the presence and the cooperation of the young people of Christian Churches who are within reach. True, this Convention is under the auspices of the Freewill Baptist Church, but the work is interdenominational."

We express our sympathy to our neighbors, Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Apple, Elon College, in the loss by death of Mrs. Apple's father, Brother C. G. Jeffreys, at his home in the Long's Chapel neighborhood, Alamance County, N. C., May 30. The funeral was conducted from Long's Chapel by Revs. J. S. Jones and the pastor, Dr. P. H. Fleming, the interment being in Long's Chapel Cemetery. Brother Jeffreys was a good citizen and a Christian father, whose going away at the age of fifty-seven is lamented.

Mr. W. B. Truitt, Greensboro, N. C., president, is anxious that all Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference take note of the annual session of the Convention, which is to be held this year with Union Church, Union Ridge, N. C., Thursday and Friday, June 23rd and 24th, and that all schools and societies elect delegates who will attend. Bro. Truitt hopes and is working for the best Convention yet, and this means much, for the one a year ago seemed to reach the high-water mark in attendance and enthusiasm.

Rev. T. E. White, a former member of the faculty of Elon College and resident of the college community, moved with his family to Sanford, N. C., last week. Bro. White, before coming to Elon, resided at Sanford and was engaged in the pastorate, to which we understand it is his purpose to return when there are churches needing and requesting his services as preacher and pastor. Bro. White was beloved in the pastorate and has served his calling well, both in the pulpit and as teacher at Elon. Any church may consider itself fortunate that secures Rev. T. E. White as pastor and leader.

Rev. Carl E. Gerringer, pastor, Wakefield, Va., preached the Baccalaureate Sermon before the high school of Wakefield on May 22nd, and on June 5th, gave a Memorial address at Millfield Baptist Church. The parsonage at Wakefield has recently been re-painted and $60.00 worth of shrubbery has been planted about the parsonage, $80.00 worth about the Wakefield Church, and $40.00 worth about the Ivor Church. It is a sign of interest as well as a symbol of care for a church that the church grounds in many sections are being beautified with shrubbery. Bro. Gerringer hopes to attend the Pastor's Institute at Chicago Theological Seminary August 1st to 7th.

An interested alumnus, and one of our faithful pastors, who attended the recent Commencement, writing personally, expresses a sentiment in which we feel that hundreds of others share: "It has been a long time since I enjoyed a Commencement at Elon as I did the last one. I have longed to see some way out of the present condition of the college, and when I saw and felt the spirit manifested in the Greater Elon Program, there seemed to come a guarantee that the institution is to be rescued. Certainly the loyalty to the college will not fail and the institution that has done so much for the church and its constituency will be made safe in this time of distress."

Here is a fact worth passing on to SUN readers. It comes by way of a recent Commencement speaker, Dr. B. C. Clausen, at Meredith College, Raleigh, in his plea that we Americans, even now, "quit crying out loud," and instead employ a little courage in facing our situation, which situation must look glorious to the world outside of America. To quote: "Do you realize that at the present depth of our depression the people of America are at a higher level of material comfort than any other nation of the world has ever been at the height of its prosperity?" he asked. "Do you realize that at the very depth of our depression, the average per capita buying power of the American citizen is six times that of the average citizen of Russia? We must stop crying out loud."

Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, Washington, D. C., president of the Blue Ridge Missionary Education Conference, calls attention to the Conference at Blue Ridge, meeting June 28th to July 6th, inclusive. The stated purpose of the Conference is "Christian Character Through Christian Leadership." Dr. Bloom feels that a good program has been arranged and the expense of the meeting is moderate. The registration fee is $5.00, and if one wishes reservation, one should send this fee to Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, No. 933 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C. Board and lodging, nine-day basis, two in a room, each $25.00. Room with private bath, two in a room, each $35.75. It would be difficult to find in all the South a more beautiful spot than Blue Ridge out from the railway station, Black Mountain, N. C.

A special emergency campaign committee of the Southern Baptist Convention meeting in Atlanta, Ga., recently adopted "plans for raising $300,000.00 for Home and Foreign Mission funds in the Convention." The fund to be raised is to be divided on the basis of 36-3|5 per cent for Home Missions, the remainder for Foreign Missions. June 29th was fixed as the date for this offering which the Baptists hope and plan to raise in one day. The emergency campaign was necessary to prevent serious cuts in the work of Home and Foreign Missions. All churches in fact are finding it necessary to make special efforts to prevent tragic results in carrying on the work of the kingdom. Our Lord saw fit to finance his kingdom through self-denial, and surely we may practice self-denial now, that in our economic distress we may have spiritual enrichment and progress.

The following from the Greensboro Daily News of June 1st, is exceedingly gratifying to his many friends of Elon College and community. Prof. McAdams is a son of our townsman, Deacon J. C. McAdams, and is one of Elon's good graduates, who, as will be seen, like many others of her graduates, is reflecting honor and credit upon Alma Mater: "J. Mark McAdams, principal and athletic coach of the North Wilkesboro High School for the past two years, has resigned his position here to become principal of Mountain Park Institute, an endowment high school located near Elkin. Before coming to North Wilkesboro, Professor McAdams was principal of Reidsville High School. Since coming to this city he has made an enviable record as a school official and athletic coach and has taken an active part in civic life. Among his accomplishments here was his help in organizing the Boy Scouts, serving as Scout Commissioner and a member of the Scout Central Committee. He has been a valued member of the North Wilkesboro Kiwanis Club.

The Chattanooga Times, Chattanooga, Tenn., Monday, May 30th, carries a cut of Dr. C. Rexford Raymond with a liberal print of his annual Memorial Day sermon Sunday morning, May 29th. The opening paragraphs of it reveal the soul and spirit of the very timely sermon: "Let this be our word of Scripture this Memorial Day: 'Apart from us, these heroes of our American history, may not be made perfect.' These heroic dead will have died in vain, if we fail to carry on in our day. The Jew who wrote that epistle was inspired and, therefore, he could see God in Hebrew history. The inspired American can see God in American history. Our heroic dead throw to us the torch of their flaming patriotism. Let us not spoil their Memorial Day. It may be easy to spoil the day. We may spoil it by making it an occasion to keep old hates alive. Some of us are the sons and daughters of the American Revolution. Shall we honor our ancestors by hating England? The veterans of the sixties would be the first to declare that they are not honored by hatred for North or South."

Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro; Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, and Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, committee of the board on our work in Carroll County, attended the services at Elk Spur, at 11:00 A. M., and at Rocky Ford, 2:30 P. M., Sunday, May 29th, to introduce and help install Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom, who now reside in our parsonage at Elk Spur, and who are in charge of the work. The audiences at both churches were large, well behaved and attentive, and all seemed very happy, indeed, that a preacher and his wife had come to live in their midst. Brother and Sister Grissom feel that they have taken up residence with their neighbors, are there to serve and to help the community in any way that wisdom may direct and opportunity may suggest. The people of Elk Spur and Rocky Ford are feeling more and more that they are one with us, sharing our common tasks and having a part in our united fellowship and activities. Mr. and Mrs. Grissom were as happy in the services Sunday, with the people of the community, as the people were to have them. We predict that they will be co-workers together in community betterment and building up the kingdom of righteousness.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

REV. CHARLES W. SMITH, the new pastor, found that there were not seats enough in the Garden City, Ala., Church to hold the audience at his last service there.

MRS. A. C. NELSON, efficient co-worker of Rev. A. C. Nelson in the larger parish near Clanton, Ala., is much improved and is at home again after undergoing a serious surgical operation in Montgomery.

REV. CHARLES DeW. BROWER, A. M., pastor of the Congregational Church at Interlachen, Fla., preached the Baccalaureate Sermon at Fessenden Academy on Sunday, May 29th. Montgomery.

MRS. E. W. BUTLER accompanied Miss Marguerite Davison on her trip to Pleasant Hill, Tenn., and was able to get an impression of Pleasant Hill, Grandview, Soddy, Daisy and Chattanooga on this excursion. Mrs. Butler always brings friendliness and good cheer.

MANY CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES are incorporated to meet the requirements of the Congregational Church Building Society. In Alabama the churches can be incorporated by the Judges of the Probate Counties, and do not need to consult the Secretary of State, as in other states. The last Alabama church to become incorporated is Rock Springs Church, near Haleyville.

THE WOMANS' GUILD of the Congregational Community Church of Birmingham has been most active in its Monday noon meetings. At the last one about fifty ladies spent an hour under the leadership of a Bible teacher, then had their business meeting and luncheon. The Guild has collected 150 books to take to Thorsby Institute as an addition to its library, with more yet to come.

THE CONGREGATIONAL COMMUNITY CHURCH of Birmingham, Ala., continues to attract large crowds. About half of the gatherings morning and night are members and the balance visitors. Members are steadily coming into the new church. The church is preparing for the lean financial days of vacation. One of the devices is the distribution of 400 glass penny barrels.

DAVID WINFIELD SHEPHERD ORDAINED.

David Winfield Shepherd was ordained to the ministry of the gospel of Christ at Columbus, Ga., in the United Christian-Congregational Church, on Thursday, May 19, 1932.

The Moderator of the Ordaining Council presided at the ordination service. Invocation was made by Bro. A. W. Stone, pastor of the Oak Hill Congregational Church, Millersville, Ala. The scripture was read by Bro. J. R. Prince, who has been assisting Mr. Shepherd in his double parish. Dr. W. J. Campbell, president of the Congregational Foundation in the School of Religion of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., preached the sermon. It was timely, thoughtful, personal and earnest—a fine message for the church and ministry. Rev. J. D. Dollar, pastor of the Lanett, Ala., Christian Church, and president of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference, made the ordaining prayer. Alongside the Christian and Congregational ministers whose hands were placed on the head of the candidate, was Rev. L. A. Henderson, pastor of the Rose Hill Baptist Church of Columbus, Ga., and president of the Ministerial Association. The right hand of fellowship was given to the newly ordained minister for the Christian Church by Rev. H. M. Gray, pastor of the Langdale, Ala., Christian Church, Richland, Ga., Christian Church, and Mt. Olive, Ala., Congregational Church, and for the Congregationalists by Rev. C. W. Smith, pastor of the Garden City and Mountain Grove Congregational Churches.

Rev. Lawrence L. Stanley, of the Barnesville larger parish of Congregational Churches, gave a fine charge to the pastor. The charges to the congregations were given by Conference Superintendent M. J. Sweet and Conference Superintendent F. P. Ensminger. The exercises were well attended.

In the business meeting of the Council, which was held in the afternoon in the Phenix City Church, ten of the fourteen churches which had been called to the Council and three of the seven individuals were on hand. The churches asking the ordination were strong in the recommendation of their pastor. He presented an excellent paper and it was unanimously voted to ordain him. The candidate gave this as "My Purpose":

"I expect to devote my time and life to the promotion of good will among men; to the building up of Christ's Kingdom in the hearts of men; to magnify principles of Christianity in United Christian-Congregational Churches."

He further said:

"Knowing that I have a divine commission behind me, being sent of God, a divine summons before me, being the call of God; and a divine conviction within, which is wrought of God, it is my purpose to give my best in the furtherance of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I trust that I may be used in some to better the lives of people and help them to inculcate the principles of Jesus in their lives. Whatever groups there shall be under my care, I hope to bring to them the brotherhood of man—which means unity in service, and the Fatherhood of God—which makes for consecration.

"Having accepted Jesus Christ and his teachings, I hope to enable others to follow him. Believing in the Holy Scriptures, I shall endeavor to preach it in its fullest and most unadulterated form, as I conceive it. Realizing that the church is founded upon Christian principles, I shall attempt to strengthen those with whom I work."

"RELIGION AND LIFE TODAY."

The above is the title of a little booklet of sermons published by Dr. J. Delman Kuykendall, pastor of Plymouth Church, Coconut Grove, Fla. As the author says in the Foreword, "It is an attempt to interpret some of the teachings of Jesus and the Decalogue in the light of modern knowledge and common sense, in the hope that it may be helpful to some in living a truly religious life in the present perplexing period."

Dr. Kuykendall is a thorough student of the modern philosophy and thought and comes to his task equipped not only with a studious mind but also with broad human sympathies, rich insights and a fine literary style. The following titles give something of the scope and character of the book: "The Modern Mind and Mood," "The Function of Religion." ("Religion does not demand either asceticism or a rigid Puritanism. It does demand that all of life's activities shall be put upon the scales of life's highest and best purposes. It does demand that life shall be evaluated in accordance with its total purposes, and not in accordance with monetary desire.") "A New Decalogue," a striking interpretation of the Ten Commandments. "The Impossible Gospel," an equally striking interpretation of the Sermon on the Mount. "The Luminous Personality," "The Larger Gospel." ("Abundant life lies out beyond the margin of the elemental needs.") "Treasure Trove." ("Lay not up for yourself treasure on earth.") "The Basis of Judgment," "The Shining Narrow Way." ("Religion is nothing other than that which turns the faces of men toward God and good, and which sets guideposts along the path upon which men must go. Religion is essential to life today, if life is to be a shining way.")

Dr. Kuykendall learned the printing trade as a youth and now it is his avocation. Tucked away in one of the rooms of the cloister of this beautiful church is a printing press, from which comes many things under the imprint of "The Cloister Press." This little book was printed by the pastor himself and is beautifully done. They sell for 50c a copy, and can be had by addressing the Cloister Press, Coconut Grove, Fla.

THORSBY COMMENCEMENT.

Thorsby Institute celebrated Sunday, May 22, as Baccalaureate Sunday, the sermon being delivered by Rev. J. W. Jones, pastor of the Baptist Church. On Thursday, May 26th, Commencement Day, the Ladies' Guild, which is composed of the women of the town irrespective of denomination, furnished the dinner which followed the Commencement exercises. The Institute has had the largest attendance in its history this year. The graduating class was also the largest, consisting of fourteen young women and seven young men. Two of the latter, Donald Long and Gerald Smith, are ministers' sons. The latter is preparing for the ministry and expecting to enter Piedmont College next year.

The two ranking students in the class were granted tuition scholarships in Piedmont College. They had the honor of reading essays at the Commencement exercises. The music furnished by the Girls' Glee Club and Chorus was especially good. Twenty-two prizes were awarded to students who had records of perfect attendance and unvarying punctuality at classes through the year.

The Commencement address was delivered by Dr. Trevor Mordecai, pastor of the Congregational Community Church of Birmingham. This church and the Institute have formed a fine incooperative friendship.

A DIAMOND ANNIVERSARY.

The Nebraska Congregational Conference observed its diamond anniversary, April 28th to May 1st, in Fremont, which was considered quite fitting, since in that place was held their first annual meeting in the state, and where eight notable conferences had gathered in the succeeding years. Also since 1932 is the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Fremont Congregational Church, the oldest in the city, the choice of the place is the more appropriate. "Nothing but the soil in Fremont," says Rev. C. R. Lichte, "is older than the Congregational Church." Its origin was in the days of the sod house and the lurking Indians. Rev. C. S. Patton, moderator of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, and President Lucius Porter of Yen-ching University, Peiping, China, were guests.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

Those who say that the church school is no longer needed, reckon little with actual facts. In the first place, the church colleges enroll, and carry to graduation, over half the number of students entering college. That is to say, if church colleges were to close their doors, taxes for higher education would have to be more than doubled in order to accommodate the present college population, to say nothing of the increasing population and of the vast appropriations that would have to be made to enlarge the equipment of the state-owned institutions for more than twice the number of students they would have. There are those who claim that taxes for higher education and for state institutions are already too heavy. What if the whole burden of higher education were dumped upon the state by the churches? Every dollar we give to our church schools to keep their doors open helps by that much, and more, to keep down tax rates, since the church college operates on a less expensive basis than the state-owned college.

But there is a far larger consideration in the matter of taxes. President Hoover declared, and with good knowledge of his facts, that the small Christian college is "the seed bed of our leadership."

Freedom, real freedom, is born of truth. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." In the small Christian college men and women are brought face to face with truth, which is the source of democracy, of liberty, of true freedom. Here are a few of the contributions that our Christian colleges have made to our democracy, and examples can be named almost indefinitely.

Eight of the Chief Justices of the Supreme Court were college graduates, seven of the eight being graduates from Christian schools. Eighteen of our Presidents have been college graduates, sixteen of the eighteen being graduates of Christian colleges. Two-thirds of the members of our National Congress who have attained national distinction have been graduates of Christian colleges. Of the twenty-five masters of American letters, eighteen were college men, seventeen of the eighteen were graduates of Christian colleges.

This only speaks briefly of contributions that the Christian college has made to the nation's political leadership, and says nothing of that vast host from Christian colleges who have filled our pulpits, occupied places of moral and spiritual leadership, without which our nation would be poor, indeed. The leadership of the church is almost without exception the product of the Christian college.

And now while our country is bankrupt economically, we are driven back by necessity to moral and spiritual resources for recovery. No nation is strong economically that is weak morally. No people are safe financially who are unsafe spiritually. All our economic enterprises and institutions are in sore straits and on the verge of collapse. Along with all these, the Christian college is having a struggle for existence. The one hope of recovery, and the one road to safety, is through the recovery of our faith in God and our reliance upon him. And there is no institution that can help to re-discover and recover this faith as the church, and the church is dependent for its leadership, intellectually, morally, spiritually, upon the church school, the Christian college.

All of which means, that even though self-denial to the limit must be practiced, it is necessary to save and to carry on our church college. Economic failure spells bankruptcy. Moral and spiritual failure means chaos, ruin, death. There is no need in the present economic depression comparable to that need which the Christian college can supply, and so, at all hazards, "this seed bed of our leadership" must be kept inviolate and made safe for the sake of our civilization as well as for the sake of our homes, our state and our church.

J. O. A.

COLLAPSE OF CIVILIZATION.

During the present economic, social and moral stringency, we not infrequently hear it said that civilization is on the verge of collapse. This has led to the inquiry, "What is civilization?" It seems to be a psychological term not easily defined. Recently a writer and statistician has sought to measure civilization and make an index by which the measure of it may be taken and understood. According to this statistician, the first index by which the measure of it may be taken and understood is "per capita wealth of those included in the circle or group of the civilized." Second index, amount of iron and coal consumed per capita. Third index, the number of divorces applied for and secured. Fourth index, the number of violations of law and arrests made per thousand of population. This writer claimed that as we become more highly civilized, there is a necessity for more laws, hence increased number of violations and arrests resulting therefrom. If the above truly tabulate and reveal the standards and measurements of civilization, our country at least seems to be very highly civilized and possibly the sooner the collapse comes the better.

We cannot believe a proper index has been given in the above. Wealth, per capita consumption, law and the violation of law, are not enough. The foundation as well as the superstructure of any true civilization is moral and not economic, spiritual and not material. Unless there is a high sense of morality and a deep sense and realization of things spiritual, divine and eternal, there is not much civilization, neither, indeed, should there be. Material gain, economic practices and pursuits are essential when kept in proper place and subordinated to the higher things of life. The Apostle Paul was telling the world not only of the foundations of a safe civilization, but of its superstructure as well, when he said, "Trust in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy." And he told us moreover how we might become rich in a true sense that makes a person or a civilization secure and great. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ how though he was rich yet for our sakes he became poor that we through his poverty might become rich." But one wiser than Paul gave the foundation of an abiding civilization when he said: "Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."

If our civilization is material, physical, economical only, the sooner it collapses the better for us and for the world. "For other foundations can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus the Christ."

When our state, or society, abolishes or disregards the Ten Commandments, destroys our reverence for the Sabbath, the church and God, overthrows our moral standards, then our state, our social order have lost the right to the claims and definitions of "civilization." J. O. A.

APPLAUDING CRIME.

Is there any wonder that crime is on the increase when the public looks upon criminals approvingly, sometimes with applause? Mayor Walker of New York recently, under investigation by state committee, admitted that he received gifts, very large gifts, from persons who made great gain through franchises granted by the city and its mayor. It was brought out and not refuted that the mayor made (?) profits amounting to hundreds of thousands where he had not invested a penny, and where others gave advice by which he acted, "the others" being those who themselves had profited by the mayor's friendly and favorable attitude. And yet while the mayor was on the witness stand giving this testimony of his own conduct, his only refutation was wisecracks at the attorneys who questioned him, and from time to time during his testimony, damaging as it was, he was liberally applauded by the members of Tammany Hall, in which the mayor is a conspicuous figure and leader. This is no detached example of disregard for the proprieties of the law or of the office with which high officials have been honored. It is rather a revelation of a fact prevalent in our political and national life today. Recently, there was a "beer parade" in New York in which the mayor played no inconspicuous part, cheering and applauding those who were seeking to destroy and make of none effect not only the statute but the constitutional law of the land. What we need is respect for law, reverence for law, since the law has been correctly defined as "the organized virtue of the community state and nation." As long as we make heroes of our law-breakers and express by suffrage confidence in people who unblushingly violate the moral code of their offices, we may expect crime, lawlessness and all the ills that assail society.

Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor, Riverside Church, New York, in his sermon of Sunday, June 5th, according to press reports, said: "If the people of this community, knowing what Judge Seabury has plainly shown about our government, are content to let a man like Mr. Walker remain mayor, we have sunk to the depths that take us from the right to call ourselves citizens any more."

DR. POLING ANNOUNCES RESULTS OF THE NATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

Speaking of the campaign of the Allied Forces for Prohibition, which in the past nine months has reached more than six hundred cities, Dr. Poling said: "Every goal has been reached and the results secured surpass anything that could be foreseen." More than one and one-half millions of men and women have been enrolled by personal signature and more than one thousand local units of voters and Allied Youth have been organized. Millions of pages of free literature have been distributed.

The effect of this campaign has been shown in the primary elections. In the Fort Wayne district where Congressman Hogg was opposed by every newspaper in the city and by the personal campaigning of Col. Stayton, he was renominated by a vote of two to one. The same result was secured for Congressman Cooper in Youngstown. South Dakota, wringing wet in the Digest Poll, nominates its dry ticket with a four-to-one vote. Congressional districts in Pennsylvania, where desperate efforts were made to defeat dry representatives, gave the same returns; and Ohio, widely accepted as a complete prohibition reversal, gave one hundred thousand more votes for the two dry candidates for governor than were cast for the one wet candidate. Ohio is a glaring example of the failure of dry strategy. If we had run-off primaries in the north, Ohio would be another story. Oregon, wet in the recent poll, is just about bone-dry in the recent primaries. The recent three-to-one vote against beer in the U. S. Senate reflects the true feeling of the country.

"Great confusion exists in public thinking because resubmission and referendum are used as synonymous terms or in such a way as to confuse the American voter. Drys are accused of being unwilling to allow the opposition to express itself.

"We are opposed to the so-called national referendum. We are opposed to such a referendum because under the Constitution it is now impossible and because such a referendum is repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution. Only by amendment of Article V of the Constitution could such a referendum be made legally binding. We are opposed to the amendment of Article V on any other basis than for general application to the whole Constitution and to all matters that may arise under it. We are opposed to special privilege for liquor. This referendum question should be settled with a clear understanding that once the principle is established it will apply equally to all personal and property rights now guaranteed by the Constitution. The principle once established would substitute immediate mass action for representative government. The issue is not prohibition, but representative government.

"Resubmission, or rather submission of a repeal resolution is another matter. Whatever the opposition may think of the Eighteenth Amendment, the opposition has no case for repeal unless and until the opposition presents its alternative or alternatives. Negation is not enough. But we grant the right of our opponents to present their substitute to the States and to the people—just as the drys presented the Eighteenth Amendment—under the Constitution and within the law. We shall meet their plan, not by suppression, but on merit in the open. I believe that the country is approaching a recording of sentiment along these general lines. This is our challenge to the opposition: 'You are against the Eighteenth Amendment; what do you want? State your alternative! We shall lay no obstacle in your way to bring it constitutionally to the people. If you have the votes to win, you can win—win as we won!'

"In spite of the depression, the loyalty of the friends of the Eighteenth Amendment has made possible the balancing of our budget. There is no deficit. Our complete final report will be filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

"It is our hope that eventually the unity of the dry forces may be so vitalized that the National Conference or the National Board of Strategy may become our residuary legatee. I shall always work toward this end. In the mean time, continuing leadership will be provided for these local units and for these hundreds of thousands of new recruits.

"Politically, we are non-partisan; but in our constituency we represent all parties and all shades of political opinion. We shall be heard at both national conventions. Our unity is the simple declaration—'We stand for the Eighteenth Amendment and for Liberty with Law.' The spirit in which we have gone forward to complete this intensive campaign of education, enlistment and organization was stated in our first press releases when we said, 'We want to be better Americans than prohibitionists. We believe in the Eighteenth Amendment because we believe in America on the march. Prohibition is not the only issue. On the Eighteenth Amendment we recognize a deep-seated, honest difference of opinion. To the leadership of the opposition we grant the same moral integrity that we claim for ourselves.'

"On this platform a new fighting morale has been developed; prohibition defense has tightened. The wet trend has been stopped and we are on the march!"

WASHINGTON AND TEMPERANCE.

George Washington was an advanced temperance advocate for his day; his name was given to one of the great temperance movements when the Washingtonian Society of total abstinents was formed. From Dr. Benjamin Rush, Washington's medical aide in the Continental Army, came the first scientific ideas resulting in the modern view of alcohol as a narcotic poison.

In Washington's time people drank more whiskey, rum and wine than water, largely because water supplies were lacking. But Washington deplored the result, and one of his letters speaks of liquor as "the source of all evil and the ruin of half the workmen in the country."

Washington was an abstemious man in a day of universal heavy drinking. His views on the liquor question were well known and are clear. He believed firmly that once the drink habit had a man in its grasp the only remedy and the only safety was to take a solemn pledge to abstain from intoxicating drinks of every kind. So well known was Washington's idea of pledge signing, that in Baltimore, Md., in 1840, six men, realizing they were drinking too much, signed a pledge in a barroom, and called themselves "Washingtonians." The movement spread until a half million men signed this Washingtonian pledge.

After Washington was made commander-in-chief of the Revolutionary Forces, he issued as his first general order, July 4, 1775, exactly one year before the Declaration of Independence was signed, "the General most earnestly requires and expects a due observance of those articles of war established for the government of the army which forbid profane cursing, swearing and drinking."

Washington always stood against the sale of liquor to soldiers. Twenty years before, as a commander but 23 years of age, he had had soldiers who were guilty of thieving and drunkenness publicly flogged and he had complained officially of "the great nuisance the number of tippling houses are to the soldiers." He revoked licenses of several liquor dealers and thus incurred the anger of one Lindsay, the liquor and political boss from Washington's own part of Virginia.

In the revolutionary war sales of illicit liquor to soldiers continued to trouble him. After the battle of the Brandywine in spite of Washington's utmost efforts to check it, bootlegging of liquor became such an open scandal that in one county in Maryland, the November court of 1778, fined 30 persons for selling to soldiers without license.

In all of the distress at Valley Forge, with the bootless feet of the soldiers marking the snow with blood, liquor dealers had to be driven away again and again. May 26, 1778, Washington issued an order directing that "a corporal and eight men, with the commissary of each brigade, should be detailed to confiscate the liquors found in the tippling houses in the vicinity of his camp, and also notify the inhabitants or persons living in vicinity of his camp that an unconditional seizure will be made of all liquors they shall presume to sell in the future."

Congress, in 1791, put an excise tax on distilled spirits. The whiskey men of Western Pennsylvania refused to pay it. There was much talk and bravado and many acts of lawlessness. With great patience Washington tried every measure of appeal. But in 1791, when 16,000 persons rebelled, refused to pay the tax, bullied the agents of the government and when the governor of Pennsylvania refused to do his duty, President Washington used what Roosevelt was wont to call "the big stick." If the laws are to be disobeyed with impunity . . . there is an end put at one stroke to republican government. If a minority is suffered to dictate to a majority, there can be no security for life, liberty or property. There was never a single law made that suited every man. If this be a reason for opposition, no law can be executed without force." Surely, Washington's record was clear and forceful—especially for his day. He stood for the enforcement of law.—Mrs. G. B. for W. C. T. U.

PHARAOH'S QUESTION.

There are no other people in the world like Christians. There is no room for any human pride in this statement, for Christians are the workmanship of God, not of man. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:10.) Almost four thousand years ago a great earthly king, Pharaoh of Egypt, asked a searching question. He needed a man to save his empire and the surrounding countries from death by famine; he had come to know Joseph, and he said to his servants, "Can we find such a one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?" (Gen. 41:38.) There is only one answer to that question, and because Pharaoh knew the answer he appointed Joseph. The wisest, most highly educated, most perfectly trained and equipped man on earth today, if the Holy Spirit is not in him, is not to be compared with any child of God on earth—for the Spirit of God is in every believer. Though Joseph lived long before the incarnation, crucifixion, and the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the names Christ and Christian were not then known, yet Joseph as a true child of Abraham was trusting Christ; "Abraham," said the Lord, "rejoiced to see my day: he saw it, and was glad" (John 8:56). The weakest, most foolish human being who has received Christ as Saviour and therefore is indwelt by the Holy Spirit is stronger and wiser than the mightiest of men without God. For "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty" (I Cor. 1:27).

SUFFOLK LETTER.

All-day Memorial services were held at Spring Hill Christian Church, Sussex County, Va., on Sunday, May 29, 1932. Chaplain H. E. Rountree delivered the message in the forenoon and Rev. E. W. Jones, pastor of Franklin Christian Church, delivered the afternoon address. In addition to the local choir, the male quartette of Waverly, rendered effective music. The attendance was large, the cemetery was in fine condition, and flowers on every grave; and Miss Evelyn Richardson, just graduated from Elon College, read a history of Spring Hill Christian Church. Miss Richardson kindly let me have her copy, and with that, and "The Life of Rev. James O'Kelly," by W. E. MacClenny, I am giving a brief history of the historic Spring Hill Church. The importance of this history justifies me in making this letter longer than usual.

SPRING HILL CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The exact date of the organization is not known, but it was "in the early days of the nineteenth century, organized by Rev. Burwell Barrett, an associate of Rev. James O'Kelly. After Burwell Barrett's death, the church weakened until only one member remained, Francis Clary. From that time the building was used by the Methodist Protestants, numerous in that section. This continued until 1849, when the desire for a Christian Church was aroused by Rev. M. B. Barrett, a grandson of Rev. Burwell Barrett, and he found in the records of Sussex County that the church and lot was the property of the Christian Church.

In June, 1850, Rev. M. B. Barrett and Rev. J. I. Hobby reorganized the church with fifteen charter members: John T. Harris, Benj. T. Harris, Henry T. West, Richard C. West, Benjamin Barrett, Stephen Chapel, James G. Harris, Lucy Barrett, L. A. V. Barrett, Hester J. West, Angelina Harris, Patsy West, and Francis Clary, the only member who was a member of the first organization. Rev. M. B. Barrett became pastor and was succeeded by Revs. R. H. Holland, W. H. Boykin, and Thomas Barham. Rev. W. B. Wellons preached for them part of the time during the Civil War. In 1865 Rev. M. B. Barrett became pastor again and remained until 1871. Since 1869 the following have been pastors: Revs. J. T. Whitley, J. P. Barrett, C. A. Apple, J. U. Newman, M. B. Barrett, R. E. Barrett, H. H. Butler, Roger Charnock, J. W. Harrell, R. H. Peel, H. E. Rountree, J. L. Foster, H. E. Truitt, W. C. Hook, and the present pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester.

This church has maintained a Sunday School since 1869, and the first effort to raise Home Mission money in the Eastern Virginia Conference was in the Quarterly Conference of this church. It was the first Sunday School to run all the year; the first to use maps and charts; and the first to furnish conveyance to and from Sunday School to those who had none. Its Sunday School in 1870 averaged 90 per cent through the winter. The real missionary spirit in the South was born in Spring Hill Church, February 13, 1876, when a resolution was passed memorializing the Executive Committee of Eastern Virginia Conference to request the General Convention to launch some plan by which the Church South might bestow a "Thank offering to God for his help during the past century." Herein was born our present missionary movement, the Christian Missionary Association and its auxiliaries. Rev. J. P. Barrett, who was then pastor, preached on and offered the above resolution.

In the seventies a Sunday School was organized by Deacon John T. Harris at Sunny Side, a mile from Waverly, near Coppahunk Spring. A little house was built by the community which was sold to the School Board of Waverly and moved to Waverly. The money was donated to Spring Hill Church May 8, 1880. The Sunny Side Sunday School continued in the same building till 1883, when the Waverly Christian Church was organized with more than 13 members, that number being transferred from Spring Hill October 27, 1883. Others were transferred from Spring Hill to Waverly later. Spring Hill has contributed members to other churches: Union, Burton's Grove, Dendron, and Wakefield. Spring Hill has sent out some of the most important Sunday School workers into other churches. Spring Hill has sent out a member of the Supreme Court of Virginia, Judge Jesse F. West; a Lieutenant-Governor, Junius E. West, and many other useful men and women who were among the faithful in Spring Hill.

The following have served as Secretaries: H. I. West, 1869-1870; C. C. Richardson, 1870-1873; O. H. Baird, 1873-1878; R. I. West, 1878-1895; D. D. Parsons, 1895-1896; C. C. Richardson, 1876-1931; Mrs. E. B. Richardson, present secretary. "The record of Spring Hill is a beautiful history, but between every line is an unwritten story fraught with the power of human experience and glowing with the splendor of hard fought battles and transcendent victories. Her struggles have been hard; her defeats have not been unfelt; her victories have been cumulative, encouraging and inspiring; but in all she has been more than conqueror through our Lord Jesus Christ, who loved us and gave himself for us. The first Memorial service at this church was May 28, 1895.

Pastor F. C. Lester must be proud of his historic charge. W. W. STALEY.

WINDSOR VIRGINIA.

We are traveling down the Twentieth Century Trail at a terrific pace. Today many people live high and fast, without the fear of Almighty God, and are selling Christ, as it were, for monetary pleasures and for seeming riches that pass away as bubbles. My conviction is that our civilization is in danger from devotion to wealth, fame, unwholesome pleasure, and ostentation—from its lack of reverence and its want of righteousness. There is not a nation on earth that spends so much on luxuries, on mere adornment and display as we. The trouble is, we spend dollars for self and pennies for God. No wonder the church, as well as the nation, faces a crisis. In fact, civilization itself is at the crossroads. The time has come for us to first cut down some of our luxuries and self-indulgences, before we talk of limiting our contributions to the support of the church.

In these days of selfishness, self-interest, worldly ambition, religious compromise and independence of God, we seem to forget that Israel lost her glory and greatness by forsaking the old-fashioned things of the Lord. The God of the Hebrews is the same Lord over all, and his eternal Word declares: "But as for them whose heart walketh after their detestable things and their abominations, I will recompense their ways upon their own heads, said the Lord God." (Ezekiel 11:21.) God has not changed, and his methods of dealing with sinful nations have not changed. Not only the sacred Scriptures speak plainly, but the voice of history speaks positively in harmony with the Bible. Sin is a great evil. It is a great demoralizer. It blights, robs, destroys and ruins. The transgression of God's holy laws causes iniquity to be visited on generations of those who forget God, and the mightiest empires fall and the strongest nations disappear when the favor of God, the mighty Creator, Ruler and Lawgiver is withheld. That's why the mighty dynasties of Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar, of Cyrus and of Alexander the Great, of Caesar and Charlemagne have long ago crumbled to atoms. They refused to follow the lofty principles enunciated by the Psalmist and the Prophet. Like stricken hulks, they are strewn upon the shores of Time. Their voices and the Book of Divine Wisdom have said: "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord," stands for just as much today as it did in the days of our illustrious progenitors. The time has come for us to realize that the strength of a nation lies in its spiritual forces, and that our greatness came from the reverence paid to the inspired Scriptures, the observance of the Sabbath Day, family religion and respect for law and order. The foundations of the American Republic were laid in the principles of the Christian faith. It is impossible to substitute other foundations without imperiling the nation. The God of materialism means death—not only from a material standpoint, but that of transcendent importance—the spiritual.

We live in a day when men of boastful learning are denying the supernatural and the miraculous in the sacred Scriptures and in Christianity. There is a growing tendency to make little of the fundamental doctrines of the Lord; to smooth stern denunciations against sin; to give more thought and time to material things, forgetting the more necessary, the spiritual factors, in life. There seems to be abounding righteousness and a great deal of talk about righteousness, but too much of it is Crossless, Bloodless and Christless. It seems to me that the question is: Shall we submit to the idea of a "social gospel" taking the place of the glorious gospel of true repentance, pardon and righteousness? The world never will be saved by legislation. We need to lay the main stress on regeneration in working to save the world. I believe that all true covering of sin is by the atonement made by Christ, the Lamb of God, the Ransomer and Redeemer. The moral pollution of sin can only be removed by the cleansing blood of the Son of God (Rev. 1:5). The blood must be applied, it must be appropriated by faith. Brethren, while the destructive critic, the modernist gives up the true Deliverer, denies him in his redemption work, we must cling closer to him. Let us remember that the cross on which the King of Glory died, is the heart of Christianity. Cut out this heart and Christianity is dead.

Today, as never before, especially when depression reigns on all sides, and the world is trembling and facing a crisis it has not faced before, men and women should renounce all sin and seek God and be saved. Only Jesus can save and satisfy the immortal soul. Loyalty to, and fellowship with Jesus Christ—God-Man—is the hope of the world of our day—of the world of any day. The blessed Holy Son of God, the Founder of Christianity, is the solution of all our political problems, the deliverer from all our social wrongs, humanity's only hope for the international disorders of today, the Saviour from all our sins and sorrows. What we need today is to realize that our risen, glorified Redeemer is not some impersonal figure, but a divine, everlasting friend—our Elder Brother.

Jesus, beloved, walks the streets of your town just as he did those of Jerusalem. "I need men and women like you," says the Man of Galilee.

There are places for men and women today, just as there were in that dim long ago. I want you business men to put me in your business, says the Lord of Glory. I want you men and women to put me in your social life, says the friend of Mary and Martha. Yes, brethren, he is calling you to give yourself to him, with all your sorrows, and with all your misgivings, to be what he wants you to be, and to use your influence for Christianity. More money and more missionaries, that is our greatest need. Remember, nothing is eternal but that which is done for God and others.

It is true that dark days are upon us, but all of this confusion and perplexity in which we find ourselves is entirely of man's doing. We have no right to blame it on our heavenly Father. The trouble is we have forgotten God, and have been following our own ways, rather than his ways. Sin reaps its harvest of sorrow and wickedness, and brings disaster in its train. We must be very careful lest the day come when the same sun that shone so brilliantly upon our rise shall cast its declining rays upon the crumbling monuments of our greatness.

The only hope of improving general conditions today is a "mighty spiritual awakening"; a worldwide revival of Bible religion. The only thing that can give you, dear friends, the peace, the joy and the power that you need is conformity to the beautiful life of our blessed Redeemer. "Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace: thereby good shall come to thee." Trust God, imitate the example of his Son, cultivate his sweet, gentle, sympathetic spirit. Win souls to this friend of sinners, and the present shall be full of comfort, the future bright with hope, and the glory of earth's true Ruler—Jesus Christ—shall be yours.

E. B. WHITE.

ROANOKE, ALABAMA.

Dear Brother Editor:

This being the fifth Sunday, I have attended Commencement exercises at Southern Union College, at 11:00 A. M. Dr. Frank E. Jenkins preached the sermon, and delivered a masterly address. Dr. Mohr read the scripture lesson, and Dr. Sperow led the prayer. A good congregation assembled, and gave good heed to the program.

The month of May has been a very conspicuous one with most of our churches, as we have held Memorial services at many of them. On the first Sunday, we held a fine service at Pleasant Grove Church. The graves were nicely decorated and an impressive program was rendered, Mrs. C. M. Reeves was the leader.

On the second Saturday in this month, Memorial services were held with Antioch Church, at 11:00 A. M. The Memorial sermon was preached by this writer. At 12 noon, lunch was spread, and everybody enjoyed the refreshments, which were bountiful. Then followed the program, which was rendered in a very impressive manner under the leadership of Bro. W. K. Hood.

The fourth Sunday, a similar service was held at New Hope Church. This was, perhaps, the greatest service of its kind ever held with this old church.

A large crowd gathered, and a fine program was rendered, directed by Miss Mary Will Elder. At noon a sumptuous dinner was spread, and the great host of people was well provided for, and in the afternoon Rev. Owens, of the Baptist Church, delivered quite an interesting address. Everybody seemed to enjoy all these services. It was a great occasion. Old friendships were renewed and new ones formed, and all rejoiced together.

Since then, however, we were called back to the old church to bury two of our best citizens, Bro. Amos Liles and Bro. C. H. Grose, whose bodies were interred with a double funeral last Thursday. May peace be to their souls, and comfort to their families.

This is the second time I have attended double funerals recently—quite a rare occurrence.

There will be arrangements made for our young people who desire to attend our Summer School of Methods, to furnish vegetables and food of all kinds from their own homes, in order to aid in the matter of expense for entertainment during the session. We do earnestly desire that many of our young people, pastors and Sunday School leaders will avail themselves of this fine opportunity. It will begin on Thursday night before the fifth Sunday in July. Let's arrange our revival meetings so as not to interfere with the attendance at the Summer School.

We hope to see the pastors and some representatives from every church in our two "United Conferences," Georgia and Alabama. We trust our Congregational pastors will take notice of this announcement, and share with us this great fellowship.

This would be one of the strongest ties with which we could be bound in mutual effort. I am in favor of the Summer School for our church folks. Let us get ready for it.

G. D. HUNT.

THE GREATEST ENEMY.

It is Gibbon, the historian, who tells what the effect upon Clovis, the invincible King of the Franks, was, when first he heard the story of the sufferings and death of the Lord Jesus. He was deeply moved, and, fierce soldier though he was, he could not restrain his tears. Suddenly he grasped his sword and exclaimed, "Ah, had I but been there with my Franks."

They were generous and ingenious words, the words of a soldier and a man of violent deeds, and he had not yet learned the spirit of the Lord, whose Name he afterwards confessed, yet they were beautiful words, in spite of their ignorance. They remind us of the way that Simon Peter acted in the garden. But both Clovis and Simon were wrong; the true and intelligent followers of the rejected Saviour do not smite his foes with the sword; they pray for them and pity them as he did, yet they may use the sword, but it must be upon an often unsuspected and more subtle enemy, and that enemy is self.

It is self that often stands between us and the glory of our God; it is self that often obtrudes when none but Christ should be seen. Self is the enemy, the great rival of Christ, and we may rightly use the sword upon self.—Scripture Truth.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

PRAYER.

Lord, thine arm is not shortened, nor dost thou disregard the believer's faith. The smallness of our faith prevents thy power and souls are slipping anchor. God forgive and reclaim. Corruption assails every phase of the common law. Perchance only by a chastisement yet unfelt can righteousness be made to prevail. Send, O God, such chastisement as thou must, upon whom thou wilt, that our nation, the nations, may yield to thy reign. For the glory of Jesus' name. Amen.

USING THE COIN CARD.

Many of our churches and Sunday Schools are using the Coin Cards, and hundreds of others should be using them. It is a convenient card with ten pockets, each pocket made to hold a dime until the ten dimes are collected in ten weeks, thus making it available and convenient for all who care enough for missions to contribute a dime a week. Our Commission on Missions sent out 300,000 of these cards, and we have sent out from our office, Elon College, N. C., nearly 4,000. If all of these are filled with dimes till the dollar is there, it will very greatly help the cause for which the church was established, and will prevent serious, if not tragic retrenchment, from our missionary program already too small.

It is, as The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty states: "The affair of pastors, church officers, Sunday School superintendents and other leaders to give every individual in our fellowship the opportunity of the coin collector. What the individual does after he has been given a coin collector is his affair." There are very many individuals who will gladly deny themselves a dime a week, placing the dime in a pocket of the card for each of the ten weeks until the collector is full, provided some one who is interested will give out the card and urge its use. Surely, here is an opportunity for all who care to have some part in the worthy work of missions at this time.

MISSIONARY MESSAGE OF THE CROSS.

The word "cross" in the Scriptures never occurs in the plural. To Christ the cross meant one thing, and nothing less: His sacrifice of himself to save others. That is what it must mean to every disciple—self-abnegation. To take up the cross and bear it after Christ is to undertake, like the Master, a life of self-crucifixion for the saving of others. It is to lose the self-life for his sake. It is to be willing to die, if need be, that others may live. When our Lord hung upon the cross his enemies tauntingly said: "He saved others: himself he cannot save." No sneer ever hid a truth so sublime. In the Christian life, saving self and saving others are utterly incompatible; and the one great difficulty with the whole body of professed disciples is that most of them are trying to save themselves, and yet be saved. And so it comes to pass that while thousands go to church, come to the Lord's Table, utter prayers and bear the name of Christ, they live a life essentially worldly, and are engaged in no truly soul-saving work. They spend many times as much on self-indulgence as they give to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, or even give the Living Bread to dying souls.

Consider what would be the result if every professed child of God could burn with Paul's passion for souls, could know the continual heart burden for the unsaved, that made it possible for him to wish himself accursed that they might be saved.

That was cross-bearing. The Apostle Paul died daily; he was "crucified with Christ," he bore branded in his body the very marks of the Lord Jesus. Could ten thousand of the millions of professed believers burn with such a Christ-like passion for souls, for one year, the Gospel would be carried round the globe within that year. Arguments and appeals are vain while you argue and appeal to the spiritual dead. Before the church can "convert the world," the members of the church must be converted. The real difficulty is not in unsanctified purses or unsanctified cradles, it is deeper—in sanctified hearts. "By their fruits ye shall know them." If you bear no witness for Christ, have you anything to witness?

A light that does not shine, a spring which does not bear witness to Christ. If there be a spring within, there will flow a stream without. If there be no stream, is there any spring? If there is no ray, is there any light? If there is no witness, is there any experience? "He that believeth on me," as the Scripture hath said, "out of his innermost being shall flow rivers of living water." He who has no passion to convert, needs conversion. The saved man is not content to have unsaved men go unwarned, or the saving power of God to go unwitnessed.

It may well be doubted whether one who bears no part in testimony to Christ has any part in his salvation. Would that every one might feel the full force of this paradox of missions:

"Christ alone can save the world,
But Christ cannot save this world alone."

GETTING AND GIVING.

John, at eighteen, expected, and got in rapid succession from his fond parents, fur coats, a high-powered car and a speed boat. The world was his to do with as he chose. Turned loose, without a sense of responsibility for wise control of high-powered machinery, he was only checked in his wild career when the father of the girl who had refused his invitations told him frankly why she had refused. It was the first time in his life that he had to stop and think.

Mary, also in her late teens, buys what clothes she wants, regardless of her allowance. Father will pay the bill, or mother, or brother. They may remonstrate, but she knows from past experience that down in their hearts they sympathize because "she's a dear and entitled to what she wants."

Are these children to blame for their casual, selfish, greedy attitude, or are the parents at fault who allowed them to grow up from babyhood with no true sense of give and take? The father and mother who wish to do everything possible for their children surely need to remember that one of the greatest things they can do is to teach the growing boy or girl that everything in life has its price, that every gift brings responsibility. In a constant hurry, as most of us are, we have dropped into the habit of looking only at immediate results. When, however, we consider things in the long run, we have to admit the fallacy of the belief that more can be got out of life than we put into it. Parents, therefore, and those organized groups which are interested in building a better and more healthful community spirit, will themselves acquire, and then spread among young people, the conviction that we pay for what we get. Not today, perhaps, but surely some day, it is true that "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."—From an article prepared by the American Child Health Association.

NEWSPAPER EVANGELIZATION IN JAPAN.

By MISS MARTHA R. STACY,
Missionary of Burlington, N. C. Sunday School.

Rev. William Q. McKnight spends two or three hours each forenoon several days a week at the Sendai Shineseikwan (New Life Hall), the office of Northeastern Newspaper Evangelism Branch. The time is spent in correspondence, in preparation of printed material to send to inquirers, and in planning field trips with the very efficient Japanese secretary, Mr. Tsukada.

Many lonely fishing hamlets, reached only by boat or by long tedious miles of walking around the inlets of Matsushima Bay, have living in them young men who are interested in what they have seen in some newspaper article about the teachings of Jesus, and are glad of the chance to write in to the office and learn more through the printed material sent out to them. After a while some of them learn to trust the "New Life" leaders so much that they write them of their deep personal problems, asking and receiving advice for Christian solutions of them. When several inquirers in a district are in need of a visit, usually at some festival time when large crowds will be gathered in that region, Mr. McKnight and Mr. Tsukada take a trip out into the country, arranging with the nearest church for some of their converts to receive baptism; sometimes themselves going to a lonely place where there is no church to baptize one who was too ill with the dreaded tuberculosis to go to church; preaching at the festival places to all who will gather to hear, usually with some previous inquirer as guide and helper; forming new contacts with people and gaining new members for the New Life Society which in return for a small fee sends literature as needed and the Kingdom of God Weekly.

Two members of our Ishinomaki Church were former members of the New Life Society, and two other young men who are secret Christians because of parental severity came first to the church through contacts with the New Life literature. Since the provincial newspaper is used, all our churches in that province are affected by this work; and it is the policy of the New Life Hall to turn over any inquiries near enough to any church to attend, to be led into Christian living by the pastor of that church. The local churches also are asked to cooperate with the workers from Sendai in any special field work at festival times.

The work of the New Life Society is essentially a seed-sowing work, whatever harvest there is being reaped through the churches. Yet in one town where there was no church, where the son of one of our pastors was a teacher in the grade school, a group of seven young men used to meet weekly to read and study together the material sent from the New Life Society, and several of them later joined a church, being visited once a month by a pastor from a distance.

In another town where there was no settled Christian worker, a group of girls who had at various times come under Christian influences in Sendai while at work or at school there asked help from the New Life Society in planning for weekly meetings. At first one of the girl leaders had them meeting in her home, but now they have helped in building a tiny church, with a settled Bible woman and kindergartner in the town.

Mr. was a sixteen-year-old boy, son of a man whose only ideas about Christianity went back to feudal times when to be Christian was identified with disloyalty to the nation and the emperor. He wanted to learn about the New Life, but he had to ask that material be mailed to him folded with the Christian name inside, or his father would destroy the papers and beat him. For three years or more he has studied the material, coming at long intervals to our church to ask questions and meet other Christians, but never able to come at church times for service. He is a sincere believer, but as yet not a professing Christian.

TO THE NEW MEMBERS OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

My Dear Friend:

How happy I was made by your letter telling me that you had decided to become a member of the Woman's Missionary Society! Now, you ask me, "What will my duties be? What does it mean to be a member?"

First of all, don't ever allow yourself to think that the chief work of missionary women is to raise money for missions, because that will lead you inevitably to the idea that you can sit back and do nothing, or even stay away, and it will be all the same if you pay your "dues." I would rather work with a woman who hadn't a cent to give, but would come and take an interest and do her part in the meetings, than with a dozen or a hundred who thought they could buy themselves off from service!

Take every opportunity that your time allows to learn more of the work. Subscribe for and read The Missionary Herald, join a mission study class, if your society has one, or get the book and read it at home if you cannot belong to a class. The more you learn of the work, the more your interest and efficiency will grow.

Try to tell somebody else the things you read or hear in the meetings. You will never know a thing yourself so fully as when you try to tell it. I don't mean you should go around preaching to people about their duty toward missions; they will probably avoid you if you do. But tell them interesting bits you have picked up about customs in various countries, or anecdotes told by missionaries. There are hundreds of stories just waiting to be told. Maybe you will provoke enough curiosity to get somebody else to come and see what it is all about!

All this time I haven't said a word about money! But when your mind is full of missionary information and interest, nobody will have to ask you to give money—you will have to give because you can't help it! Still, we ought to know how and when to give, so let's talk about that a little.

Perhaps you don't like the word "dues." Poor abused word! It simply means the sum which should be the minimum average giving of our women's groups. This suggested amount of 25 cents per month is so wholly inadequate to carry on the work and to represent the giving power of our women that all are expected to give regularly and systematically according to their ability. Above and beyond the question of dues lies the great opportunity of making gifts of love to the Master for his work—gifts proportionate to individual resources; gifts of self-denial and sacrifice; gifts to special needs as they arise.

Make the most of every opportunity to cultivate missionary friendships and broaden your contacts. If you are able to attend a conference or convention, make every effort to go. I hope you may soon have such a privilege. It will repay you in inspiration many times over for the time and effort you spend.

The greatest friendship to be cultivated, the greatest duty to be performed, and the greatest opportunity for service, I have not mentioned yet, and they are all summed up in one word—prayer! To talk with the Lord about his work—to come daily into closer harmony with his great purposes—to become an intercessor with him for the people of all the world and for the missionaries who are laboring for them—this is the climax of all! And it is within reach of every one. You may not become a great leader, a great speaker or a great giver for missions; you can become a great intercessor.

I could almost envy you the new joys ahead of you, yet I would not miss one day of all I have had in my own life. God bless you and make you a fruitful member of our society!

Lovingly yours,

MRS. ACTIVE MEMBER.

FROM OVERSEAS.

"IF . . . IT FAILS THEM."

Out of the group of students in Foochow College, China, who decided definitely to become Christians during the recent visit of Sherwood Eddy, 33 have been received into church membership and 25 have expressed a desire for further training. Christian schools in China, believes Rev. Ralph R. Shrader, have ceased to be "the" Christian schools and are becoming "our" Christian schools. Many of the students who were drawn away from the church by Communism, or who were repelled by what seemed to them "ultra-conservatism," are now giving that institution another trial. "We have led these young people out of their old ways of thinking; they can never go back. We must see them through," says Mr. Shrader, who believes that if the Christian church fails to win the allegiance of these young people, through misunderstanding or lack of vision, many of the best and most idealistic will turn to Communism.

"TEACH THE YOUNG PEOPLE TO SING."

A young Japanese woman, a leader in the little Christian Church at Seoul, Korea, was obliged to enter the hospital for an operation. She had waited too long in her eagerness to save money for the church—and she died. She had rallied the young mothers of the church, she had taught child care, nutrition and health. She was the heart of the work. But a few days before she went to the hospital she said to Mrs. William P. Woodard: "I was fortunate in learning about Christ when I was young. It has made my life so happy, so free from fears and superstitions that I want everyone to have the chance to know 'the way, the truth and the light.' Teach the young people to sing. You have no idea what hymns mean to us." At her own request her hymn-book was cremated with her. "Whatever else we do," she would say, "do let us sing."

MARS (INCOGNITO) IN CHINA.

Under this topic Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, Secretary for China, has been in great demand as a speaker on the Sino-Japanese "war" and its background. But it is impossible at present to summarize this situation or to give any very reliable news as to our workers. Will Rogers, in one of his daily messages, shortly after spending a few days in China, said he had already been in China too long to really understand the situation. The American Board has but one family in Shanghai, namely, Dr. Frank J. Rawlinson, editor of the Chinese Recorder, with his three children, and at the American School there the sons and daughters of the Beaches, Gillettes, Newells and McClures, all of Foochow. There are no workers in Nanking.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO GIVE.

Hindu scrubwomen in the hospital at Wai, India, have, out of their $5.00 a month, contributed toward the American Board Loyalty Fund. The Indian Church has taken the matter up and contributions amounting to 600 rupees were made in Wai alone. Other mission areas have done equally well. The missionaries made no suggestions in this matter—it came voluntarily from the Indian Church.

GREETINGS TO IMMOKALEENS.

May a stranger come into your beautiful camp and say a word of greeting? Thanks very much for the courtesy. I do not know your names, and you do not know me, but what matters names if we understand the heart? You and I are interested in the same things.

Here in Old Virginia the day before you leave home for Immokalee the sun is shining softly and breezes are refreshing, like they are down in beautiful Florida. A stranger to you is thinking of how the bright shining sun, the refreshing breezes, the "blue crystal lake," blooming flowers, chattering comrades, and Christian leaders all combine to bring to you the richness of experience and happiness of heart for these ten days of opportunity which are yours. And the stranger is hoping that you will find more than you sought at Immokalee.

Your quest is the same as that of thousands of others scattered over our beautiful land—the best. Nothing less than the best can satisfy a good heart and a heroic soul. You are fortunate in being able to attend a Camp like Immokalee with choice young people as your friends and outstanding Christians as your guides. The stranger feels sure that gratitude will make you do your best, and having done your best, happiness will abide in your heart.

By the time you reach home, other choice young people will be starting to their Summer School at Elon College (June 20-26). A little later Blue Ridge will add a mountain-top blessing to still other lives. And a little later still, Southern Union and Piedmont will open college doors for a week of inspiration and Christian training to those young people in their territory who are so fortunate and eager as to be there. In dozens of other places in America others of Congregational and Christian Churches, as well as other denominations, will be meeting in beautiful places to find the way of beautiful living. This is a wonderful fellowship of youth. The world needs your best.

I was wondering if at the twilight time you would sing some of the songs that will be sung in other camps this summer. Virginia young people delight in singing, "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny." Pattie Lee can tell you of the songs of Elon and Carolina. You may know many of other States, camps and colleges. You have a beautiful camp song which I am sure others will want to sing, and for that reason I am printing it here.

Thanks for the visit. Now go ahead with your good times, knowing that out beyond your vision there is "a great cloud of witnesses," who watch your progress and wish you well.

SONG OF IMMOKALEE.

"Immokalee" means place of joy and health.

(Zuni Indian Melody—Words by Martha Race.)

Blue crystal lake, green forest nigh,
Rainbow set in evening sky,

Immokalee—Immokalee.

Rising smoke and glowing flame,
All voice the meaning of thy name,
Immokalee—Immokalee.

For here is joy in work and play,
Here is strength renewed each day,
Immokalee—Immokalee.

Here our spirits reach and find
The heart of the Great Spirit kind,
Immokalee—Immokalee.

Oh, place of joy, more joyous grow.

Place of health, more life bestow.

Immokalee—Immokalee.

We, thy children, set this aim;

To add new fuel to thy flame,

Immokalee—Immokalee.

THINGS OF FIRST IMPORTANCE.

It must be a hard job to live things "out" that we haven't within, and this is the fallacy, as well as the arrogance, in the intellectual world as well as in the religious world. Too many of our young people have come to think that education is something to put on instead of something to put in, and as something more fashionable than serviceable. Somebody has failed to teach them that it is the internal and not the external qualification of a person that, in the most part, recommends him to a place of trust in the world. This all-important matter has certainly received too little attention and has been too little emphasized by many parents and teachers, and it is pathetic that the intellectual, moral and spiritual development of children should be left to such unsound leadership. The laws that govern the mental, moral, and spiritual world are just as definitely fixed as those that govern the material world, and he who would be assured of a good harvest, in the world, of human righteousness, must obey these laws. Dr. Rufus Jones says, "We are forever ourselves plus, and the plus is the main fact." The "plus" is just the inner man of the heart, and without this inner man of the heart we are failures, notwithstanding all our intellectual attainments. In fact, it is only when we are prepared to appreciate and love the biggest and the purest motives that we are educated. When we can find the real secret of human happiness and the joy in a life of usefulness. No doubt, some of us would be surprised and even humiliated in our own minds if we would break away from our empty, aimless, fitful living long enough to examine our motives. Too many of us have just been urged on by unsound objectives and many of our young people have caught the same spirit. Too many of us worry day after day because we haven't the social prestige of our neighbors. Perhaps it's the best we know. Heaven help us to learn better. Too many of us scorn our daily tasks because their toil has not brought in satisfactory returns. We have lost our faith in Jehovah and our love for his cause; and regardless of who may be president, we will never be a prosperous, happy people until we renew our allegiance to God and bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

A. R. FLOWERS.

SOUTHERN UNION SUMMER SCHOOL.

Young people, pastors, and superintendents in Alabama are thinking and planning so they can be at Southern Union College, Wadley, Alabama, from July 28th to August 4th. It is sincerely hoped that revivals and other special meetings will be so arranged that there will be no conflict.

Miss Marguerite Davison is planning the program and will soon have it ready for printing and distribution. The schedule for each day will include a Bible Study or Chapel Period, classes for credit in Children's Work, Young People's Methods, and Missions with Miss Annie Campbell, Miss Dorothy French, and Dr. F. P. Ensinger as teachers. It may be possible for those who wish credit on the Life of Christ under the direction of Rev. F. C. Lester, to get it. Other work for the day will include discussion groups on "Worship," led by Miss French; on "Pastor's Problems," led by Dr. Ensinger; on "Young People's Work," led by Miss Lillian McKee, and "Recreation," led by Miss Davison.

The program looks fine, but it will have value only as people attend the school. It is none too early to be planning to attend. The cost is only $5.00 for board and room and $1.00 for registration. $6.00 cannot be invested to better advantage by young people, pastors, or churches.

Alabamans, get ready for the Summer School, and let's make Southern Union College a happy and helpful place while we study, play and pray together there.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 12—"Getting the Most Out of Our Leisure Time."

As the old saying goes most young people "have more time than anything else." In this so-called period of depression the youth who possesses the energy of mind and body is seeking some channel as an outlet, and we can use our leisure time in Christian Endeavor work, or other branches of Christian service for our churches, for we must "work while it is day."

No doubt, you will ask what are some of the things we can do in our leisure time? The summer months are here and now is the time to begin. Begin by using the following suggestions:

First, use a part of your leisure time in reading good books and magazines to keep your minds active and thoughtful. Read your Bible and the church papers, which will suggest things that should be discussed in Christian Endeavor. You can cultivate a clean healthy mind by reading the best literature and thereby keep a clean heart.

Second, urge all the members of your local Christian Endeavor, who can, to attend one of the Summer Schools of Leadership Training. Here you can get valuable information as to how you can best improve your own Society, along with a wider fellowship and inspiration.

Third, now is the time for the youth in the church to lend a helping hand in Christian service. Scores of people here and there are suffering for one thing or another, and you, in your community, are better acquainted with those problems than others—"work while it is day." Perhaps a good turn done now will mean a new member for your Christian Endeavor.

Fourth, your leisure time may be spent formulating and executing some kind of project in the community or church which will afford an outlet for that "excess energy," and probably bring in badly needed funds for the C. E. Treasury. Here are some suggested projects: Improving the church lawn; plant a small garden and sell the produce; sell flowers or some other appropriate article on national holidays; put on some kind of an exercise or play that would not be out of place in the church, charging a very small admission fee, and perhaps you can have a rummage sale.

Fifth, we can help in another way to bring these things about—that is, by faithful, humble, persistent, and earnest prayer, praying for something definite in a kindly spirit. Of course, this is repeating the suggestions of last Sunday, but we should keep them foremost in our minds as true Christian Endeavorers.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

W. A. HARPER, Editor.

(Any book reviewed in this Department may be had of THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the publisher's price.)

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN THE RURAL CHURCH, by Henry W. McLaughlin. Revell. 220 pp. $1.50.

There is no question that such a book is needed and Dr. McLaughlin's long experience in the rural pastorate and as director of Country Church work for the Southern Presbyterian Church certainly qualifies him to write it. His intimate association with the Institute of Public Affairs of the University of Virginia, too, has given him an insight into the problems discussed as viewed by many of our present-day leaders. In fact this book grows out of the 1930 and 1931 sessions of the Institute, manuscripts of which are freely quoted in the text.

The work is well done and the book will exert a wide influence, as it ought. It is too bad, however, that the author misunderstood a statement quoted from Dr. Paul H. Veith defining the curriculum as "experience under guidance." Dr. McLaughlin understands this to mean apprenticeship of ministers and teachers, comparable to internship in medicine, what is known in education as teaching under supervision. Now all admit that we need this as foundational in preparing our leaders so that we will not send them out "without any 'experience under guidance' to take charge of churches" and other positions of leadership in our church schools. But Dr. Veith means something very different from this. He means that the curriculum of our church schools is to be the actual experiences the pupils are having in their daily lives enriched and interpreted by sympathetic leaders, and not any prepared course of study designed to meet the supposed needs and interests of these growing persons. Teachers who are skilled in handling actual life situations of their pupils will have no difficulty building a curriculum of religious education for the country or anywhere else.

Dr. McLaughlin lays us all under lasting obligation by his pioneering treatment of this vital theme.

NEW TENDENCIES IN TEACHING RELIGION, by H. J. Sheridan. Abingdon Press. 112 pp. $1.25.

One is reminded of Pope's famous counsel about using the new and laying the old aside as one reads this book. Professor Sheridan discusses six of the newer trends in religious education—the life-situation approach, the place of activity in learning, the emphasis on interest as basic in the curriculum, creative education, group education versus opportunistic teaching. The reader is convinced of two things—that the author wants to be fair and judicial in his appraisals and that he does not always exhibit complete understanding of what he describes. For example, it is not a contrast between group and individual education. Both approaches are necessary in religious education. And again, his characterization of teaching as systematic and opportunistic is unscientific. What he means is this—Should the curriculum be "handed down" or indigenously developed? It is hard for one who has enjoyed such signal success as a Herbertian teacher as Dr. Sheridan has to shift his procedure to the creative approach. In this book, the author's misgivings and rationalizations in adjustment are faithfully set forth and the reader is not surprised when he concludes with, "It be-

JACOB, THE AGED FATHER.

LESSON XII—JUNE 19, 1932.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Honor thy father and thy mother."—Ex. 20:21.

LESSON TEXT: Gen. 46:1-7; 28-30; 47:7.

TIME: B. C. 1715.

PLACE: Bersheba. Land of Goshen in Egypt.

After Joseph had made himself known to his brethren, he presented them to Pharaoh, and so high did Joseph stand with the king, that he was ordered to send for his father, that he might come to Egypt and, with his sons, Joseph's brethren, dwell there. Thus it was that the eleven returned in due time to their father and broke the astounding news that Joseph was still alive, and the even greater news that he was ruler of all Egypt. When the news was brought to Jacob he fainted, and when he recovered at first refused to believe. But when he saw the vast caravan that had been sent to bring him to Egypt, he exclaimed: "It is enough; Joseph, my son, is yet alive; I will go and see him before I die."

"And Israel took his journey with all that he had, and came to Bersheba, and offered sacrifices unto the God of his father, Isaac." As he journeyed on his way, Jacob carried his worship with him, for he sacrificed to the Lord at Bersheba. And then "they took their cattle, and their goods, which they had gotten in the land of Canaan, and came into Egypt, Jacob, and all his seed with him."

Now, when they came near unto Egypt, Jacob sent Judah in advance to admonish Joseph of his coming. "And Joseph made ready his chariot, and went out to meet Israel his father, to Goshen; . . . and he wept on his neck" for joy.

And Joseph hastened to bring his father to Pharaoh. What a meeting this must have been; how nobly did Jacob bear himself. For we are told that "Jacob blessed Pharaoh," and the mightiest monarch of his time gladly received his blessing.

If we will read further in the chapters that follow, we will find that Jacob lived for many years in Egypt, and that his family thrived and multiplied as long as they continued to serve the true and living God.

Joseph also continued in favor with both God and men and lived to a ripe old age.

A lie is a very short wick in a very small lamp. The oil of reputation is very soon sucked up and gone. And just as soon as a man is known to lie, he is like a two-foot pump in a hundred-foot well. He cannot touch bottom at all. Henry Ward Beecher.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

SOME NEEDS OF THE WORLD TODAY.

MONDAY.

"Ye shall do no unrighteousness . . . in measures of length, of weight, or quantity."—Lev. 19:35.

"Study to work with your hands, that ye may walk becomingly (honestly) toward them that are without, and may have need of nothing."—Thess. 4:11, 12.

"Whatsoever things are honest . . . think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

Somebody said at the Convention in Burlington the other day, to effect: "The world needs today a Christian character so irreproachable and so potent that others will ask, 'What have you got that I have not?'"

All of us have heard that story of Diogenes who went about looking for a Christian. Are Christians so scarce?

Pope is quoted as saying, "An honest man is the noblest work of God."

Honesty does not apply to thieves, burglars and crooks alone. It applies to cheating in all forms, the cheating of the company out of street car fares, giving false measures, gambling, forgers of checks, incurring debts without ability to pay, all these are as guilty as thieves; all of these take what does not belong to them.

Do you consider yourself honest? Lay bare your heart; see what you have done dishonest. It may be that none of us are as honest as we think. We all need to repent of something, I fear. We all need to thank God that he has not dealt with us after our sins nor rewarded us according to our dishonesty. (Psa. 103:10.)

Prayer—Our Father, we look to thee. O God, we pray thee, have mercy upon us more and forgive our dishonesty. In Jesus make us honest, let come what will upon us. Amen.

TUESDAY.

UNIMPEACHABLE HONESTY.

"Providing things honest in the sight of all men."—Rom. 12:17.

Revised Version: "Keep in harmony with one another; instead of being ambitious, associate with humble folks; never be self-conceited. Never pay back evil for evil to anyone; aim to be above reproach in the eyes of all."—Verses 16 and 17.

"Providing for honest things, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men."—II. Cor. 8:21.

Moffatt Version: "I want to take precaution against any risk of suspicion . . . I aim at being above reproach not only from God but also from men."—Verses 20 and 21.

Nowhere does the Bible bring so clearly to us the glory of honesty as it does here.

We are told of an old soldier who was drawing a pension for a disability from which he had recovered. Because the reason for his pension no longer existed, he requested the Department to remove his name from the pension list. The Department, so amazed at this unusual honesty, sent representative to ascertain if the man was insane.

We are told that General Meigs, Quartermaster General during the Civil War, once sent a letter to General Sheridan. Sheridan could not read it. But we are told, he endorsed it as follows: "I heartily concur in the recommendations of the Quartermaster General." Sheridan could not read the letter, but he knew General Meigs, and he knew that he could be trusted. Thus his endorsement.

We are told of a motorist who was disabled on the road. By a passing motorist he sent a message to a city seven miles away requesting aid. In the meantime he got started and proceeded. He subsequently wrote the Chief of Police, requesting search for the name of the "troubleman" who came to assist him. The man was found and a check was sent to compensate him for the trouble caused by the message. "You are one honest man," was included in the note of thanks.

It ought to be true that one who has taken upon himself the name of a Christian can be known and trusted any where—can you?

Prayer—Our Father, author of all good, all righteousness and all honesty, enable us to surrender to thee in a way that they who see us may know that we are Christians, honest anywhere. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

FAITH TO STAND AGAINST THE CROWD.

"Put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil."

" . . . and having done all to stand."

"Stand therefore having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast plate of righteousness. . . ."

"Above all, taking the shield of faith . . ."—Eph. 6:10-16.

Moffatt Version: ". . . Put on God's armour that ye may be able to stand against the strategem of the devil."

" . . . and hold your ground by overcoming all the foe."

"Hold your ground, tighten the belt of truth about your loins, wear integrity as your coat of mail. . . ."

"Above all taking faith as your shield . . ."

The story of Daniel is of a young man who did all this. The mandates of his king were in contradiction to the law of God, and to (what we would say today) his Christianity. He owed God his first allegiance. To him salvation was of the Lord even if he had to give his life.

Do we not need such faith today? How much is politics today interfering with men taking an honest stand in the administration of righteousness? We have prayers in our legislative halls as well as in churches, but how close to God and right do these prayers seem to bring the legislators? Our country is in a bad fix, to what extent is God brought in to bring to us salvation? "Salvation is of the Lord."

Prayer—O Lord, our God, forbid that we shall look at others and criticize them. Oh thou Almighty, turn our attention upon ourselves and make our hearts right with thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

AN UNSHAKEN FAITH.

"Salvation belongeth to the Lord."—Psa. 3:8.

"Vain is the salvation of man."—Psa. 6:11.

"His salvation is nigh them that fear him."—Psa. 85:9.

"We look for salvation, but it is far from us."—Isa. 59:11.

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"—Heb. 2:3.

Read the story of Jonah. Unlike Daniel, Jonah was a man who refused to do the will of God. He must have had a lot of pleasure in doing his own will. But, like the prodigal son, Jonah finally came to his extremity. In the belly of the whale he could go no further with his will. It was in this extremity, we are told, he prayed. In this extremity and in his prayers to God, he realized that salvation was of God, and he became willing to follow the Lord and do his bidding. He was delivered, and being delivered, he went forth in the discharge of the duty which God had called upon him to do, and was blessed.

It is of but little moment whether you believe the story of Jonah or not. The great theme of that story is that salvation is of the Lord. The history of Israel heads up in that great fact: "Salvation is of the Lord." The history of the world teaches us that fact. The writer is "not a prophet or the son of a prophet," but the extremities of humanity these days may bring mankind to a greater consciousness of that reality. "Salvation is of the Lord," and there is no doubt that the sooner we turn to God to save the world from the evils of the day, the sooner will the salvation we seek come to us.

Prayer—Our Father, in thee we live and move and have our being. May we not simply repeat this but sincerely acknowledge it before thee and turn to thee every day. O God, raise up apostles everywhere to lead the world to thee, and to depend upon thy salvation. Help us to do so every day here in our homes and in our lives. Amen.

FRIDAY.

ANOTHER COMPARISON.

"What lack I yet?"—Matt. 19:20.

Our text refers us to the story of the rich young ruler who came to Christ and asked, "What must I do to inherit eternal life?" We might say, "What shall I do to be saved?" Jesus replied by telling him to "Keep the Commandments." The young man again said, "Which?" Jesus named them. Then the young man, justifying himself, said, "All these things have I kept from my youth up. What lack I yet?"

Jesus loving him, and seeing clear through him, saw that he had a reservation in his life. He loved his wealth and all the pomp that went with it. Thus, he said to him, "Go sell all that thou hast and give to the poor, and come and follow me." The young man turned away sorrowfully, unwilling to lay himself wholly on such an uncertainty (as it seemed to him) which must come in following Jesus. Jesus had no where to lay his head. Well, what would you have done in that instance?

Now set over against this the widow who went to church and put every cent she had in the church treasury. When Jesus saw this, he said she had given more than all of them. Her consecration was without reservation. Her gift, though small, was complete. In her the Kingdom of God was fulfilled, and Jesus set her up as an example.

We make certain dedications to the Lord. Is that dedication complete? Does it go all the way? Are our professions of faith and our prayers, "Thy will be done on earth (in us) as it is in heaven," offered without reservation? Answer to God.

Prayer—Our Lord and our God, to follow thee is so far, and yet how near. We cannot do it

WAITING ON THE LORD.

"They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength."—Isa. 40:31.

Recent years have witnessed some great losses. Great losses in the stock markets, and greater losses in lesser life-savings all across the country. Gathering the losses together into a single stream would make a fanciful one larger than the overflowing Mississippi. But there is a difference. The Mississippi flows to the ocean, but what becomes of this outflowing stream of losses? We cannot answer this question without looking beyond bank vaults, and market records. We shall have to search to the bottom of the meaning of life, and find our answer after all in God.

Recently, such words as "Recoup," "rebuild," "regain," and "recover" have been brought to the front for a new emphasis. This is not the first "depression," for several centuries B. C. a great prophet said to his constituency, "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." Modernizing a bit: "Shall balance their budget," "shall find a way out," "shall end the depression." Let us analyze this text a bit: according to the text (1) there were losses, (2) there was yet some strength, and (3) a remedy for renewal is suggested.

I. There Have Been Losses.

In the quiet of this holy place, may we not take a sort of brief inventory of our losses. We are not used to knowing much about our universe, and a recent renaissance of scientific knowledge gave us an intellectual "big head," and a fabulous building up of money and luxury by a practical application of our new scientific learning. We began to feel that we were independent; that we were lords of all we surveyed; and our social structure was beginning to be builded on rocks of earth rather than the Spiritual Rock of Ages! And we began to sustain losses. First of all we lost the devil, then hell, and although we could not get rid of sin we gave it pretty names, and tried to hide it behind soft-sounding phrases. Although we put the devil right out we are beginning to learn that his works remain, and we are beginning to look at some of our works, and some of the sayings of Jesus and rub our eyes as though we might likely arrive at a new understanding of their meaning, for instance, "And he said unto them, go ye, and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils"; or what he meant when he said, "In hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment." But after all it was not so bad to lose hell, worse than that we have lost heaven. In all seriousness, that is a real loss.

Rufus M. Jones, in his recent book, "A Preface to Christian Faith in a New Age," reaches the conclusion that eternity has lost its hold on the present generation, and he deplores the fact that "this blight of temporality" has so greatly affected the life of this generation. We used to sing of a "land that is fairer than day," and "Oh, they tell me of a land where no storm clouds rise," was a hope that led adventurous pilgrims forth to undertake and to achieve mighty things for their day and generation. But no longer does a "heavenly home, so bright and fair," occupy a large place in the thinking of many who profess to be leaders in the so-called Christian thinking of our day.

This loss of a clear vision of heaven has shortened life from eternal to a brief, human span. The Epicurean philosophy of enjoying this present life to the fullest of its earthly possibilities predominates in many minds, and man has lost his eternal glory—the likeness, an image of God. Society has not had to watch its step, and has lost its depths while it has gayly gone after material instead of spiritual values.

With all this, for many, has gone our personal God, and our belief and practice of prayer. We may as well face the facts squarely and confess our faults one to another. We have lisped the name of Jesus, and forgotten God, laid aside his customs, and ignored his explicit commands. Our losses have been tremendous. And we shall never "pass around the corner" until we recognize the fact that our material losses are the least of them all. Many suffer today for want of material blessings, it is true, and unjustly, but we are all so bound together, that large portions of society cannot forget God without others feeling the curse of it.

II. Still Possess Something.

It would be impossible to renew our strength unless there were some strength left. We still have much in hand. We still have the church, and much could be said about it just here. We still have the Book; we still have the man Jesus; and we still have God, even though to many he may be an unknown God. Taking our country at large, we may be following the Church, the Book, the Christ, and Jehovah of Hosts at a fainting, falling, weary gait, but nevertheless we do have some strength. We have not hauled down our banners, and millions have not ceased to look to heaven for help. Here is this fine congregation of devoted home-builders and home-makers who still come to this holy hill with expectancy in their eyes, and hope in their hearts. Let me say parenthetically, that you and the like of you, are contributing more by your presence in a place of worship on a Sunday morning to the solution of the present problems of our country than any of us realize. You are making a real contribution. But as I was saying, we may be following faintly as a whole, and yet a large reading of our text says: "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that hath no might He increaseth strength." Let those who still love the church and her holy altars of prayer, hold on to God. They are the leaven that shall leaven the whole lump.

III. A Remedy is Suggested.

And this "waiting on the Lord" is the remedy that Isaiah suggests: "But they that wait on the Lord, shall renew their strength." Hear the whole text: "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? There is no searching of his understanding. He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: But they that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint." A remedy is suggested, indeed! Not billions, but a better understanding among peoples and nations; not more brotherhood talk, but more practice of real brotherliness; and not younger people, but deeper consecration!

Lack of years is not a solvent for the world's sorrow, but love of real heroism on the part of the rising generation is a mighty hope! Without God even the youths shall faint and grow weary, and young men shall utterly fall; but with God, thank God, they and their elders may mount up with wings like eagles! Let our homes keep our youths in our churches! Like the Boy Jesus, they may question our old, pet shibboleths; they may, with their innocent, discerning eyes, even observe at times a difference in what we are doing and "their Father's business"; but above all, let us keep them in the church. For sooner, or later, our economical and social problems will be solved in the light of those who love "my Father's house," and learn in it to "wait on the Lord."

MONEY TO BED.

"I have remembered thy name, O Lord, in the night."—Psa. 119:49-56.

The newspapers have been telling about a woman who, on dying, left to her nephew a strange legacy consisting of her nightgown, which was lined with bank notes, cut up into small strips and pieced together like patchwork.

We know nothing about the lady whose freak is thus reported, but her action is a symbol of what many of us do when we take our money troubles and our financial ambitions to bed with us, recur to them whenever we wake up in the night, and are so involved with them that they are the subject of our dreams. The psalmist took quite another course. He remembered God's name in the night. His nights were filled with thanksgiving. And in the morning, when he awoke, he was still with God.

Prayer—May that be our blessed experience O our God. Set our affections on things above, where thou art, and where we hope to be through the endless ages. Amen.

PROFESSIONAL ARSON.

"How much wood is kindled by how small a fire! And the tongue is a fire."—James 3:1-12.

Setting fire to buildings—usually that insurance may be collected on them—has become a business. In a recent trial a professional incendiary made a confession. For $3,000 he guaranteed the complete destruction of a store or shop. He had numerous "clients," and the total amount of insurance involved in his operations was estimated at half a million dollars.

There are also incendiaries in the spiritual world who would make it their business to start conflagrations of the soul that may be more destructive than any burnings of buildings. James tells about one of them when he says, "the tongue is a fire." It is worse to burn a life than a shop. Temporary damage is done in one case but eternal damage in the other.

Let us set a watch against the fires of the soul. What a fire is jealousy! What a fire is sensual passion! What an eating fire is doubt! And if we do not start these fires in other lives, many of us are fearfully expert in starting them in our own hearts.

Prayer—Dear Lord, put out the fires! Thou art cooling peace. Thou hast protective grace. Thou dost exercise preservative wisdom. May thy warnings police our souls. Amen.

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

OBITUARIES.

FARMER.

Mrs. Eliza Scott Farmer was born near Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax County, Virginia, July 8, 1861, and passed to her reward from her home in South Boston, Virginia, on May 24, 1932. She was the daughter of the late, lamented Obadiah and Emma Farmer. She was happily united in marriage to Riley G. Farmer on November 29, 1880, who preceded her to the spirit world on January 11, 1914. There were three children: Pearl, Otto and John. The first and last named, with one granddaughter, Natalie, the daughter of Otto and wife, deceased, survive her. Also one sister, Mrs. Al. Farmer, and two brothers, W. O. Farmer and Sam Farmer. Early in life, at the age of about twelve, the deceased made a profession of faith in Christ and united with Pleasant Grove Christian Church and remained a most faithful, loyal and devoted member of this church until her decease. The joy of her latter years was in the worship of God at Pleasant Grove, surrounded by her friends, neighbors and loved ones, with whom she held sweet fellowship and enjoyed the loving esteem of all.

In the absence of her pastor, Dr. W. C. Wicker, who was unable to be present, the writer conducted the funeral at 11:00

A. M., May 26th, and interment was in the Pleasant Grove Cemetery. A very large concourse of friends was present, the songs were appropriate and comforting, the flowers abundant and beautiful.

This good woman inspired others with her unshaken faith in God, and has bequeathed to her family and friends a rich legacy through a life that was hid with Christ in God.

FOLLOW CHRIST.

Critics have much to say against Christ in such matters as his supernatural birth, his miracles, his atoning death and bodily resurrection and his promised return, but no one seriously attacks his holy life. He lived his religion, and his religion is the kind that makes men holy.

moral duty." Holiness when it is of the real kind is strong in its ethics, which is to say that it enables men and women to do their duty in the bright light of an awakened conscience and with God's revealed will as the guide. "And please, your majesty, they converted my wife," said an Englishman back in the days of the Wesleys, when serving as a witness in a magistrate's court that was acting on the arrest of a Methodist preacher for his labors in the ministry. It was well known that this particular man's wife needed a mighty transformation of morals, and the magistrate dismissed the case with the statement that it would be well to get every old scold saved in his district.

Roman Catholic Population.—

The official Roman Catholic Directory has but recently been issued. It shows a Catholic population in the United States, including Hawaii, of 20,236,391, which is an increase of 21,293 over 1931, and a gain of over two million in ten years. The number of priests is now 28,297, an increase of 433. There are 12,484 parishes with 18,152 churches. The number of converts for the year is given as 40,269, an increase of 741. The hierarchy of the United States now numbers 105 bishops, 17 archbishops and 4 cardinals.

Helps the Other Fellow.—

Arthur Brisbane is the authority for the statement that on one day last week this country lost about $20,000,000 more of its gold, and that since the first of May Europe has taken from us $385,000,000 in gold. We are left to get what comfort we can from the statement of the Federal Reserve Board, that our exports "have eased conditions in the international money markets, and increased the volume of loanable funds in foreign countries." "Isn't it nice?" says Mr. Brisbane. "How delightful to know that, thanks to our gold, foreign borrowers can get money easily. Perhaps the Federal Reserve will arrange somehow to make borrowing a little easier for business men here." We agree with him that "that, also, would be nice."

Convicts Win Wet and Dry Debate.—

"Resolved, That the Eighteenth Amendment Should be Repealed." Three members of the Michigan State Prison, led by Harold Lewis, Wexford County liquor law violator, upheld the negative, and marshalled their arguments for prohibition so skillfully that they won over the three General Motors representatives. Raskob and the Duponts, heavy contributors to the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, are officials of the General Motors. Lewis declared that prohibition enforcement is improving. "Who says the law doesn't work?" he asked, pointing to himself, and the audience roared. Lewis showed that only 300 of the 5,700 inmates had been sentenced for dry law offences, which proved that prohibition had not filled the prisons. He declared that all the evils attributed to prohibition had at least been equally evident under the old system. Three members of the University of Michigan faculty were the judges.

England Has a Gambling Craze.—

The Home Secretary of Great Britain has made the announcement of the coming appointment of a Royal Commission on the law regarding sweepstakes and other forms of gambling. The evil of gambling has reached gigantic proportions in Great Britain owing to the popularity of the Irish Sweepstakes. Canon Peter Green of Manchester

Cathedral points out that whereas the publication of the names of the winners in a recent Dublin sweepstake filled a whole page in a London newspaper on two consecutive days, "the same space in every issue extending over four and a half years would be needed to publish the names of those who won nothing." This gives some idea of the mania for gambling, but does not tell the whole story. It does not tell of the demoralization of the people, of the participation of churchmen and those set to be "not a terror to good work, but to the evil." The news from London informs the world that here "is another matter which will engage the attention of the churches." Perhaps that will provoke many wry smiles.—Christian-Evangelist.

Flag Day Observed.—

Tuesday of this week was observed throughout the nation as Flag Day, the custom having become widespread since the late President Woodrow Wilson called for a national observance of the day in 1916. Flag Day is said to have received formal recognition first in the year 1877, the hundredth anniversary of our national emblem, when Rutherford B. Hayes, who was then President, ordered that all public buildings in Washington display the flag. Since that time the observance of Flag Day has continued to spread throughout the country, reaching its climax in 1916, when President Wilson issued his call for a national observance of the day. Tuesday was the 155th anniversary of the acceptance of the flag. Since that date, over a century and a half ago, the flag has changed somewhat in appearance. In each instance this was done by authorization of Congress. As each new State has been accepted into the constellation of the Union, a new star has been added. At first, a new bar was also added, but after reaching the number of fifteen, it was decided that the bars should be reduced again to thirteen, the number of original States, and that only a star should be added as each State was admitted.

Patriotic Demagogues.—

A distinguished American citizen has been accused of demagoguery because he ventured to say that the cure for the depression should begin at the bottom and not at the top. Not many people would accuse Professor John Dewey of an inherent sympathy with the crowd, and yet he said recently that "an increase in the purchasing power of the masses is indispensable to recovery. We have held from the start that the policies of the Administration were an attempt to solve the depression from the top by assisting a small class of investors instead of helping the large class of wage earners and salaried persons." Even The New York Times has turned at least halfway demagogue when it says "the railroads, banks and large enterprises have been assisted directly in the hope that they may extend the benefit to all the lesser fry. This plan has failed before, as in the tariff and the country may be nearing a point, in the opinion of some observers, where the all-essential buying power of the rank and file will have to be improved in some manner." Unless relief can be extended to the farmers and laborers by some definite program such as the McAdoo plan, we can see no hope of any radical cure for the present depression. If this is demagoguery, what the United States needs more than anything else just now is a few first-class demagogues.—Exchange.

"Within Her Income."—

Under the above caption the Richmond Times-Dispatch has the following to say as to Virginia's Governor's action in ordering a ten per cent cut in expenditures by the various departments of the State. The governor, "acting with the authority of the 1932 General Assembly, has served notice on the heads of State departments and agencies that they must begin work during the first year of the biennium with all general fund appropriations as approved by the Legislature cut an additional 10 per cent. And the terse, though complete explanation, as the Governor phrased it, is that Virginia must live 'within her income.'

"Wisely enough, the Governor has left to departmental heads the task of saying where the reduction shall be placed. If certain activities are to be curtailed, these executives should know it. If salary cuts are the only way, then they will be able to protect those whose compensation has already been reduced to a minimum. And if courage is not lacking, here is the opportunity, political pressure notwithstanding, for some of the sinecures to be abolished outright.

"A more significant fact in the reduction is that Governor Pollard is determined Virginia's financial standing shall remain on its high plane. The Legislature, at his advice, reduced total appropriations by nearly 10 per cent as compared with those of the present biennium; it accepted his suggestion of a 10 per cent salary cut for all State employees; and it gave him an unprecedented power further to reduce State appropriations.

"In the world at large we have seen severe retrenchment measures and there is no reason why governments should not also cut their suits to fit the cloth.

"Here in Virginia is an example for the Federal Government. Rather than raise taxes or incur a deficit, we are going to cut governmental expenses. But the Federal Government, for less efficiently managed than Virginia, has turned to the tax collector for help rather than to the blue pencil in the chief executive's hand—and more's the pity."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Dr. W. J. Lahmon: "In the old days of the saloon there were three bootleggers to one licensed saloon-keeper. Nothing could be more fallacious, or even more silly than the arguments of the wets. Such as they are, they have been answered a thousand times, but they are put over by a subsidized press on to a suffering and distracted people."

Rev. H. C. Caviness, Portsmouth, Va., goes to Wadley, Ala., for union evangelistic meetings beginning July 11th. Bro. Caviness is a zealous and consecrated evangelist and feels the weight of responsibility resting upon him for this great undertaking. He craves an interest in the prayers of friends and CHRISTIAN SUN readers that the meetings may result in building up the churches of Wadley, and of enlisting many souls in the active work of the Kingdom of the Lord.

Mr. George T. Gunter, president, Western North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, Route No. 1, Ramseur, N. C., calls attention to the announcement of the Convention this year, meeting with the Christian Church at Biscoe, will be a one-day session, Tuesday, July 5th, beginning at 10:00 A. M. It will be a full day, and the Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies are urged to have delegates present for the day. The program is promised for publication in next week's SUN.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom, writing from Fancy Gap, June 9th, give this information and send this appeal, to which we are sure many CHRISTIAN SUN readers will give heed: "We began our revival at Rocky Ford last Sunday night. We need the prayers of God's people very much. Last evening more than two hundred people stood and said they were unsaved. Can you get a vision of the great responsibility we feel in leading these souls that are groping in darkness to see the light? There were more than five hundred people packed in our little church last evening, hungering for the gospel. Our seats are being carried from Elk Spur to Rocky Ford so as to give more people a place to hear God's word. God is saving souls here. We feel weak, but we are seeking his divine guidance as best we know, and again we ask special prayers from you."

The twenty-third annual meeting of the Conference of the Congregational Churches of the Carolinas was in session in Raleigh Tuesday and Wednesday, June 7th and 8th, at the United Church (Congregational-Christian), Raleigh, N. C. Meeting with the Conference were representatives of the three Christian Conferences of North Carolina. A constitution was adopted for the united body, which, it has been proposed, shall meet in the spring for educational and inspirational purposes. Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, was elected president of the united body; Dr. J. Edward Kirby, Raleigh, vice-president; Miss Ruth Sargent, Southern Pines, secretary. The executive officers were charged with the responsibility of drafting the Constitution and By-Laws to be presented at the next meeting. The Association of Congregational Churches of the merged body named the Rev. W. T. Scott, Winston-Salem, moderator, and the Rev. Milo J. Sweet, Salisbury, registrar and superintendent. There were many interesting and informational addresses delivered in addition to the routine work, mapping out plans and future programs of other united bodies.

Rev. A. D. Woodworth, writing from Tokio, Japan, May 14th, says out there: "The hard times seem to become more deeply felt. The war has cost about two hundred million yen ($100,000,000.00) and in Shanghai alone the property loss is estimated at four hundred and twenty-five million yen ($212,500,000.00). The excess of imports over exports in the first four months of the year is said to be one hundred and sixty million yen ($80,000,000.00). This shows how the money of the country is being drained away. I think there has not been a year since we came to Japan when the imports have not been more than a hundred million yen ($50,000,000.00) above the value of the exports. One of the bright lights of the present time is the fact that all the Japanese churches are planning to begin what to them is foreign mission work in Manchuria. They expect to work first among their own people who are there and then gradually branch out and include the Chinese. This shows that there is a much greater willingness among the denominations to cooperate in Japan than there is in America. What a fine thing it would be if all the denominational fences were to fall down and all the Christian forces could work together with a united front against the foes of evil."

From Greensboro Daily News of June 11th: "Joint sessions of the Afro-Christian convention and the Woman's National Home and Foreign Missionary convention of the United States and South America, to be held at St. Stephen's Christian Church, 505 High Street, for five days, beginning June 19th, are expected to bring to Greensboro about 200 negro church and missionary workers. Mergers of the Afro-Christian and Congregational Churches is one of the important matters to receive the attention of the convention. The meetings mark the 33rd biennial session of the organizations. Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor of the First Christian Church, Greensboro, who was elected president of the Congregational Churches of the Carolinas when a merger of the two was effected this week, will be among the prominent white ministers to be heard, as will Dr. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, O., assistant secretary of the General Council of Congregational-Christian Churches of the world. Dr. Denison will speak Tuesday morning, June 22nd, on "What Does the Union of the Christian and Congregational Churches Mean?" He is to be Dr. Rowland's guest. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, secretary of missions of the Southern Christian Convention, will be another speaker."

In the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention to meet with Union Church, Union Ridge, N. C., June 23rd and 24th, Bro. W. B. Truitt, president, calls attention to the fact that the Young People's Fellowship will have charge of the evening session Thursday, June 23rd. The president of the Fellowship, Miss Birdie Rowland, will put on and have charge of the program. Another feature of the Convention will be the visit on the afternoon of Friday, June 24th, of the entire summer school at Elon College, and in connection with the final session Friday, June 24th, the president of Elon College, Dr. L. E. Smith, will make an address. All pastors in the bounds of the Convention have been requested to see that delegates are chosen and sent from all the Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies of the Convention. Dr. C. H. Rowland, writing as the president of the Conference, to the pastors, says: "President W. B. Truitt is putting forth every effort to have every pastor and representatives from every Sunday School and Endeavor Society present. There are few busy laymen who feel such a keen interest in the young people as the president of this Convention does. It will be a calamity for us pastors to neglect this work, and allow our young people to miss this opportunity. The young people are willing to undertake great things if we give them a chance. I am writing this personal note asking you to do all you can to have your Sunday School and Christian Endeavor represented and be present yourself."

MEMORIAL DAY.

This is an annual event at Concord with a growing interest for several years. A very large audience was in attendance this year. It is a day many look forward to for meeting old acquaintances and having a friendly talk. The pastor preached the annual Memorial sermon at the 11:00 o'clock hour.

There was an abundance of flowers to decorate the mounds in the cemetery.

An enjoyable feature of the program was the splendid music rendered by the Forbes Sisters Quartette from Hine's Chapel Christian Church. These ladies have dedicated their talents to singing church music, which appeals to the Christian soul.

Bros. A. O. Powell and C. B. Page made interesting addresses in the afternoon. Fellowship and communion of our Lord's Supper with special music by the Forbes Sisters, brought the program to a close.

The day was enjoyed by all who expressed their experience.

MEETING AT LAGRANGE, GA.

We have just closed what, in many ways, was a great meeting. On account of the shortage of money, I undertook to do the preaching. We ran for two weeks. The major part of our effort was within the church. We have about twenty people who are members of the church who have taken no interest in the work. We hoped that a meeting would revive them and give us renewed courage for our growing challenge. We succeeded in some degree, and all who attended the services were helped. During the first week some organization of the church each night conducted a devotional service under the general theme: "What It Means to be a Christian." Following that service I spoke briefly on some topic. The second week we carried on somewhat differently with hymns, prayers and testimonies up to the preaching hour. Brother J. D. was with us and preached once.

The fellowship was fine and the spirit throughout the meeting was warm and encouraging. The congregations increased in spite of the fact that the schools in the city were having their final week of examinations and Commencements. On the closing night of the meeting we had by far the largest attendance we have ever had. We received 23 members during the meeting, which brings our total since November to 52. We have been busy building an organization since we have been here and have not wanted many additions at any one time, as we are hoping to put the folks to work as they come in, since it has been a process of welding the membership of what was formerly two congregations into one. We were gratified upon investigation before the meeting began, to find that we had gone through the stage of acclimating and organizing with not the least feeling on the part of any member of the church which would hinder. We feel that we are really a family, and we are endeavoring to give every member of the family a suitable task. We rejoice that a willingness to accept responsibility and pull together has been evidenced from the very first service. Our prayer is that such a spirit may prevail and that we may please him whom we seek to serve in all we do.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

ROCK SPRING CHURCH, of Alabama, near Haleyville, is being entirely built by local labor under the direction of the pastor, Rev. M. R. Hargraves. It is shingled with hand-riven boards, and will be in use soon after this note appears.

REV. JAMES M. GRAHAM, Presbyterian minister of Prattville, Ala., was formerly associated with the Congregational Churches, and has done some special favors for the East View, Ala., Congregational Church, which has recently built a parsonage.

ON THE PLATEAU, near Chandler's Mountain, Steele, Ala., the young people of the Congregational Church have recently organized a Christian Endeavor Society. Rev. Annie C. Moat is the president, and Miss Sharpton of Route 3, Steele, Ala., is secretary.

THE RECENT CYCLONE devastation in Alabama was more general than was reported. Near the home of Rev. Joseph P. Bean, a Congregational minister living near Wedowee, Ala., nine families lost their homes in the storm and the Methodist Episcopal Church was wrecked.

REV. DAVID W. SHEPHERD and his assistant, Rev. J. R. Prince, have largely increased the congregations of their two parishes in Phenix City, Ala., and Columbus, Ga. They have a prayer meeting in the church and in one of the homes of the parish each week, and a flourishing Christian Endeavor Society in each church.

MISS AGNES AVERYT, who has been teaching school in Florida, has returned for the summer to Shelby, Ala., where she will do community work through the Church of the Covenant (Congregational), which has a large two-story brick church house. Rev. and Mrs. M. D. Morgan, Rev. and Mrs. Joseph E. Each and Rev. and Mrs. Gerald Smith are interested in the work at Shelby.

A RURAL CONGREGATIONAL PASTOR in North Alabama has a boy and a girl in high school. Both Julius and Lorene are accustomed to getting "A" grades in their studies. Not long ago, Lorene came home in great grief. Everything was wrong and dark hung all about. She had received a "B" in her studies. These two minister's children were ranked among the first four in a class of 20.

ONE OF THE most encouraging signs of the advance of the Kingdom is the giving and receiving of favors across denominational lines. The Society of Friends, or Quakers, furnished several workers in the large Extension Work carried out by the Pleasant Hill, Tenn., Community Congregational Church in 1931, under the direction of Rev. E. E. White. They expect to do the same thing this year. The young people give their service and are effective workers.

UNION CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH of Jacksonville, Fla., Rev. H. Samuel Fritsch, pastor. Following the custom of former years, during the summer, union Sunday evening services will be held. The churches cooperating will be Christian, First Methodist, First Presbyterian, Snyder Memorial and Union Congregational. This summer the services will be held in Hemming Park, using loud speakers. Individual services will be resumed in our own church on Sunday night, September 11th. Recently, part of one of Dr. Fritsch's Sunday evening lectures was featured by the N. E. A. Service and appeared in daily newspapers throughout the country, among them being the Boston Globe, which paper also featured it in its news broadcast.

GEORGIA AND ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

An occurrence of general interest which took place recently in the bounds of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference is the ordination of Mr. David W. Shepherd, who was reared within four miles of Elon and has grown up in the Bethlehem Christian Church, of which he is a member. While at Elon College he was an associate member of the Elon College Church, and while at Nashville, of the Collegieside Congregational Church. He had been licensed by the Tennessee Conference of Congregational Churches and by the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, under whose care he had been a student. Being requested by Rev. Messrs. S. C. Harrell, C. H. Rowland and A. W. Hurst, the Executive Committee of the above Conference, Rev. J. D. Dollar and Rev. H. M. Gray of the Executive Committee of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference represented the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at the ordination as well as their own churches, which had been called into a joint ecclesiastical ordaining council with an equal number of Congregational Churches and a few individuals.

From the Christian Church point of view the ordination went off well. Brother Gray was made Scribe of the Council. At the ordination service there were ten parts, four of them were Christian, five Congregational, and one by the Baptist pastor of Columbus, who was president of the Ministerial Union, and who gave Brother Shepherd a fine welcome to the community and said that in this, as well as in most textile communities, about one person out of four was tied up to a church. Christian pastors read the Scripture, made the Ordaining Prayer, and gave a charge to the people of both of the churches which Brother Shepherd is now serving, with Brother J. R. Prince, a licentiate of our Conference, as his helper.

Since Brother Shepherd is serving both the United Congregational Church of Phenix City and the United Christian-Congregational Church of Columbus, this method of ordination by a joint council was about the only method that could be used at the present time to have him unitedly ordained. The finest kind of spirit prevailed both at the council organization and examination at Phenix City in the afternoon, and at the ordination service at the United Christian-Congregational Church (commonly known as Rose Hill Church) at night. The Congregational brethren had brought a contribution to this stage of the uniting of the churches in this fine old method of calling churches into a council to do a bit of necessary business. The council can do nothing more than its call, or "Letter Missive," calls for, and is forever over and unconvenable again, after it has adjourned. We are glad to have this first joint ordination since the Burlington meeting, in the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference.

J. D. DOLLAR, President.

P. S.—We took the offering for missions at Noonday Church last Sunday, and will take it at Lanett right soon. Our offerings will not be as large as we wished they would, but conditions here are such that our people have just not got the money. Several of our men have families, but no jobs, and they continue to lay men off and cut wages. Hope things get settled down soon, so our folks can make a living. We are getting along very well in our work here and at Noonday. Pray for us. J. D. D.

UNION CHURCH AT THE CROSSROADS.

A multitude of churches claim the title, "The Church at the Crossroads," but only a few are justified in affixing the further phrase, "of the World." Yet the Union Church in the Canal Zone can properly describe itself in these words. During 1929 there passed by the doors of its churches 6,432 ships flying the flags of twenty-one nations. These vessels came from all seas and were bound for all lands. They carried people of every race and cargoes from every clime. The tolls which they paid proved that the United States made a good investment when it dug the great "ditch."

The men who severed two continents with their steam shovels, building the great locks by which ships are lifted up to the greatest artificial lake in the world and then set down again in another ocean, had their own ideas about the church. These American engineers and workmen were accompanied by their families. They desired for themselves the privilege of worship, and for their children the opportunities of the Sunday School. They cared more for the church than they did for churches. If one canal could serve ships of all nations, why could not one church serve for all denominations? Out of this spirit was the Union Church born. Most of the denominational leaders in the United States agreed with this reasoning and refrained from the establishment of competing churches in the Canal Zone.—The Congregationalist.

THEOLOGY.

Why should Christians ever "back off" from theology? The meaning of the word is simple enough, coming from two Greek words, theos "God," and legien "to speak." Theology tells us of God, is a speaking of or about God, "the science of God." The Bible, of course, is filled with theology, and gives us the only true science of God. People who know nothing of theology know nothing of God—yet even Christian people sometimes say, "I have no use for theology." A little child who knows and rejoices that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," and who has received Christ as Saviour, knows a great deal about theology. Paul by inspiration was the master theologian of the ages; and no one knows Christ and the Father as they long to have us know them until the riches of Paul's theology have been read and received. A Christian business man writes in a personal letter to the Editor that he and his family have been obliged to leave their local church (of an evangelical denomination) because of its Laodicean state and the Christless preaching of the minister. The letter says, in part: "In front of the church are signs which any Jew, Christian Scientist, or Romanist could just as well put out, absolutely Christless. One day the preacher said in beginning his sermon, 'I know nothing about theology, and furthermore I don't want to know anything about it.' Our eleven-year-old daughter then innocently asked if the preacher had not gone to Princeton Seminary for three years." Many a graduate of Princeton Seminary, unlike this minister, is rejoicing in the theology he learned there—the theology of Paul, and of John, and of Christ, who was "made . . . to be sin for us . . . that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."—*S. PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

"IN HIS NAME."

Paul gave a command and a warning that we of our day do well to hear and heed: "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."

It seems so easy in our time to leave out the Lord Jesus. Individuals about us crowd him out. He seems superfluous. The Name, which is above every name, is so little thought of, so infrequently mentioned.

Two great writers in the Bible used this word, "whatsoever." The first was Solomon in Ecclesiastes: "Whatsoever the hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Many in our day have not gone any further than that, some not that far. Paul took it and went much further: "Whatsoever ye do, do all for the glory of God." Solomon was writing and thinking of this life only of what we can get out of it here and now. Paul was thinking of a life here enriched by linking itself up now with God, so that in the fullness of a larger life one might live forever in and to the glory of God. It is a good thing to be kind to your neighbor, to help the helpless, to care for the poor and needy, and it may be done just for their sakes. But that is not enough. It is too meagre. It is too restricted. It all ends too quickly.

To help your neighbor, to care for the needy, to give bread to the hungry, to relieve the oppressed, in "the name of the Lord," for the sake of him who made them and us, that, and that alone, is a sufficient dynamic. Our sacred Scripture no where teaches that "whosoever shall give a cup of water to drink shall have his reward." One may give a cup of water to drink to a thirsty individual this moment, and in the next hour kick that individual and leave him more thirsty than before. There is no Scriptural teaching about giving a reward in exchange for a cup of cold water to an individual. If we go that far and no further, we tear the very heart out of our Scripture, and leave it a poor, human document, indeed. This, however, is Scripture, with the heart and soul of him in it, Who is its inspiration. "Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you he shall not lose his reward." Christ identified himself with the little ones, and declared, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." When we leave Christ out and think of the little one only, we haven't gone far enough.

The human dynamic is not sufficient. There must be the driving, sustaining, directing power of God and the Son of God. We may give a cup of cold water or do the generous deed to the little one for our glory or for the glory of the little one, but that is not enough. In order that that glory may be sufficient, and have its fruit in the deed and the doer of the deed, it must be done, as Paul urges that all things be done by deed and word, "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

HIS BROKEN BODY.

Dr. W. Knighton Bloom relates an incident that makes a historical event very personal and quite immediate. After a certain battle, a survivor was walking across the field and saw the partially covered face of a prostrate form that seemed to be familiar. Bending over and pulling back the cover from the face, the survivor discovered that the soldier was dead and, placing the cover back over the soldier's face, said: "His body was broken for me." It was. It had been bruised with a bullet, pierced with a sword, and the man had given his life for others. One turns to the 11th chapter of Hebrews for further confirmation. "They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth." Their bodies were broken for us. Through them the cause of righteousness was championed, and in holding to their faith, a firm, fixed faith in God that they would not let go, their bodies were broken. Through such broken bodies, the church has been established, is carried on and maintained. In the church, through the church, for the church, laying down their lives that the church might live, that the gospel may be preached, that the Lord Jesus may be proclaimed, men and women have given their bodies to be bruised and broken. They have gone hungry, thirsty, destitute, needy, but they have pressed on, and they are doing it yet. If you wish to find the heroes of the world, the truly bold and courageous, you must search the church records. From Stephen to John Wesley and James O'Kelly, and from their day to ours, you will find supporting, sustaining, battling in the church and for the church, those whose bodies were bruised and broken. That is why the church leads the state in building and sustaining institutions of learning, places of refuge, and of charity, and also blazes the way ahead of trade and commerce through the light of the gospel of the Son of God. The body of David Livingstone was bruised, emaciated, broken, not merely for the Africans, but for all who love the Lord and the church that the most needy might have succor and the most helpless might have help, that the most helpless might have hope and the most godless might have God. Their bodies were broken for us. Great thinking, great scholarship, as well as great lives, great living, are engendered and developed by and through the church, because in it and constituting a large part of it, are those whose bodies are bruised and broken for us.

The boldest, most courageous, the most daring, alert and adventurous body or institution of our day, and coming down through the ages, is the church of the living God.

CATHOLIC AND PROTESTANT CHURCH PAPERS.

Rev. James E. Clary, editor of The Presbyterian Advance, has made an investigation as to the circulation of church papers in Protestant and also in Catholic churches. Making a report to the Editorial Council of the religious press, April 29th, Dr. Clark reveals some facts that Protestants could well profit by, and, certainly, our Christian ministers could, with profit to themselves and all concerned, take to heart.

"As you know, there has been a steady decline in the circulation of Protestant religious periodicals during the past fifteen years. I undertook this spring an investigation of the situation in the Catholic Church and I discover that in the 10-year period from 1920 to 1930, Catholic newspapers as a whole practically doubled their circulation. They have sustained a loss during the last year or two, but not nearly so serious a loss as in the case of Protestant papers, which indicates that there is more general interest in church periodicals among Catholics than among Protestants."

This is surprising, and when these facts were found out, Dr. Clark went to work to learn the reason, which he gives in the following statement:

"It is unquestionably due to a church-wide determination on the part of Catholic leaders to create, from the church point of view, a more intelligent and better-informed constituency. I requested specific information on this point from Mr. Humphrey E. Desmond, who has succeeded his father as editor of the Catholic Citizen in Milwaukee, and he confirms my conclusion, stating that the circulation gains have been 'largely due to an intensive promotional campaign for the Catholic press during this period'—the past fifteen years.

"As you probably know, the elder Desmond, long editor of the Catholic Citizen, died this last spring, and it was he who was largely responsible for the movement in the Catholic Church. His son, and successor, writes:

"About 1911, my father suggested a Catholic Press Sunday with the idea that that particular Sunday in the year would be used for sermons on the Catholic press in all Catholic Churches. From this beginning has come the present Catholic Press Month and in February of each year many sermons are delivered on the subject of the support of the Catholic Press and many programs are arranged for Catholic parochial schools, academies and colleges. This has been very successful propaganda."

"It seems to me that the contrast between the situation in the Protestant churches and that of the Catholic church is a matter of intense interest. It is a rare exception that a Protestant minister or Protestant church official makes any effort to push the circulation of church papers. Indeed, it is a very common thing in our church for pastors and sessions to refuse to permit their congregations to be canvassed for any church periodicals. But our Catholic brethren give a whole month to arousing interest in their church periodicals. The priests preach on the subject and their young people are faithfully taught the value of a church paper. That is a tremendously significant fact."

We agree with Dr. Clark that this is a tremendously significant fact. THE SUN's editor has time and again requested, and the Conferences have voted, that pastors tell their congregations about the value of reading their church paper, and yet there are numbers of pastors who go through the year without giving any outward evidence whatever that they have any concern in their church paper. We wonder how this situation may be improved for THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

POLITICS AND RELIGION.

Many people think that religion is losing ground and that politics is controlling the country. Proof of the fallacy of that conclusion is seen in politics as well as in religion. District, State and National Conventions now occupying the public mind, reveal to thinking men that the supreme question, even in political conventions, is a moral question. Prohibition crops out in every convention. Leaders in the field of politics are presenting their views and their wishes in the matter of referendum or resubmission of the question of prohibition. That question is a religious question. The question of temperance lies at the heart of religion. The church set up its claim for prohibition, carried the question into the schools, the religious press, and finally into politics. More emphasis is laid upon that question now in politics than any other question.

When it comes to a candidate for President, the politicians want to know whether he is wet or dry. Political leaders, many of them, would be glad to see that question eliminated from politics; but the greater their effort to remove it, the more it appears in the conventions. Religion and its agencies rise up everywhere and demand respect for the law of man and the law of God. The Bible teaches that, "every man that striveth for mastery is temperate in all things." (1. Cor. 9:25.) And, "the powers that are ordained of God." (Rom. 13:1.)

The biggest question in the political world today, in this country, is the liquor question, the prohibition question, the religious question. Scientists had as well try to blot out the sun as the politicians to put out the question of alcohol as a beverage. If religion is such a small question, why don't politicians drop it from their conventions? It is here to stay and to win. It would be as easy to get slavery back as to get the saloon back. W. W. S.

A DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

By the National Prohibition Board of Strategy.

The Eighteenth Amendment is the culmination in government action of three hundred years of American experiment in an effort to solve the beverage alcohol problem. It marks a new milestone on the road of constitutional government, pioneering a new realm which has peculiarly to do with the modern social order and with the rights of society in a free government to be protected from anti-social institutions. It has established a principle of human liberty and real freedom which belongs in the class with slave emancipation and popular government. It has taken from a nefarious traffic the sanction of government and the protection of law. It has torn the mask of respectability from the vintner, the brewer, the distiller, the retailer and wholesaler of beverage intoxicants and has placed them in the criminal class. It has made liquor, once arrogant, a furtive thing. It has erected a standard of social welfare which has attracted the attention and interest of mankind throughout the civilized world.

Appeal to Political Parties.

Recognizing the outstanding importance of this human welfare achievement in the new age of high power, high speed, high tension, interdependence and advancing social mindedness; and mindful of the vital relationship of this fundamental policy of government to modern civilization, we most respectfully and earnestly appeal to each of the major national political parties to include in its platform a plank pledging the party to the observance and to vigorous enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution and the laws enacted pursuant thereto and also calling upon the public officials, state and national, effectively to enforce the laws intended to make the Amendment fully operative.

We also call upon each of the parties, in national conventions assembled, to nominate for the offices of President and Vice-President only candidates who from their past records, thier present attitude and their public utterances are able to demonstrate their ability to qualify under the constitutionally prescribed presidential oath to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Prohibition Constitutionally Adopted.

The National Prohibition Amendment to the Constitution was inaugurated, proposed by Congress and ratified by the States in the strictest accordance with Constitutional requirements, having due consideration for all the exacting demands of the processes by which our fundamental charter is changed. We insist that that Amendment shall now have the full benefit of the safeguards and limitations which belong to every other provision of the basic law.

The Constitutional Method.

The only method by which the opponents of prohibition can hope to secure either repeal or modification of the Eighteenth Amendment is the constitutional method which involves the election and action of Senators and Representatives in Congress, State legislatures or members of state and national conventions.

If and when the opponents of prohibition register sufficient popular strength of their own to invoke the established provisions of the Constitution and thus challenge the Eighteenth Amendment, we will, to the limit of our ability, help to preserve and defend that amendment, but we will not join its enemies in any effort to invoke the amending clause for that purpose.

Prohibition the Best Policy.

We believe in prohibition as the best policy of government thus far devised or proposed for the purpose of mitigating the evils of the beverage alcohol traffic.

We are confident that in spite of all the evils which emanate from the lawless liquor traffic today and in spite of difficulties of administration and enforcement, any other system suggested would inevitably foster greater evils and create more formidable difficulties.

So believing, we will not make even so much as a gesture toward the promotion of any project which is intended either directly or indirectly to bring back the old liquor traffic or to establish another system of any kind which involves the legal manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, exportation or use of beverage alcohol.

Why Favor a Repeal Amendment?

Why should friends of prohibition favor any kind of a so-called "referendum" or "resubmission" of the Eighteenth Amendment? This question does not involve the attitude which one might hold toward any direct legislative provision of any state or municipal charter or toward the amending clause of the Federal Constitution. The fact that one believes in a particular method of amending the fundamental law does not carry with it even an implied commitment to invoke or assist in the effort to invoke that method whenever any group, large or small, may seek to use such method to place in the Constitution a provision to which he is opposed, or to take out of the Constitution a provision which he favors.

The Spirit of the Amending Clause.

The amending clause of the Federal Constitution has been established and maintained by the people for the express purpose of providing a method for changing the fundamental law, whenever public sentiment in favor of a specific change has been created to a sufficient degree. No such amending clause has ever been established in free constitutional government, with the idea that such a clause would be invoked by those who do not favor the change proposed.

It naturally follows, therefore, that whenever a sufficient number of the representatives of the people join together to invoke an amending provision to secure any specific modification, such representatives are of necessity placed in the position of desiring such a change. Hence, whenever any group, not favorable to such a change, joins with the solid bloc of those who favor it, in order to invoke such an amending method, not only is the public deceived, misled and wrongly influenced thereby, but the very safeguards and limitations which attach to such amending process are set aside and the fundamental reasons for maintaining such a thing as a Constitution, are violated.

Other Constitutional Amendments.

If the opponents of the Fifteenth Amendment were to muster sufficient strength to invoke the amending clause in that connection, the friends of that amendment would undoubtedly marshal their forces and fight to the last ditch to hold the amendment in the Constitution; but there is no likelihood of their joining with the enemies of that amendment in order to amass sufficient strength to invoke the constitutional test.

The same rule holds true in regard to the Sixteenth, Seventeenth and Nineteenth Amendments. If the amending clause of the Constitution should ever be invoked to modify or repeal any one of these amendments, it will as a matter of course be invoked not by its friends but by its opponents.

Not a Party Issue.

Prohibition of the beverage alcohol traffic has never been a national major party issue. It has so cut across party lines that up to the present time there has not been a sufficiently convincing reason for making it a partisan question.

During all the years when the movement for national prohibition was gaining strength, neither political party felt called upon to make this question a partisan issue. Even after two-thirds of all the states had shown the attitude of the people of those states by adopting state-wide prohibition laws or constitutional amendments, and even after more than three-fourths of the states had officially ratified the Eighteenth Amendment, neither of the national political parties considered it expedient to make prohibition a national party issue.

A majority of the members of the House of Representatives and more than two-thirds of the members of the United States Senate stand for the maintenance of the Eighteenth Amendment and the national prohibition law. More than three-fourths of the states today are maintaining against all opposition, their state prohibition codes, insisting upon upholding the Eighteenth Amendment. Why, in the face of such facts, should either political party now make the repeal or a new test of the amendment a major party issue?

More Reason for Prohibition than Repeal.

The official record of the last twenty years and the present official status of prohibition in the statutes and the constitutions of the several states and of the nation would seem to suggest a course of approval of prohibition by any political party rather than a course of disapproval. How does it come, therefore, that there is such a persistent demand by certain groups within the ranks of each major political party organization to make this question a partisan football or to give support to the effort now being put forth for the re-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Monday, June 6, 1932, a few miles from Suffolk, on the Hosier Road, occurred a tragic and pathetic event that carries with it a lesson for thoughtful persons interested in human life, childhood, and home. It happened during a severe thunderstorm and rain. It was in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Preston Harrell with a family of four children: Alma, Helen, Dorothy Inez, and Brinkley Harrell. The cloud arose, the rain began to fall. Dorothy seized an umbrella and a small tub and ran out of the back porch, and placed the tub near the eaves and said she was going to fill the tub with rain-water. Mrs. Harrell held the wire door, and the other three children, and a pet dog were on the porch. A flash of lightning seemed to the mother to envelop a sycamore tree in the yard, and ten-year-old Dorothy on the steps, with white fire. Mrs. Harrell, holding the wire door, saw the electric fire as it played about the child, who fell on the steps. Mother seized the sweet girl and tried to give her help in breathing.

Dr. O. R. Yates was called and rushed to the home; but too late to save Dorothy. The stroke was fatal to the dear child and she had been taken up to heaven. As Mrs. Harrell took the child into house, she looked out into the yard and saw a negro man, who worked on the place, lying on the ground. He had been stunned by the bolt which killed the little girl. Later he regained consciousness and dragged himself to the house to try to give aid to the mother and child; but it was too late; Dorothy had received the fatal stroke. It was the saddest experience in the Harrell home, and the memory of it will never pass from that family and neighbors and relatives.

The funeral services were held in Eure Christian Church, Gates County, N. C., June 7th, at 4:30 P. M., with this writer and Rev. J. M. Roberts, once pastor of that church. The church was crowded with sympathetic relatives and friends. The grounds were full of quiet automobiles. A quartet from Suffolk, composed of Mrs. H. L. Jacobs, Mrs. Rosa Brinkley, Mr. W. W. Ballard and Mr. Robert Harrell, accompanied by Mrs. Ruth Harrell, rendered "Jesus Loves Me," "Safe In the Arms of Jesus," and "God Will Take Care of You." "Jesus Loves Me," was sung by request, because Dorothy loved to sing it, and sang it often.

The flowers, which were many and beautiful, were carried by twenty-five little girls, classmates, who looked so sweet as the casket, covered with flowers, was carried through the throng of sweet little girls by eight little boys from the church to the grave in the cemetery close to the house of God. No more touching service was ever held in that church, and no more lasting impression was ever made upon that congregation. The atmosphere made one feel as if the church was bathed in tears.

One spiritually minded man, who visited the home before the dear child was carried out, told me he had never seen such resignation in parents in the loss of a child. It was a sad home, but a home resigned to the will of God. They had the spirit of David, who, when his child died, said: "Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." (II. Samuel 12:23.) That is the true spirit for parents when they lose a child. In this case it was sad for the dear little girl to be stricken by lightning, in the midst of the family. But what would heaven be without children? If all lived to be old, heaven would be a home for the aged rather than a family home. God is our Father and his family will be composed of infants, children, young people, mature souls and old men and women. The Preston Harrell family will think more of heaven since 10-year-old Dorothy is there.

W. W. STALEY.

JESUS AS CHRIST.

Jesus of Nazareth was a puzzle and a perplexity to the people among whom he moved while on earth; he was extraordinary; they scarcely knew where to place him. Even those who knew him best, seemed slow in rightly appraising him.

It was a great moment to them when it dawned upon them that he was the Christ. They thought of him as a teacher, they felt that he was a prophet, they recognized him as a leader, but these features were all transcended when they saw him as Christ. In addition to the conviction expressed by Peter, that he was the Christ, running all through the writings of the Apostles, and their preaching, this fact concerning him was the dominant, crowning note. The glory of his personality, his work, and his mission, was that he was Christ.

It is well to give particular recognition to this fact in days like these. Jesus, now as then, is much in the thought of the people. He cannot well be hid, be obscured. Yet, in spite of the insistent emphasis in the New Testament, as to this thought of Jesus being Christ, many seem obtuse to the vital significance of this.

Much is being spoken of him as the humanitarian, the great social reformer, the champion of the poor, the masterful teacher, the superb idealist. Yes, the early disciples saw something of all this, but these features do not constitute the crowning glory of his personality.

Men are seeing now, as these first friends of Jesus saw, the dynamic effect of his personality on human relations, but as the Christ, they recognized and stressed the God relation. It was the death of Christ rather than the life of Jesus that impressed them. It was the Cross of Calvary, not the applause of the multitude that remained significant. It was the risen Christ in which they rested their hope, instead of the Jesus who fed the hungry. It was Jesus made Christ, anointed, approved by God, that created and sustained their matchless enthusiasm. It is the Christ dynamic for humanity that is to function for salvation, rather than a system of ethics, a philosophic formula of social contacts, a scheme worked out by human legislation, a force from above rather than developed from below.

To think of Jesus only as a teacher, a social reformer, a religious leader, even, is to miss the essential significance of his power. There have been and are many religious leaders, but only one Christ as appointed by God. It is as Christ that Jesus becomes Lord—the same yesterday, today and forever.

G. A. CONIBEAR.

THE CHURCH.

However much the church may need a revival, there is no other institution that has been nearly so conducive to human happiness and righteousness, and has played such a significant part in bringing out and developing the best there is in men and women as has the church. The historian, Leckey, said, years ago: "The church is the one indispensable institution," and despite its enemies, it has gone on through the years revealing new truth and establishing greater things in the realm of Christian righteousness on earth. I think it was Stafford Brooke who said: "If we destroy a thousand old superstitious beliefs in our search for the truth, we must search on." This has been the one supreme mission of the church and no institution, in all the ages, has had such remarkable results in its achievements. There is nothing more pathetic to me than the person who is so stupid as to discount the church and its enterprises because of groundless modern attacks on the Bible and Christian philosophy, the revelation of new and greater truth.

It was my privilege, about two years ago, while spending a few days in St. Augustine, Fla., to spend much of the time with a retired physician who had spent forty years in the service of the United States Government, combating disease in many countries of the globe. This distinguished practitioner, in all his findings, has found nothing that so much interests him as the truth of the Bible and the revelation of faith through the church of Jesus Christ. It is the supreme conviction in his life.

It may be, as some say, that the church has failed, in a measure, to gain the allegiance of the unchurched masses because it has failed to adopt a firmer attitude in its opposition to many social customs, current business ideas and political irregularities; or it may be that we have been serving too much in the oldness of the letter and too little in the newness of the Spirit. We may have cared too much for forms and ceremonies, but as Rev. David Warner said some time ago, "We should have seen that a creed-hobbled religion is not saving a sin-scourged world." Heaven give us a true orthodoxy. We can see that the notion of a remote God with an imputed salvation is breaking down. Give us Jesus at the center of our Christian motives and activities, and God will help us on.

GOD'S LOVE IN FOUR DIMENSIONS.

A prayer of Paul for the Ephesian saints was "to the end that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be strong to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled unto all the fullness of God." (Eph. 3:17-19.) Here divine love is spoken of as having breadth, length, depth and height. These four dimensions are also incorporated in the famous Golden Text of the Bible: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." (John 3:16.) "God so loved the world." Here is the breadth. His love was broad enough to cover the whole world, all of lost humanity. "That he gave his only begotten Son." Here is length. This shows how far his love would go. It exceeded the limits of all human love. In making the comparison, Paul says: "Peradventure for the good man some one even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." (Romans 5:6, 7.) And why did God give his only begotten Son? "That whosoever believeth on him should not perish." Here is depth. His love reached down to rescue man from a plane where he was fitted to destruction, where without divine intervention he would perish. In the next line is suggested the height. "But have eternal life." This is the sublime height to which God's love is destined to lift those who believe on his Son. "The free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Romans 6:23.)—C. A. Buchanan in the Gospel Advocate.

LICENSE THE KIDNAPPERS.

By H. BEAUCHAMP.

One of the big wet papers that habitually caters to the underworld recently said editorially, "Even the prohibitionists must become convinced at length . . . that national prohibition is a failure." That may be so, but I would add, there is another law that is just as signal a failure as the prohibition law, and that is the law against kidnapping, the violations of which have recently scandalized the whole country and occupied more front-page space in the papers for the last month than any liquor scandal ever did. And the anti-kidnapping law is a State law, too, which fully recognizes the beloved doctrine of "States rights." But it is a failure—a complete failure. It seems that it just simply can't be enforced, and that's all there is to it. And just think what the efforts to enforce it cost the country. Who can estimate the enormous economic waste involved in the vast sums of money and labor that have been expended in recent weeks to enforce this law, and all to no purpose. That money would have fed our army of unemployed to their fill. It's a burning shame to have a dead-letter law like that on our statute books, which the combined efforts of the entire police and detective force of the whole nation, assisted by Europe, have been unable to enforce.

The law against kidnapping ought to be repealed—of course it ought. To let these violations go on breaks down respect for all law, and makes hypocrites and liars of a lot of people. It's a shame, and the law is the cause of it all. We can't have a "national referendum on the subject and refer it back to the States" on the good old-fashioned Jeffersonian doctrine of local self-government, for that is where it is now. There is but one wise, patriotic, broad-minded thing to do, and that is to repeal this impracticable law. Then we should license the kidnappers and compel them to carry on their work under State, or Government, supervision, so that men, who do not like to have their liberties curtailed, may kidnap and be law-abiding citizens at the same time. The main thing is to have law enforcement. The wet statesmen (?) tell us that when an evil can't be prohibited, the wise thing to do is to regulate it by law.

Of course, it would be a little hard, temporarily, on the kidnapped babies and rich men, and bring sorrow and distress to their families, but just think of what a revenue the Government could derive from it, for kidnappers usually deal in huge sums. The Government must have money in these times of economic depression, and we must take from the shoulders of our big business men and corporations all the tax-burden that we possibly can. The kidnappers will gladly divide with the Government if they are given protection and their business accorded the respectability which would go with Government license.

"But," the reader says, "that doesn't make sense." It makes just as much sense, and the same sort of sense, as the arguments used by the wets for the repeal of our prohibition laws. It is exactly the line of reasoning (?) that they employ. There isn't an argument (?) they make for licensing liquor that cannot be made, word for word, and just as logically, for licensing kidnappers. But, of course, we can't expect a man with a rum-soaked brain to see it, nor a wet politician whose palm has been tickled by, or itches for, a share of the big liquor slush-fund contributed by brewers, distillers and the foreign liquor dealers and wine growers, and distributed by prominent wet politicians.

The fact is that licensing the kidnappers would not do one hundredth part of harm that would result from the legalized liquor traffic. True, the kidnappers would possibly hold as prisoners a few dozen babies, or rich men; but under a good, wisely enforced kidnapping license law, that would be only temporary; but to license the liquor traffic means to sell to the brewers and distillers the right to go into a wholesale debauchery of our American manhood, womanhood and childhood, making criminals, paupers, lunatics and diseased bodies of hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of our American people. No, to go back to the legalized liquor traffic would not only be a surrender to the underworld, and our people are not cowardly enough to make such a surrender, but it would place the very sanity of the American people under a grave suspicion.—In Biblical Recorder (Baptist).

PATIENT TOILERS.

The longer we live and the more we learn about humanity the more we appreciate patient people. Let no one despair of becoming more Christ-like in this beautiful grace, even though his inheritance or habits may have taken him far from the divine pattern. Steel will take on both polish and a keen edge if enough work is put on it.

Thomas Carlyle, the English essayist and historian, had labored for months gathering material for his great history of the French Revolution. His manuscripts were written in long-hand, the mere writing of which represented no small amount of labor. He loaned them to a friend, and a careless servant used them to kindle a fire.

Carlyle was in despair. He flung his pen aside and moped about, unable to overcome his discouragement. But one day as he looked out of his window in London, he saw a bricklayer at work. The man was enjoying his work as with speed and skill he laid into the wall a brick at a time, giving each a tap and stroke of his trowel.

At first Thomas Carlyle scorned the thought of the humble laborer who would build a great wall by plodding along brick by brick. Then a better spirit prevailed and he was inspired to undertake his work again. His "History of the French Revolution" ranks as a masterpiece in its kind of literature.

May we not believe that many a day-by-day toiler on life's walls has unconsciously been a help to some discouraged person? The old clock tolls off many years, even centuries, but it does it by seconds.—Wesleyan Methodist.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

PRAYER.

Lord, thine arm is not shortened, nor dost thou disregard the believer's faith. The smallness of our faith prevents thy power and souls are slipping anchor. God forgive and reclaim. Corruption assails every phase of the common law. Perchance only by a chastisement yet unfelt can righteousness be made to prevail. Send, O God, such chastisement as thou must, upon whom thou wilt, that our nation, the nations, may yield to thy reign. For the glory of Jesus' name. Amen.
L.

HE IS TURNING THE WORLD RIGHT SIDE UP!

Through the unending succession of the ministry which he founded in the Upper Room, and by his abiding presence with those who believe on him through their word, Christ is turning the world right side up. The results are as radical as the effect of a tornado, but the process includes the methods of living growth and of human trial and error. These methods are necessarily slow. "God is eternal and patient."

At heavy cost we are learning now that the rules of the jungle: "Charge all the traffic will bear"; "Get while the getting's good"; "Whatever we can get away with is right"; and, "The people be damned!" are rotten foundations for national and international structures of credit and confidence. We had abolished the Ten Commandments in order to win the war, then we set aside the Beatitudes in order to glut ourselves with the fruits of victory and the bounties of the new age.

Any one can see now that the collapse of prices and of trade was inevitable. Essential commodities went down with "securities" falsely so called. The bursting of the bubble was punctuated by bank failures and suicides, corporation bankruptcies and penitentiary sentences. The blame fell most heavily upon a few; the material losses, like the moral responsibility, must be distributed to all of us.

We have been looking everywhere and every day for signs of recovery. They are now manifest in exactly the right place, the Church of Christ. Typical of the return of moral and spiritual concern, Easter Sunday witnessed throughout the country the largest attendance ever recorded in Sunday Schools and churches and the deepest interest ever manifested.

People are turning to Christ and his ministers for the supreme and eternal values without which all lesser and temporary values fail or pall. As the prodigals return they find the bread of life still being dispensed in their Father's house; as the children grow up in Christian homes and Sunday Schools they enter, more nearly than ever before, "a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."—World-Call.

BE YE WITNESSES.

Before leaving for a year of rest and study in Europe, the beloved teacher, Dr. William Lyon Phelps of Yale, told the students that "the men and women who do the most for religion are not its advocates, but its witnesses, for religion is best expressed in lives." Then he added a statement which should be seriously considered by us all: "The most fatal result from any line of action is no result. That is what is wrong with the church today. It ought to cost more to get into it, more to stay in it, and there ought to be more difference between church members and others.

Every member, for example, should give more money to his church (where there are no dues) than he gives for membership in all his clubs put together."

There is a conflict going on between Christianity and nationalism, but the outcome is not in doubt, as Dr. Phelps sees it. He says: "Many enemies of Christianity have declared that the World War destroyed the Christian religion. The Christian prestige was certainly injured by it, as it ought to have been. Many lost their faith. Faith is always dimmed by anything that works against the conception of triumphant goodness. But so far from the Christian religion having been destroyed by the late war, I believe it the other way around. In the long run, it is war and not Christianity which will get the worst of it. Long after war has ceased to be, men will continue to build churches, to read the gospels, to say their prayers. The personality of Jesus will dominate mankind in the distant future more powerfully than at any period in the past."—The Southern Churchman.

THE PROGRAM AND PROCESS OF UNION.

THE SUN's editor was requested by the program committee to speak at the twenty-third annual meeting of the Conference of Congregational Churches of the Carolinas, convening jointly with the Christian Conferences of the Carolinas at Raleigh, June 8th. He delivered the following address, and a vote was passed requesting it be published in THE SUN. Yielding to that request, the address is given herewith.—J. O. A.:

From the beginning it was ordained that man should not live alone; that is, he should not be an individual separate from, and not related to, other individuals. In fact, the divinity of man is revealed in man's ability to live with, plan and provide for others. It was because of this divinity in man that it was so ordained from the beginning that he should not live unto himself, separate and apart from others. In the creation of man, there was coordination, cooperation, and union of purpose and plan. "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion." This ancient history reveals man as coming out of united counsel somewhere created by, as well as for, united effort, by as well as for united supremacy and control, and thus is his divinity, his close kinship to the divine, revealed. One may go even further and say not only is man's divinity revealed in his ability to live with others, provide for others, but the degree of his divinity, the nearness and sacredness of his approach to his Creator are marked and measured by the extent to which he develops this inherent endowment and native instinct.

Our Lord Jesus Christ prayed "that they all may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Herein was our Lord making intercession for the high achievement of man, diverse as the interests of man are, that there might be a union, a fellowship, in divine love such as obtains between father and son. To this end marriage was ordained, the home instituted, the state created. This is true: Individuality separates, institutions unite. God created institutions that through them he might reveal his nature, mutual diversity with unity, and similarity in differences. The same God that created the oceans and spread out the plains made also the mountains and piled up the hills. The same God that planted the Garden of Eden and makes the grass grow, planted also the sun and the moon and the stars to shine in the heavens above us. He is one and the same, eternal, everlasting, and yet here is diversity. Man with diverse tastes, inclinations, interests, is one in the image of his Father, one in the creative act and the process thereof, and he can only reveal his inclination to unite, his disposition to oneness, through institutions. The institution of marriage brought the home with its problems, its trials, its hardships, as well as its victories and joys. God created the home as an institution, a foundation in society in which there might be a beginning of oneness—father, mother and children. These share a common love, rejoice in a common blessing, and bear a common burden. The fundamental unifying institution on earth is the home. It is an institution revealing the divine nature of man, the ability to live in relationship to others. To this end the state was instituted. Men have in the process of development found it convenient and safe to forego certain personal conveniences that they might unitedly have advantages. Maybe the disposition to war was an immediate predecessor to the state. Whatever forces were at work in society to produce the state, this we know, that as an institution, it develops patriotism, unites citizens in a common pride and a common task.

To this end came the church, inherent in and springing out of the mind and nature, the attitude and activities of the Son of God. The church was founded as an institution to unite men and women in their efforts to make vocal the revelation of Peter, the Apostle, and to send it out through all the earth and down through all time, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." I do not find much creed attached to that. There is no ritual there. A revelation comes to the mind of this man, impetuous, reckless and riotous as he sometimes was. "Thou are the Christ, the Son of the living God. The only way to get that fact proclaimed in the world was by union of effort, concentration of power, coming together of many diverse forces, activities and personalities.

We come to share the joy and the glory of union in Christ, of oneness in the Father, only as we come to share the burdens, undertake the tasks, endure the toil, carry on the work in his name. The church as an institution, was created to direct the attention of the world to the unifying power and forces of the Cross, the crucifixion, the death, which was the central and principal event in the life of our Lord. Let it be borne in mind that our Lord Christ did not voluntarily defer his crucifixion and death, which he might have done, but made the Cross the central event of his life, and thus submitted to it without laying it aside, or deferring it. So, today, while we proclaim the lives of others by what they have wrought, we acclaim the Lord Christ by the central event of his life, which was none other than the Cross. Here then is the world's unifying power: That of bearing a common burden, enduring a common task. There can be no union where there is no burden. There can be no triumph where there has been no trial. There is no victory where there is no vanquished. There is no crown where there has been no cross. We Christians and Congregationalists will not become one—I say this by all the history and tradition of the past—until we become one in burden-bearing. We shall share each other's tasks, take upon ourselves our common burdens and efforts and endure with each other the toil and the heat of the day, and then we may rejoice in the achievements of each and all in the cool of the evening. I cannot be united with you of this Raleigh Church until I know and help share your burdens. I rejoice in our united fellowship, because it increases the opportunity for me of larger and heavier burden-bearing. Since we are united, our missionary task has not been made lighter, but heavier. The burden has not been made easier, but more binding. I never will know you and never feel at home with you, and never will be united with you, until I have known and shared your burden, your effort, your task, in the divine process and program of making this world one in Christ Jesus. The world will believe that God sent His Son our Lord into the world when Christians of every name and tongue, who confess him, shall be willing to unite in bearing the burdens that broke his heart, in sharing the Cross that crushed him, in tasting the agony that made him cry out in heart hunger for God.

I rejoice in our union, in our united fellowship, because it increases the burdens of our intellectual efforts. We haven't one college, but several colleges, to save now; not a few, but many to be educated in Christian institutions of larger fellowship and liberal thinking. I rejoice in the union of Congregationalists and Christians, because not one hundred or two hundred, but several hundred struggling churches are now asking us to share their struggles with them, help bear their burdens, pay off their indebtedness, know something of their trials. Institutions were created of Almighty God to bring together men and women, young and old, that through sharing a common task, we might reveal the one common Father of us all. Institutions unite us because they enable us to bear and to share a common and united burden. The world is not brought together, made one in heart and soul, save by and through the bearing of one another's burdens.

A DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

peal of the Eighteenth Amendment by having the party recommend and promise its strength to have the Eighteenth Amendment put to a new test? Is it not because those certain groups know that such a test cannot be had without in some way coercing by national party machinery Senators and Congressmen? However cleverly worded such platform clause might be, it could properly be incorporated only as an attempt upon the part of the party involved to pledge that party to the present program of the organized wets and against the desires and efforts of those millions of American citizens who believe in and are determined to fight for the preservation of the national prohibition law.

Any action such as the commitment of any party to a so-called resubmission of the Eighteenth Amendment, means the taking of that party as such out of the neutral class on the prohibition question and placing that party squarely back of those who are seeking to destroy that amendment.

Representative Government Involved.

Each Representative in Congress is elected by the people of his district because he is believed by his constituents to represent the attitude and sovereign will of the people of that district. The same is true of members of the United States Senate and members of State Legislatures. Therein is to be found the essence of representative popular government.

By what right or on what theory should a national political convention attempt to dictate the policy and vote of members of Congress and State Legislatures on such a question as prohibition in its present stage, when it must be recognized in advance that such a commitment would unquestionably run counter to the attitude of the people in a majority of States and in a majority of congressional and legislative districts throughout the nation? Such action by a national political party convention would tend to destroy representative government on such an issue.

In view of recent prohibition history and in the light of the significant fact that even within recent weeks a strong majority of the people's representatives in both houses of Congress representing about equally the members of both major political parties has repeatedly voted against the proposed repeal and modification resolutions, does it not inevitably follow that any repeal or resubmission plank in either major party platform would, upon its face, bear unmistakable evidence to the effect that such a plank had been inserted at the behest and dictation of some power other than the demand of the people themselves through their official representatives in Congress?

What Would be the Result?

Much of the suggestion for a referendum of some kind or for submission of a repeal amendment, is founded upon the idea that by such a procedure, the prohibition question would thus be settled and thereby eliminated from politics.

The tens of thousands of local option, county option, and statewide prohibition voting contests during the last fifty years disprove any such contention. In no such case can it be said that the issue was permanently settled.

Whatever might be the result of the submission of a repeal amendment neither the wets nor the dries would be willing to give up the fight. The issue would not be settled and the whole question would become even more involved in politics and more complicated than it is today.

How Would the Result Affect Parties?

What would be the effect on political parties and party government by the injection of the prohibition issue into national party politics?

If one of the major national parties were to make a partisan issue of the question and the other party were to leave it alone, would not the party responsible for the injection of the issue be held to account to the positive disadvantage of that party for a generation, thus involving the subject as a major partisan issue in state and national political campaigns?

Moreover, if both major parties were to inject this issue into their platforms, would not such action tend to destroy the two party system in government by reason of the fact that thereafter in a majority of congressional districts and states, candidates for the United States Senate, House of Representatives and State Legislatures representing both parties would each be placed in the position constantly of being disloyal to their party or to their constituents

Implications of Party Declarations.

The declaration by any political party for a referendum on prohibition or the submission of a repeal amendment is nothing more nor less than a declaration adopted for the specific purpose of attracting to its banners the opponents of prohibition. Such action, cleverly veiled, though it might be by any party in the hope of being able to hold its dry supporters while attempting to undermine national prohibition, in suggesting a scp for wet support, would be far more insidious and would far more greatly deceive the public than if such party were to come out squarely against the amendment and demand its repeal.

Both major political parties should regard this question as a non-partisan social problem to be determined by the processes involved in constitutional methods. Each party should declare unequivocally for the observance and enforcement of the prohibition law and each party should select its standard bearers accordingly. In determining and shaping any deliverance that they may make concerning the Eighteenth Amendment political parties cannot afford to overlook nor ignore the fact that it embodies a great moral principle and expresses the attitude of the Government on the question of dealing with a recognized evil. A political party can no more afford to take the wrong side of a moral question than can an individual and cannot any more easily or readily justify itself in taking such position. No political party can continue and hold the respect and support of a majority of the American people if it surrenders principle on a moral issue to expediency, even if surrender of principle were to appear expedient. The majority of the American electorate will not be patient with or give support to any party that has no deep and abiding conviction on moral issues or that having such conviction is willing to barter such conviction for a mess of political pottage.

Time for Action.

This is no time for the friends of prohibition to take counsel of their fears. This is no time to parley with the enemy. This is no time for a truce or an armistice. This is no time to fraternize over the trenches with the foes of that for which the moral forces of the nation have fought for long, weary years of toil and sacrifice. This is no time to give quarter to those whose cunningly devised schemes would tend to divert the attention of the people from the real issue.

This is the time for the friends of the Eighteenth Amendment throughout the nation to serve notice on every political party and every candidate for political office that those who in public life seek by any means to weaken this national law and those who by subterfuge betray the confidence which the friends of prohibition have reposed in them, may expect nothing more nor less than organized, aggressive, relentless opposition from the defenders of national prohibition. This is the time to reform and reorganize the lines of the prohibition hosts. This is the time to present a solid front of the moral forces of the nation. This is the time to fight.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

OFF TO ELON FOR SUMMER SCHOOL.

Next Monday at noon many young people and leaders of youth will gather at Elon College, N. C., to begin the Leadership Training School. Luncheon will be served at 12:30, and classes will meet for assignments, etc., during the afternoon.

More than a week ago, Misses Evelyn Edom and Mary Jane Prillaman, of Southern Pines, N. C., had enrolled. This writer happens to know that Miss Rosemond Knoeller and Miss Theresa Maul, of Waverly, Va., and Miss Irene Cotten, of Dendron, Va., expect to be there. News comes from many directions of those who are planning to be there for the opening.

It will just be fine for YOU to be there with the others who, for a week, will live at Elon and seek to find the high-road to Christian living and leadership.

We're off to Elon Monday morning!

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP IN WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

Following up the article which appeared in the first issue of THE SUN for the month of June, we wish to say quite a bit more concerning our work in Western North Carolina. And we are asking all, particularly the key-workers in the local churches of our conference, to keep in touch with us through this paper, for there is much to be said and done in the near future.

Some may think we are just "kidding" when we say we are going to do "thus and so." But to show you that we are really wide-awake and working, we are happy to say that two new key-workers have been added to the list in the past two weeks. Perhaps several more will be added presently if our pastors act in accordance with a letter which they should have received by now. The new key-workers are: Mr. A. D. Brewer, Browns' Chapel, Spies, N. C., and Miss Lois Freeman, Big Oak, Eagle Springs, N. C.

And all the key-workers of our conference recently received a copy of the Young People's Bulletin. We might spend our lives writing articles and sending you material and we would never accomplish anything for our conference, unless you use the material which we send you in your Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavors, and other Youth organizations. Let's put our conference on the map! You, as key-workers, and leaders in your churches can do much for the Master, your church, and your community if you use the topics in the Bulletin for discussion, and follow the suggestions adapting them to the needs of your group.

The Youth of Western North Carolina love their pastors dearly, and because of their love and faith in them, their desire for help and guidance they are constantly calling on their pastors for aid. They, the pastors, received a letter recently, asking those who have and those who have not selected key-workers to do so at once, and to put forth every effort to have their churches represented at the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training.

The Constitution of Youth Fellowship of the Convention states that there shall be semi-annual rallies in each conference to acquaint our key-workers with the organization—by way of a constitution for the conference which will be read and ready for adoption at the first rally to be held, the purpose, and work of this wider Fellowship. The work that a church does speaks well for its pastor. Our pastors can help us and help themselves to make their churches grow by supporting us in these rallies and other undertakings.

You young people are asking yourselves and each other what this is all about, anyway. You desire some kind of information, an explanation, along with inspiration. Your president, without the consent of the executive committee, takes this opportunity to inform you that we will have a rally August 28th, for your benefit and ours. Watch THE SUN for further plans, program, and other details relative to this meeting. Make your plans now to be there. You will have a good time while you receive necessary information, inspiration, etc.

CARL R. KEY, Pres.

THEY ARE ENLISTING.

Some time ago I offered to aid in finding tasks for those who wanted to work during the summer—not to find salaried positions, but to find Christian service that is rich in the rewards of the heart. Since then Rev. Carl Key, who will be a senior at Elon College next year, has come to Virginia for the summer. Miss Virginia Dare Black is teaching in a Daily Vacation Bible School, and Miss Evelyn Richardson is planning to teach in such a school.

The offer still stands. I can't imagine a fine Christian young person being willing to loaf three months of life in these great days of human need. It seems to me that the urge in the heart would push everyone out to serve regardless of pay. And many of our best young people are offering themselves to their own churches, Sunday Schools, C. E. Societies, Community Leagues, and other organizations for service. Why not get busy and do some of the dozens of things that need to be done? You will like it, and it may be that in after years some will come to thank you for making them better boys and girls.

WHY THIS?

Last Sunday the undertaker in our town buried a nineteen-year-old girl. The Sunday before he buried a twenty-four-year-old man. Some twenty miles away another young woman killed herself during the same week.

Will some of you young people tell me why this sort of thing happens? What is wrong with a community in which young people despair of life? Do you think the church, including the young people, has failed to bring a Christian message? Is it possible for the church to build up such a fellowship that no one will despair of living? Write me your opinion.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

"How Honest Are We as Individuals and as Groups?"

Each Christian Endeavor leader may select songs from their church hymnal which will fit in with the topic for discussion.

Everyone has formed in his or her mind some idea of what honesty really is. To get at the heart of the thing, let us use Webster's definition of honesty, as follows: "The quality or state of being honest; probity; fairness and straightforwardness of conduct, speech; integrity, sincerity; truthfulness; freedom from fraud or guile." For some this definition may be too binding, but for the Christian boy or girl who is "after God's own heart," it will be an excellent one. And it will help us to live according to I. Timothy 2:2: "That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all goodness and honesty." Also, it would help us to strive to be as the following from a poem: "Be what you are."

From the definition of honesty and the entire paragraph above, several topics and ideas may be selected for discussion by the leader.

Are we honest with ourselves? We must safeguard our health, form habits, purposes, attitudes, and ideals that give us a commendable character and a charming personality, all of which will lead others to Christ. This may be done by the right kind of recreation, selecting our associates, and keeping abreast the times by reading Christian and other good literature.

Are we honest with our fellowmen? Do we, as true Christian Endeavorers, treat our neighbors as we would like to be treated? "Do unto others as you would wish to be done by."

Group honesty. Here the figure changes somewhat. We might ask ourselves if we like for anyone to say to his or her companions false things about us. Does "slang" sound good in company or elsewhere? Are we fair and straightforward on the athletic field, in the church, and in the community? Are we sincere and truthful? These are questions from which a great deal may be derived in any discussion group, and they are things which face every man and woman today.

CARL R. KEY.

Sunday School Lesson

WHAT WE HAVE LEARNED FROM GENESIS.

LESSON XIII—JUNE 26, 1932.

(Review.)

GOLDEN TEXT: "We know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose."
—Romans 8:28.

LESSON TEXT: The entire Book of Genesis.

TIME: From "the beginning" to a period approximately sixteen centuries before Christ.

The name, "Genesis," means in the original, the "birth" or "beginning." The book that we have just been studying, though much shorter than the average novel of today, covers in that small space a vastly greater period of time than has elapsed since it was written. Within these few pages we find condensed the history of the beginning of life itself.

1. The Beginning.—In that beginning, man knows not how long ago, God created the heavens and the earth, and all things that they contain. Above all of these, he placed man himself, that he might rule, a creature little lower than the angels. Time has not evolved a more dramatic story than this one of Genesis, and science has at last come to accept it as its own.

2. Sin Enters In too soon to mar the peace and harmony that then existed. It is another "beginning," the beginning of the conflict between life and death.

3. The third, or racial beginning, starts with "The Call of Abraham." The story begins here to narrow itself down. From mankind it turns to one man and his family. We find God calling him out from his people, that he may save the world through his seed.

4. With Abraham, there goes his nephew, Lott. Even Abraham must have his trouble-maker with him, and Lott proves a source of worry for his over-indulgent uncle.

5. Following in the footsteps of his father, Abraham, we find the gentle Isaac. Many are the virtues which he possessed that this trouble-torn world might well emulate. If we learned nothing else from him but to love the peace of God above principle, our time would be well spent. "It's the principle of the thing," has led to many a strife, when really there was no real principle involved. The man who is right seldom needs to "Fight for his rights."

6. Esau Sells His Birthright, and in so doing gives us a valuable lesson. Many are the times we are tempted to sacrifice our other life for the material. Esau gives us a warning we should heed.

7. Jacob at Bethel. Jacob pays at Bethel. All of us who wander from the paths that God lays out for us must pay. Yet, if we will pay in God's way, he will receive and bless us as he did Jacob.

8. Jacob and Esau Reconciled. One of the first fruits of forgiveness is reconciliation. This is true between man and God as well as between man and man. When Jacob made up his mind to recompense his brother the wrong he had done him, the reconciliation was already begun.

9. Joseph the Dreamer. The visionary nearly always pays the price of his visions. The dreamer has always been in the vanguard of the civilization of the world, but he has had to pay the price.

10. Joseph the Worker, paid a double price for his dreaming—first that of suffering, and later

NEW LIFE THROUGH GOD, by Toyohiko Kagawa. Revell. 210 pp. $1.50.

Kagawa's life philosophy—"Love, the Law of Life"—is again expounded in this book. The volume exhibits all the charm of the author's terse, epigrammatic style, and its disconnectedness. Yet the atmosphere of the book grips and the soul is refreshed that reads.

AIDS TO CHRISTIAN BELIEF, by Bishop F. J. McConnell. Abingdon. 178 pp. $1.00.

This book will inspire many a hesitant follower of Jesus to feel more assured of his faith and to become more resolute in his programs of living. Every Christian may become a religious expert and help clarify the faith of others, Bishop McConnell insists. It will not require more than two hours to read this sane volume, but life will never be the same after its reading.

IS GOD A PERSON, by E. S. Brightman. Association Press. 87 pp. $1.00.

Dr Brightman conceives of God as a limited divine person, progressing with his universe. To him the greatest, the essential part of existence or being is person. The ultimate, the supreme in personality is God, and Jesus is the best revelation of that person we have. So Jesus is the world's finest hope of salvation. The lectures, three in number, were given at the Y. M. C. A. Graduate School, Nashville, Tenn., before the faculties and students of that institution. Scarritt College, and the Vanderbilt School of Religion.

that of work. The dreamer who does not back up his dreams with his labor soon passes from the picture of life. The dreamer who works receives his reward.

11. Judah, the True Brother, offers a wonderful contrast to the Judah who betrayed his brother, Joseph, in the years gone by. Where he had sold Joseph into bondage then, now he offers himself instead of his brother, Benjamin. Judah the arrogant becomes Judah the self-sacrificing.

12. Jacob, the Aged Father. Judah's sacrifice was not in vain. He sees his father and the beloved Joseph reunited, and himself receives the reward of forgiveness. If we seek first the Kingdom of Heaven, we find all other things added unto us.

Genesis is indeed the Book of "Beginnings"—the beginning of life, of death, of sin and of redemption.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

SPLITTING THE ROCKS.

"Take heed that ye do not your alms before men to be seen of them."—Matt. 6:1.

Once upon a time an insignificant acorn dropped into a crevice of a rock. Dust, decaying leaves and twigs were blown into that crevice until the acorn was covered. Through the act of sunshine and moisture the acorn germinated, little rootlets started and then the sprout and an oak tree was on its way to a career. Every year wind and rain brought in fresh supplies of material. The size of the tree increased until it filled the cavity completely. The new cells in the young tree continued to double, and in time the force of nature cracked the great rock.

This is like achieving greatness or accomplishing something impossible. From infancy to manhood one may keep a certain achievement before him ever seeking accomplishment with increasing effort until the goal is reached. All of this may be done without braggadocio. Nature does its work in the rock without boasting of it. In fact, no one is aware of what is going on within that rock. But the work goes on quickly but surely to certain destiny.

Achieving the great things of life is not unlike this. A life—a destiny—living to that end—accomplishment must come.

Prayer—Dear Father, we are reminded that Paul said, "Whether all live, we live unto the Lord; or whether we die, we die unto the Lord," and that we must "Press on unto the mark of the high calling." God help us to make the most of life for thee. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CAN A RICH MAN BE SAVED?

"How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the Kingdom of God."—Luke 18:24.

Ever since Christ uttered these words there has been a question: "Can a rich man be saved?" But few ever doubt that a rich man can be saved, but our Saviour's statement is so positive the question continues to present itself for answer.

It is abundantly clear that it is not the possession of wealth that is bad, but the wrong estimate and use of it. We do not understand that Jesus wanted the rich man to get rid of his wealth but he wanted him to change his attitude toward it. Many purely Christian acts can be done only through sharing our possessions with those who need.

In addition to this, Christ taught that a Christian mind is a mind committed to Christianity without reservation. No doubt he wanted the rich man to be able to say, "Not my will but thine be done." Humanity prays, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," but it is a long way from meaning it without reservation.

Our possessions, our desires for things delightful are not harmful, and salvation does not depend upon the want of them. A rich man may be good and a poor man may be bad. Goodness lies in our attitude. As Dr. McGiffert says, "Freedom from desire for things, not the things themselves."

Our Christian state lies in our possession and not in goods. The rich and the poor alike are saved by the love, the grace and the power of God in the soul.

Prayer—O Lord, our Maker and our Redeemer, come into our hearts not only today, but each day of our lives and make us thine own through and through. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

MY CHURCH.

"Being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the chief cornerstone; in whom each several building, fitly framed together for a habitation of God in the Spirit."—Eph. 2:20-22.

It is probable that every person who reads this is a member of a church. That church may be in the wildwood, or in a village, or it may be a temple in the heart of the city. Whatever or wherever it may be, each one can say, "That is my church."

Well, what does your church mean to you? The reply among so many readers would make an interesting testimony for Jesus and his kingdom. Pause and repeat to yourself just the outstanding meanings your church has for you.

Then, let us add our testimony: My church is a divine institution, originating from God above, and its aim is quadruple: first, to furnish a place of worship of God with all the saints who go there; second, it is an institution through which God is revealed to the people; third, its aim is to serve the world and share its life; and fourth, it aims to train his children for that service and the world to come.

Let us cast in our lot to help it fulfill its mission.

Prayer—Our Father, increase thy church in my heart and in the hearts of thy people. May none fall short of doing his best for the glory of thyself in thy church. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A BEAUTIFUL MAN.

"Ye also are become dead to the law of Christ."—Rom. 5:4.

"Christ is the end of the law for righteousness."—Rom. 10:4.

"He that loveth another fulfilleth the law."—Romans 13:8.

"The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law."—Gal. 5:22, 23.

We are not attracted to the sentiment that a man is beautiful. It hardly seems correct to express it that way. But there is a way to express a man's character so that the word "beautiful" is acceptable.

We are told that the historic Clement, of Alexandria, in the second century, wrote, "Love is a beauty of man." In this he is interpreted to mean that man is in the likeness of God; a true Christian is a lover of God, and such an one expresses that love in honoring him, in obedience to his law, in prayer or communion with him, and in a constant effort to grow more like him every day.

Thus, he who loves his neighbor as himself, who manifests that love in his attitude and helpfulness toward his neighbor, he who goes about doing good, or tries to do good as his Master did good while on earth, he is a beautiful man—at least such a life is beautiful.

Such a life is not motivated by the fear of punishment or the hope of reward; his love goes beyond the righteousness of the law, the law does not apply to him; the law of love applies, and that is superior. This law so motivates him that he not only is a law-abiding citizen naturally but he goes the second mile and does more than the law requires, that he may do good.

Godness is not legal goodness; it is a spontaneous expression of the soul. A Christian so desires and so strives for righteousness that he does not need the restraint of law. The result is, fruit in Godlike living.

Prayer—Our Father, we believe that we all are creatures of thy love. Help us to be true children expressing that love in friendship, hospitality, aid to the poor and suffering, and helpfulness to all with whom we come in contact. Amen.

FRIDAY.

LIFE'S FESTIVAL.

"Rejoice evermore."—I. Thess. 5:16.

"Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say unto you rejoice."—Phil. 4:4.

There is much in the books of Thessalonians and Phillipians enjoining happiness. These books give reasons whereby a child of God may find happiness notwithstanding reverse conditions.

Happiness in the Lord is not confined to set times, places and conditions, but it is dependent upon one's close relation to and understanding of God.

To be persuaded that God is everywhere present induces a festal spirit. To walk in that consciousness while we farm; to hymn while we sail; to conduct ourselves with a clear conscience without blame; to know that God doeth all things well to them that love him; means to be grave, of course, because the mind is set on the divine, but at the same time cheerful in all things because it reflects upon the human benefits which God bestows upon us. The Christian lives this way his whole life long, ready rather to strive thus and fail, than to succeed without God.

Man was created that he might attain this end, and to choose to live unto this end means to choose to thus know God rather than to save himself.

Prayer—Our Father, who art our all in all, baptize our lives in thee that we may have the consciousness of thy satisfying goodness in spite of all that depresses us. We commit ourselves to thee. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE TRULY PIOUS.

"Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am.

"If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet."

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."—John 13:13, 14, 17.

Again referring to Clement, he says: "Only that one is really pious and devout who is genuinely in accord with the rule of the church." One might demur to this, for it might be understood that "the church" refers to the visible militant organization. Being a human organization circumscribed by human limitations, the rule of that organization might not be in accord with the law of God.

But Clement's statement is defended further by the explanation that he is talking about that Christian whose love of and accord with God extends from his Christian heart-life to the church. Not only in his individual life, but also in his work for the promulgation of the Kingdom

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

PREPARING TO GIVE AN ACCOUNT OF OUR POSSESSIONS.

(Delivered before the Ohio State Convention.)

"Give an account of thy stewardship.—

Luke 16:2.

How shall we give account of our possessions? Or perhaps we have listened to the song of the hour until we have decided that we have no possessions. We have come up together to a holy place, and here we feel strong in the strength of the sanctuary, and the combined fellowship of our brethren; but perhaps we are sort of sure that ere long we shall go down, and back to our parishes and our people and fear that we shall be possessionless. We may feel that here it is easy to talk about giving account of our possessions, but out there the search is for the possessions.

I. We do have possessions. In the outset then, we shall see from this vantage point that we do have possessions. A few days ago I heard ex-governor J. M. Cox say in an address to fellow Daytonians that there were in that small city frozen assets amounting to the astounding figures of $180,000,000.00, or nearly a thousand dollars for every man, woman and child within the corporation limits! But I wish that we, from this vantage point, might observe that the frozen human asset are far more than the frozen material assets. Real friendship is still at par. Friendship that offers bread and faith, butter and courage, milk and a devoted and undaunted manhood made in the image of God. Wherever you have had the privilege of offering that sort of friendship you have found it received at enhanced values. It is running liquid and lively at that!

Standing one day in the harbor at Norfolk, Va., I saw many ships with flags hanging drab, and damp upon their staves—no one could tell by the flags from what countries they came. But suddenly a storm swept out of the northeast, and it snatched the mast poles of those ships to attention, and every flag floated bravely and vigorously the colors of their countries. Italy, France, England and the U. S. A. could be easily seen through the stress and strain of that mighty gale. You could tell by the colors for what country the flag floated, and whose cargoes they bore. Faith and friendship; family and home; honor and virtue; courage and conviction are possessions just as precious today as in any day; they are possessions stored either actively or inactive in the holds of our ship, and every Christian wants to learn to endure hardness as a good soldier, and say for a time like this "they shall not pass away."

We cannot gainsay the fact that there is as much wealth today in America as ever, nor can be so blind as not to recognize that a large portion of it lies in the power of the members of the church. Besides wealth, we find ourselves possessed of childhood and youth—across our land millions of children and millions of young men and women of high school and college age. Through what have they come thus far? Why, through the post-war period of loose talk, and high and fast living of their elders, and now by the depressed and defeatist talk of their fathers and mothers. Under such circumstances how shall we hand them on to their lives, and their day? Shall they find the faith of their young fathers and mothers once considered so strong now but a rope of sand? Shall they find the church failing and falling back—being the first to be forgotten, and the first to be cut in a crisis? We are possessed of wealth and of youth—what shall we do with it? Shall we stake the standard of God upon it, and say to the enemies thereof: "They shall not pass?"

The church is the promoter of faith. From the day Jesus looked on eleven and commissioned them to canvass land and sea for the souls of men, and the sake of humanity, it has had to have faith. It has had faith. Faith has been its first and foremost possession. What shall it do with it? Shall the very leaders thereof themselves lose their faith, and lower their standards; shall we quit our posts, or shall we rather "quit ourselves like men?" The tenets of that faith we still have, even burnished and brighter for the day than ever before. We are possessed of it, shall we not possess it, and count it a high privilege in a hazardous period to faithfully present it? We may have to go back to our closets, and to our Upper Room councils to find our courage, and to fix our faith but let us be sure that heaven is aware of the fact that we have possessions. Possessions of wealth, childhood and youth, and a needy and up, and out, coming age and day. The birth pangs of a new day are felt across the continents of the earth, and they will not be opiated with anything less than the real sufferings of a positive and daring leadership.

II. Accounting is imperative. I have tried to say that we have possessions, now let me say that accounting is imperative. Napoleon, standing under the pyramids of Egypt, said to the Frenchmen that followed him there: "Gentlemen, forty centuries are looking down upon you." Fully as many as that are looking down upon us today! And they are demanding of, and will demand of us, "Give an account of your stewardship." The day once was when the church held more arbitrarily the whole field, and by either the cross or the cannon, and all too often both, it rendered an account of its stewardship. The needs are greater than ever today, and yet the church does not hold the same fullness of the field as formerly. Science, and State; the dollar, and the doctrinaire have demanded quarter; but the church still holds enough of the eternal verities of life to enlist each of these as allies instead of enemies, if it but brings itself to be willing to pay the price of really accounting for its possessions. And let us be sure that God is going to bring us to account.

Yes, we are called upon to give account. The unemployed millions across beautiful America, and the unfed millions across the continents, are asking us to give account. The founders of this country prayed for peace and prosperity; for the waving fields, and humming cities; for schools and churches, and wisdom to found a great Republic, and to provide the necessities of life. Beyond all dreams their prayers have been answered. God has given a double portion. As we look at the breadlines in every profession, and in every city, Malachi's ringing question should begin to reach our ears: "Will a man rob God?" While America, in the last 30 years has lavished her wealth selfishly on her own desires, and great unreached quarters of every section of the earth, and every sector of life, has still eked out its tragically shorn and shortened existence, we can but recall the prayers and promises of other days. Still unsolved are the economic problems of society, still unsolved are the problems of war, still unsolved are the problems of race hatred, still unsolved are the problems of class prejudice; and the world trembles in the presence of communism, and a disarmament conference is forced to its knees in the presence of probable clash of arms, and the rise of color still disturbs the vanity of the Caucasian.

We honor the conscientious objector to the tithe, who, through a long and fine fellowship with Jesus Christ, has learned to give far more than the tithe; but the tithe is a very fine starting

Dear Friends:

We have had extremely dry weather all through the month of May. We had the finest prospects for an abundant Irish potato crop we have ever had and the largest crop planted; but the extreme dry weather turned the vines yellow and many of them fell over. Our garden vegetables had suffered very much too. Our snap beans were just coming in and needed rain very badly. The weather kept cool and clear, except for a few real hot days.

But on Saturday morning, June 11th, the clouds began to thicken in the early morning, and before noon the rain began to fall and for the rest of the day it fell thick and fast, and the thirsty ground had a refreshing season. The vegetables took on new life; our potatoes even look better. Our hearts are happy because vegetables of all kinds and potatoes cut down our expenses and saves our little bank account.

We do our best to produce all we can on our farm to help support our large family of more than one hundred children. Our dairy furnishes us with milk and butter and every child can have his required quart of milk each day if he wants it. We are very proud of our nice herd of cows that give us such nice milk.

We have reached 53,000 soap wrappers and want to get up to 75,000 by July 1st. Will you help us? Buy a cake of Octagon Soap and mail the coupons to the Christian Orphanage. You will help the little children there.

place. The Old Testament laws were never given to be kept without the spirit. Their spirit was from the beginning far greater than their letter. And the New Testament is not the first to announce the keeping of the spirit of the law. In Deuteronomy is a law impossible to be kept without the spirit: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." That is an Old Testament law. Wherein in the New Testament is it abrogated? Here is another law in the Old Testament that reaches far above the letter, and requires the spirit, found in Leviticus 18:18: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." It is impossible to many folks to convince the world that they do either of these without giving some definite, separated portion to the church of Jesus Christ, if they are members thereof, and have therefore taken its obligations upon themselves. "Offerings" is one of the greatest words of the Old Testament. It is the very glory of the New Testament. We can never be the same after really looking at that marvelous, lone Leader of His age, and every age, in that Upper Room, girded with a linen towel demonstrating this fact that he came not to be served, but to serve, and to offer himself a ransom for many. We can never be the same, if in love, awe, and adoration we look at Him hanging on the Cross of Calvary offering himself for the sins of the world. Interpret that as you may. It challenges the true Christian so greatly that the tithe becomes only a stepping stone to giving such as will honor Him, and really help redeem our world! In the light of that offering close followers of Him sensed the fact that being a true follower of Jesus Christ meant giving all, and consequently they formed a fellowship which pooled all they possessed. That experiment did not live across the ages, but the giving of a definite portion, growing ever larger, according as the Lord has prospered, has met with approval in every age from the days before Abraham until the present.

There is one definite experience in the life of Christ connected with the church and its money gathering that has been recorded. Jesus had been busy teaching in the Temple all day. Ere long He would be called upon to pay the supreme sacrifice. What meaning, what passion, He must have put in His messages. Something in His thinking, and something in His teaching must have given Him an interest in the treasury of that Temple just at that time. He had had much to discourage Him. Now in the last hours of that day He slips into the treasury room, and takes a seat to await the putting into the treasury as the people went away for the day. What would they do? Those who throughout that day had come under His pleas, His preaching, and His rebukes? I see Him now as He rested there.

Holman Jewel Testament
INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x½ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

POCKET SIZE
3¾x4½ inches

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3¾x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer binders.

What millions the world would spend on itself after that day! What messages would never be delivered for Him because of shortage of funds; what acts of mercy and sustenance and healing would never be done because of entrenched selfishness. Ere long the little band would begin its trek across the ages. How are people going to give as Jesus sits there overlooking the treasury! Mark, writing the Servant Story of the Saviour of Men, says: "And he sat down over against the treasury; and many that were rich cast in much. And there came a poor widow, and she cast in two mites, which make a farthing. And He called unto His disciples, and said unto them, Verily, I say unto you, This poor widow cast in more than all they which are casting into the treasury; for they did cast in of their superfluity; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living."

FAMILY ALTAR.

through this God-given organization, does the Christian merit the confidence and esteem of all Christians; for by such active Christianity is the highest ideal realized. He who undertakes Christian living and yet breaks his covenant of service for the Kingdom abandons what is true in the way of God for the salvation of the world. The good person must not fail to keep faith, must not fail in anything to do his best to aid others in soul health. The church stands preeminently as God's strong arm for the salvation of the world.

Prayer—Our Father, in the name of thy Son we turn to thee with our shortcomings. We have been very useless for thy Kingdom in this world. O make us not only thy children in our own redeemed life, but in doing something for thy family on this earth. Make us willing, we pray thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

SALVATION BY FAITH.

"By grace ye are saved through faith."—Eph. 2:8.

"Faith without works is dead."—Jas. 2:17.

Some people are not able to put together these two scriptures and understand them as being both essential to salvation. Let us reason together for our mutual understanding of God.

God's greatest work is to save men. Notwithstanding God's power to save, no man can be saved without doing his part. The first part man has to do is believe, for as he believes or disbelieves he will act, and as he believes that belief becomes a motive for righteous living.

God's first demand upon us is "Repent." This demand prefaced every message of our Lord. But if a person does not believe that that to which he is addicted is sin he will not repent, and if he does not believe that punishment comes to the transgressor, and that salvation is for one who lives in accordance to God's law, he will not reform.

Therefore, one must believe God, and when so believing, repentance will follow, and conduct of living befitting a disciple of Christ ensues. Christian piety has been summed up by the apostolic fathers as "conduct in agreement and in conformity with God."

It is not hard, therefore, to see that we are saved by faith, and that if we stop at mere conviction, nothing comes of it. Both Paul and James are right. They are expressing the steps one naturally takes in his salvation. And the "thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Prayer—Our Father, we thank thee for thy saving grace through our faith. Help our unbelief. We thank thee for thy forgiveness to all who come to thee in faith. In our weakness, help us and forgive us. Endow us with thy divine nature, and sustain us by thy spirit. May our every choice be right and in accord with thy will. Amen.

I suppose that if all the time I have prayed for faith were put together, it would amount to months. I used to say, "What we want is faith; if we only have faith we can turn Chicago upside down," or rather right side up. I thought that some day faith would come down and strike me like lightning. But faith did not seem to come. One day I read in the tenth chapter of Romans, "Now, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." I had closed my Bible and prayed for faith. I now opened my Bible, and began to study, and faith has been growing ever since.—D. L. Moody.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

OBITUARIES.

SUTTON.

Mrs. Margaret Bennett Sutton, wife of Mr. G. T. Sutton, departed this life May 14, 1932, being 58 years, 3 months and 14 days of age. She was busy at work when taken ill, and lived about thirty minutes.

She was a member of Bethlehem Christian Church, near Elon College, N. C. She was a devout Christian, a devoted wife and a loving mother.

There were two daughters and five sons: Mrs. C. L. Simpson and Mrs. Joe Ross. The sons are, Messrs. T. E., J. H., W. C., Paul and Edgar Sutton. Also she leaves one sister, Mrs. Jas. Bateman, and three brothers, G. R., B. M., and Charles Bennett.

This quiet, unassuming and exemplary Christian wife and mother left an influence in her home, community and church that means much for the glory of God, attested by the immense audience attending her burial, and the flowers placed upon her grave. Thank God for her life and influence.

Services were conducted by her pastor, the writer, assisted by Mrs. Gertie Cheek.
J. W. PATTON.

WOOTEN.

This entire community was saddened on April 6, 1932, by the death of Mrs.

Droxie Lucinda Wooten. Her death occurred in Hoke County, N. C., her age being 41 years, 8 months and 24 days. She was a beloved mother and wife.

Before her marriage she was Droxie Lucinda Smitherman, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Smitherman, of Yadin County. Her mother and four brothers survive her.

She was married to Mr. H. O. Wooten, November 12, 1911. To this union were born eight children, seven boys and one girl. In 1918 they moved to Hoke Co., where they have made their home for the past 13 years.

Mrs. Wooten was a member of New Home Holiness Church, where she was a loyal and faithful member. Before coming to this county, Mrs. Wooten was a member of Baltimore Methodist Church.

The funeral service was held in Mt. Pleasant Christian Church, by Rev. John Sawyer and wife. The remains were laid to rest in Mt. Pleasant Cemetery.

May God's richest blessings rest upon the bereaved.

"What Is Wrong?"—

While guns roared death in Shanghai, Japanese Christian women gathered in Tokyo, Japan, for their Day of Prayer. With deep emotion they faced the problem. How had such things come to pass? Wherein had they been lacking? One woman poured out her heart to Mrs. Darley Downs. "I can't sleep at night thinking of the whole thing and wondering what is wrong when so many of us have prayed so long that peace should come to the world and that Japan be one of the nations to help establish peace," she cried. "And then I think God is still in his heaven and we must just continue working and believing that somehow things are going to work themselves out," was the pathetic conclusion. To Christian watchmen at the crossroads of the world today, "eternal vigilance is the price of—PEACE!"

Helping the Other Fellow Find Work.—

Roger Babson says that "business and individuals are rapidly balancing their budgets; they must also intelligently budget the balance!" We take it that he means to say that one must have means of subsistence, or at least try to do so, and then live within the amount of his earnings. On the other hand, we must spend as much as we can spend wisely, that the other fellow may have of what was ours and in turn do his bit toward the pushing forward of the wheels of industry. The city of Richmond, Va., has, during the past ten days, had on a campaign to get home owners and others to do at least $1,000,000 worth of repairing, painting, etc., before October 1st. So successful was the drive that the goal was advanced to $2,500,000, and latest reports say that this amount has been exceeded. If other cities will follow such a plan it will do a great deal to help the unemployment situation, and we doubt not, will be well worth while to those doing the spending.

"Death and Taxes."—

He who escapes the one must pay the other. Indeed, those who survived until Tuesday of this week found themselves facing the new Federal levy which is being placed on many varieties of commodities, varying from matches to automobiles. All of the revenue raising taxes recently passed, went into effect on the 21st inst., with the exception of the postage increases, which take effect the first week in July. Theatre tickets costing more than 40 cents are taxed, and cosmetics of all kinds bear their part. Other items that are taxable include candy, lubricating oil, malt syrup, wort, tires and inner tubes, furs, jewelry, automobiles, automobile accessories, mechanical refrigerators, radios, firearms, sporting goods, shells, cartridges, cameras, chewing gum, soft drinks, mineral water, and gasoline. Long distance telephone calls and telegrams cost more, so one will be unable to evade the new taxes by following the advice, "don't write, wire." Electric power rates are boosted 3 per cent, and he who "pays by check," finds that they cost him a penalty of two cents each. We have heard nothing of a tax on coffins, but we are frankly of the opinion there should have been. We need encouragement to keep living.

Gray Ranks in Confederate Capital.—

The now thinning ranks of the Confederate forces are in attendance at their annual reunion in Richmond this week. This is the tenth time since the reunions were started that this city has been so honored. The events opened on Monday with the arrival of Commander-in-Chief, General Alfred DeSaussure, who was welcomed with a salute of seventeen guns as befitted his rank, a company of infantry and a military band. The veterans have been met at the trains and escorted to the four camps in the western part of the city, consisting of the Soldiers' Home, Benedictine College, the Richmond Normal School and R. E. Lee School. The first major event of the occasion was the dedication of the battlefield parks near Glendale, on the site of the battle of Frayser's Farm, which took place Wednesday afternoon. The grand parade is to be Friday afternoon. Many bands from different cities have been present and made contributions to the good times with their music. We know of only one orchestra which has participated: The First Christian Church orchestra gave a concert on Wednesday evening at the Soldiers' Home. Not but a few more years can these veterans of "The Lost Cause" assemble in their reunions. Even now, time has spread his mantle upon their aged shoulders. May the God of war and of peace bless them as they pass in review from this earthly home on toward the great beyond.

A Unique Service.—

Sunday, June 19th, at 11:00 A. M., the service in the Elon Church was very unique and exceedingly interesting. Father's Day was celebrated literally. The pastor of the church, Rev. A. W. Hurst, after calling attention to the character of the day, requested all to join him in observing Father's Day," and then introduced his own father, Rev. A. P. Hurst, who was on that very day celebrating his 80th anniversary, and who preached a most wholesome, appropriate and helpful sermon from John 3:16. The sermon fitted well the occasion, and it was good, indeed, to be in this extraordinary service. "Father Hurst" is still in the vigor and strength of an active life and ministry, and no one would judge him by appearances to be four-score years of age. Then at 4:30 P. M., almost the whole town called at the Hurst home to pay a tribute of love and esteem to "Father Hurst" and his good wife, and incidentally, also the pastor and his good wife, all four of whom occupy the parsonage as one family. Dr. J. U. Newman was in charge and stated the object of the gathering. Dr. W. C. Wicker extended felicitations of the community with very appropriate selections from poetry and well-timed sentiments of his own. This was followed by a prayer, and Mrs. J. L. Foster led the company in several appropriate songs. The Hursts responded in appropriate and appreciative remarks while two automobiles freighted with good things for the parsonage were being unloaded. It was, indeed, a very happy occasion. The Hursts are beloved at Elon College, for the manner of their life with us has been that of those who lead others in the way of righteousness.

The Republicans and Repeal.—

The repealists were well represented at the Republican Convention in Chicago last week. Led by Senator Bingham, of Connecticut, they fought for a straight submission plank in the party platform, and they were at least frank enough to say that they were for repeal by any means that it might be done. They desired a straight referendum for or against the retention of the Eighteenth Amendment. The platform plank which was adopted rather straddled the issue, but it has several safeguards thrown around the question, which would protect those States having their own dry laws, in event the wets should carry such a referendum. On the other hand, the dries have some reason to be dissatisfied for while there would have been very slight probability of carrying the country wet on the platform the wets offered, there is quite a possibility that the middle-of-the-road people, who are not wet nor dry, will support an amendment which limits the Eighteenth Amendment, or rather so extends it that Congress may enforce it in conjunction with the various States only if, as, and when the State so desires. Mr. Rockefeller, in his recent renunciation of the Eighteenth Amendment, went so far as to say: "In my judgment it would be so difficult for our people as a whole to agree in advance on what the substitute should be, and so unlikely that any one method will fit the entire nation, that repeal will be far less possible if coupled with an alternate measure." This seems to have been the attitude taken by the ultra wets, with whom he evidently has joined forces. Of course, we cannot agree. Speaking of Mr. Rockefeller, we are sorry he has been lost from the ranks of the dries. Much of the good done by himself and his father will possibly be nullified by his change in attitude, yet, to quote a contemporary, "History has many cases of apostasy and the adding of another will not break the march of progress. There is something almost touching in his letter declaring his desertion of the dries, and well may Mr. Rockefeller feel a touch of wisfulness when he looks back . . . and realizes the fact he has turned his back on the things for which his mother fought and suffered."

NOTES-PERSONALS

We reprint in this issue a letter from Rev. O. D. Poythress to his charge in Norfolk. We would suggest that other churches read it and ponder well what he says. It is possibly quite as appropriate coming from your pastor to you.

The Summer School of Leadership Training opened at Elon College June 20th, with a large group of young people, teachers, lecturers and officials coming in from the various schools and churches. The prospect is for a very large attendance. The program is inviting.

One of our busiest and happiest pastors is Rev. B. J. Earp, Harrisonburg, Va. He is making a great effort, through self-denial and call of duty, to build up several weak churches of the Conference. We have few men, indeed, amongst us who are laboring with such zeal and consecration, under a sense of obligation and devotion to the church and to duty, as is Bro. Earp.

It is with deep regret that the people of the Elon Church and community have received the resignation of Rev. A. W. Hurst, the beloved pastor of the local church. Bro. Hurst has won the esteem and the devotion of the church and community, and the hundreds of students who have sat under his teaching and ministry will join in the regret that he has resigned as college pastor.

Rev. D. M. Spence, former pastor at Henderson, N. C., and Ocean View, Va., has now completed his work at Vanderbilt University and received the B. D. degree June 8th. "I am now open to consider any pastorate where my services may be desired." Bro. Spence is a consecrated man, a good preacher and a well-trained worker. Any church desiring correspondence may address him at Lillington, N. C.

Dr. A. D. Woodworth, one of our veteran missionaries in Japan, sends us a cut of the Azabu Middle School Building. This building, judging from the picture, compares favorably with any of our high school buildings. Dr. Woodworth states there are twelve hundred boys in the school, of whom he teaches five hundred and fifty each week. The voluntary attendance in his Bible class three times a week is about twenty-five.

We are presenting elsewhere the program of the Western North Carolina Sunday School Convention to be held at Biscoe Church, July 5th. Bro. Gunter, the president, is anxious that all schools and Endeavor Societies of the Conference have delegates at the Convention. This is the one Convention that holds its session in one day only, but tries to crowd that day with important questions and helps for the Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies.

It was the privilege of THE SUN's editor to be in the home of Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Andes and family, Harrisonburg, Va., several evenings and nights last week. Bro. Andes is ably assisted in his great work by his capable and competent wife, who is as interested as he in the good work of the church. Bro. Andes is certainly a faithful, true and tried preacher and pastor, and there is no wonder that his people are devoted to him. He carries the burden of their welfare upon his heart and is a very busy man.

Prof. A. R. Flowers has been working among the young people of the Baptist and Methodist Churches for the last six weeks, and, according to reports, has met with remarkable success in and about old Wendell High School, where he taught many of the parents of the young twenty-five years ago. Bro. Flowers' deep desire and constant effort is that many of these young men and women may find their way into some Christian college where they can prepare themselves for service and usefulness in church and state.

One of the joys of Rev. R. L. Williamson, our good pastor at Winchester, Va., is that he has in his church a very active Christian Endeavor Society and Sunday School, in which are enlisted some of the finest and most active leaders among the young people of his city. Some one in Winchester told us that his church had the best and most wide-awake and progressive leadership of any church in the city, and we are prepared to believe it. Among the number of young people in his church and Endeavor Society is the president of the State Christian Endeavor of Virginia, also another who is president of the District Endeavor Union, and still another who is president of the City and County Endeavor Union. Any pastor may well rejoice in the activities of such a group of young people.

It could be hoped that all the Sunday Schools and churches using the coin card would follow the service of dedication prepared by the Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and furnished the churches and Sunday Schools desiring them. The Elon College Church used the ceremony and gathered in the cards last Sunday, the names of the classes and others who had cards being called, and after the service of responsive reading there was a brief dedication service, all of which was very suggestive and appropriate, since it is through self-denial that the coin cards are filled with dimes for ten weeks until in each card there is a dollar. Some individuals had filled cards, and there were thirteen or more of the classes in the school that had filled them. The coin card can be used to advantage in all the schools and churches to help Missions and the Kingdom.

Many CHRISTIAN SUN readers know and esteem the person named in the following, he having been for years active as a leader in our Ingram Christian Church and was at one time president of the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. The item is taken from the South Boston, Va., correspondence of the Greensboro Daily News, and we agree most heartily with its fine sentiment to this loyal and true Christian soldier: "Dr. S. T. A. Kent, elderly physician of this county, has just completed 50 years of active practice of medicine in the county. Yesterday, in making his rounds, it took him only a few hours where in years gone by it took him several days. 'If Dr. Kent had collected anything at all for one-tenth of the work he has done,' a local doctor remarked in commenting on his 50th anniversary in medicine, 'he would be one of the richest citizens in this county.'"

The editor, while in the Valley of Virginia in and about Harrisonburg last week, found what seemed to him to be a growing desire and demand for a Congregational-Christian Church in the city of Harrisonburg. This splendid city, surrounded as it is by strong Christian Churches, has served through many decades as a source of drainage from the rural churches around about, as people have moved from the country into the city and their children are growing up there. We heard it expressed with sorrow and regret that a Christian Church was not started in Harrisonburg twenty-five or fifty years ago, for now some of the active, able church leaders in other churches of the city were once members of the Christian Church. It would seem to be a most appropriate movement for the Christians and Congregationalists to unite in beginning a work, a Congregational-Christian work, in Harrisonburg, since there is no Congregational or Christian Church there, and there are members in other churches who were once members in each of these two fellowships.

RANDLEMAN CHURCH.

Our revival began the fourth Sunday in May and closed the fifth Sunday. Rev. J. L. Neese did most of the preaching, and the church was much revived. There were about twenty-seven conversions, and seven united with the church at the close of the meeting. Bro. Neese is a great worker, and his messages were much enjoyed by all who heard him. May the Lord bless him and his work.

CHRISTIAN SUN LETTER.

I wish to say to subscribers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN that on and after the first day of July all renewals and new subscribers will be sent to John T. Kernodle, Managing Editor, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond, Va. From the first of July, Mr. Kernodle will have full charge of collecting all renewals for THE CHRISTIAN SUN and getting new subscribers, as well as publishing THE SUN and mailing it out. So please take notice and send all renewals to him.

For four years the writer has been Circulation Manager for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and he wishes to thank all those who have stood by him in this work and helped to keep THE SUN in 2,800 homes of our church people. Our work has been a real joy and one of love, and while we have some regrets in giving it up, we feel now and have felt all the while that it could be better handled in the Richmond office by one man. We hope that the subscribers will stand by Mr. Kernodle and send in their renewals to him, and that many new subscribers will join THE CHRISTIAN SUN family.
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Circulation Manager.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINCER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

NORTH GEORGIA ASSOCIATION will meet August 1st and 2nd at Trinity Church, near Lawrenceville.

MR. EDWARD CONNER, of Piedmont College, is now at work at Crossville, Tenn., assisting the Rev. Abram Knightengale in his summer program.

REV. ALMON STEVENS, of Stearns, Moderator of the Kentucky Conference, delivered the Commencement addresses at the county seat high schools at Whitley City, Kentucky, and Huntsville, Tenn.

MISS INA ADAMS, of Piedmont College, is the Summer Student Worker in the Andalusia larger parish of South Alabama. Antioch Church, of which Miss Adams is a member, is one of the five churches in this group.

A BOYS' CLASS of the Church School of Union Congregational Church of Chattanooga, Tenn., of which the Rev. George W. Blount is pastor, has a baseball team in the Chattanooga Sunday School League.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES of the Chattanooga District had their meeting at Grandview, Tenn., and paid particular attention to the fact that the first Tennessee Society was organized in our Grandview Church.

MR. GERALD SMITH, of Thorsby, Ala., has been conducting a Daily Vacation Bible School with Miss Agnes Averyt of Shelby, Ala., in the Church of the Covenant at the latter place. The school was a community enterprise.

THE HOME of Rev. J. M. Dopson, pastor of Watson's Chapel, Balm of Gilead, and Union Church of Mountain Creek, Ala., recently was destroyed by fire. The loss of the home at this time is a great disaster to the pastor and his family.

MR. DON L. WEST is now at Hindman, Knot County, Ky., organizing a group of workers for a county-wide youth program of religious education for the summer. He expects to take one of his helpers to Blue Ridge for the M. E. M. Conference.

ARTHUR SWARTZ, now an alumnus of Vanderbilt University, came direct to Albemarle, N. C., to begin his Sunday School work. He will be kept busy during July in the Carolinas. In August he will go to Georgia, beginning work at Duncan's Creek.

REV. S. F. COMMANDER, of DeFuniak Springs, Fla., preached the Sunday morning sermon at the Christian Life Conference held at Pyron's Chapel, Baker, Fla. Bro. Commander serves three churches and is a man of zeal and friendly spirit.

REV. GEORGE STALEY HUNT is in West Florida, for summer service in conducting a Daily Vacation Bible School and protracted meetings. He is assisting Rev. W. H. Tillman, of Crestview. He preached one of the sermons at the Christian Life Conference of young people held at Pyron's Chapel.

AT THORSBY, ALABAMA, the Congregationalists and Baptists are conducting a Union Vacation Bible School. The day sessions are held at the public school building. At night there are classes for young people and for men and women. The day concludes with an inspirational address on missions or some live church topic.

The speakers are leaders in the two denominations.

SALISBURY UNITED is making extensive repairs on its building both within and without. This is made possible because of the generosity of the Building Society. It will transform the church and make almost a new edifice of it. Rev. Thereon A. Zimmerman of Yale University will assist the pastor, Rev. W. T. Scott, during July and August in Trinity Parish.

WM. O. GILREATH, principal of the high school of Pine Knot, Ky., is receiving congratulations from many friends on account of his recent marriage to a charming young lady from Hindman and Stearns, Ky. Mr. Gilreath is the chairman of the Advisory Committee on the summer program at Pine Knot, where Rev. Sidney O. Davies is already at work as summer pastor of Summer Chapel.

DR. JASON NOBLE PIERCE, of College-side Church of Nashville, is a warm-hearted host. He entertained for lunch the trustees of the Atlanta Seminary Foundation on the day of their annual meeting and that same night entertained another United Church group at Collegeside House. Dr. C. Rexford Raymond is chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Atlanta Theological Seminary Foundation.

DR. WILLIAM H. WALKER, Professor of Bible and Philosophy at Berea College, gave the annual address to the Literary Society which meets in the Community Congregational Church of Stearns, Ky., and occupied the pulpit of the church one Sunday while the pastor, Rev. Almon O. Stevens, preached at Union Church, Berea, in the absence of Pastor Huntington, who is taking a trip to the Holy Land.

DR. McILYAR HAMILTON LICHLITER delivered the Baccalaureate sermon at the Commencement of the Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn. Dr. Lichliter is a trustee of the Seminary Foundation. His address much impressed the great audience and with that of the late Dr. William E. Barton was outstanding among the addresses of recent years. Dr. Lichliter somewhat resembles Dr. Cadman as a speaker. His presence on this occasion at Nashville was a recognition of the participation of our United Fellowship in the work of the Vanderbilt University School of Religion.

THE CONFERENCE OF THE CAROLINAS.

The meeting in Raleigh, June 7th and 8th, presented one of the most outstanding programs of its history. It was observed from the beginning that the commencement week of State College as well as those of neighboring high schools would diminish the attendance, but the zeal and high purpose of the delegates, together with the high character of the program itself marked this conference as one not soon to be forgotten.

Among the speakers were Dr. G. O. Atkinson, who struck a deep and abiding spiritual note in speaking of the merger of the two groups—Congregational and Christian. So good was it that by unanimous request THE CHRISTIAN SUN was asked to print it in full.

Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, Associate Secretary, with Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of Missions for the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, gave another high standard address on "The Larger Vision and the Wider Outlook."

He brought vividly to the Conference our work throughout the whole of our Eastern Division, illustrated by many a pungent illustration fresh from his own personal contact with our far-flung forces in Christian action.

It would be too much to try to report in detail all of the addresses given. But from the opening address of welcome given by the entertaining pastor, Dr. J. Edward Kirby, to the final benediction at the close of the last session, there was light and power, vision and the will to proceed, communion and fellowship born of the desire to move forward with increasing effectiveness and closer organization.

But one cannot forbear to mention such men as Stanley C. Harrell, who preached the Conference sermon; the address of Prof. J. Shelton Smith of Duke University; Prof. Carl C. Taylor's presentation of "The Role of the Church in Rural Life," a masterly analysis of churches in the country, a constructive criticism of too great emphasis on emotional evangelism and "Once-a-Month" preaching services, rather than a consistently organized parish with a well-prepared minister giving all his time to the work of a pastor and preacher and many like suggestions exceedingly valuable for the wide-awake rural church; President Newell of Piedmont College spoke on the theme, "The Spiritual Problems of a College President," and said that the matter goes back to the home out of which the college student comes; the faculty makes a difference, too, and he gave instances of professors helping students to solid ground in all that is good by giving the right direction at the critical time. His was said to be one of the very best inspirational addresses given. On "The Spiritual Guidance of Youth," Dr. Tamblin, of Greensboro, was very helpful in deep suggestions of honest foundations. The closing address of the Conference was given by President L. E. Smith, of Elon College. One of the strongest laymen of Raleigh, suggested the following comment:

"The outstanding points of the address on 'The Spiritual Foundations of the Christian College,' by President L. E. Smith, brought new views to me which I wish might be incorporated in the Minutes. Dr. Smith spoke of the great need of stressing the spiritual values in our denominational colleges, asserting that Christ and his teaching should be the foundation. That both home and foreign missions have been sponsored by church colleges through the preparation of missionaries and the distribution of funds. Also by educating ministers and building churches in the large cities.

"The stones in the foundation of our colleges are Faith, Prayer, and Sacrifice. The case was cited of a man who a year ago could contribute one hundred thousand dollars at his pleasure, leaving a material balance in his bank. Today, that man's check is worthless. Thus, can be seen the futility of stressing, too much, the piling up of dollars.

"Statistics show that seven out of eight of the Supreme Court judges are graduates of small denominational colleges; also sixteen out of seventeen of the prominent members of Congress.

"Economically, denominational colleges are a saving to the State. If it were not for denominational colleges, the enormous expenditures the State pays to its State-supported educational institutions would add materially to the over-burdened taxpayer."

One of the most important and far-reaching sessions of this Conference was the session presided over by Rev. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, on Wednesday morning. This was a joint session, combining delegates from the Christian Churches of the Carolinas with those of the Congregational. At this time the committee of eight appointed by the three Christian Conferences of

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

IN THE VIRGINIA VALLEY.

As one writes of any meeting within the bounds of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, one thinks of high hills, fertile fields, green pastures, fat cattle and fine people. If there is any spot in all our South more favored than the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, this writer has yet to find it. The might and the majesty of God are revealed and expressed in the mountain ranges that enrich, defend and glorify the Valley. God's bounty and benevolence are revealed and expressed in far-spreading orchards of fruit trees, boundless acres of waving grain and stretching fields of growing corn. God's plenty and liberality are revealed in the sumptuous and abundant food that the happy people feed upon and the richness and the variety of their royal hospitality.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention met with good old Timber Ridge Church, planted nearly a century ago in the nestling, towering hills of West Virginia, twenty miles up a beautiful drive from Winchester. Rev. R. L. Williamson, yet a young man in years, told the Convention how, on a former visit at a convention of this church not many years ago, he was carried with a large company of other delegates to Winchester on a wagon drawn by horses, leaving at midnight, arriving in Winchester at sun-up in time to catch an outgoing train. Now large comfortable automobiles take the delegates to and from the church in much less than an hour, and the entire trip is made in joy and gladness at the grandeur and glory of the scenery. Rev. A. W. Andes is pastor of the church and Roy A. Larrick, of Winchester, Va., is and has been for some years the highly competent and wide-awake president of the Convention, which assembled in annual session June 16-17. The pastor opened the Convention at 10:00 o'clock, June 16th, with appropriate devotional services, and one of the fine young men of the church, Vernon Whitacre, gave a cordial and very appropriate welcome address. The morning session was taken up with enrollment of delegates and the reports of the various schools and societies, and some departmental reports, until 11:00 o'clock, the hour for the annual address of Dr. M. L. Weekley, of Harrisonburg. Dr. Weekley spoke with great power, insight and enthusiasm, answering the question: "What is the Church Doing to the World?" Dr. Weekley began his message by telling some of the things the world is doing to the church, and then declared that the salvation of the church depended upon doing certain things to the world. The present economic order as well as the present social order is inexcusable, unpardonable, unbearable, and the whole order must be changed by the church. Our present order has enthroned machinery and dethroned personality, and that which the church is called upon to do is to properly evaluate personality and give persons their rightful places and rightful values in society in the same way that our Lord did. The highest values are human values, and we cannot subordinate the human to the inhuman, the spiritual to the material, the moral to the immoral. The speaker claimed that the church never had such a task, nor has it ever been confronted with a larger opportunity than this time presents. Dr. Weekley is deeply interested in changing the present economic and social order in keeping with the plain teachings of our Lord.

After a bountiful luncheon, where plenty was in evidence and poverty had no place, the Convention re-convened and was led in wholesome devotional services by Rev. R. L. Williamson. Departmental secretaries made reports, and following the report on Missions by the departmental secretary, Miss Verdie Showalter, the Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, delivered an address on "Missions Make a Change."

1st. Missions change the individual who undertakes not to argue away or against, but to obey the Great Commission of our Lord.

2nd. Missions change a church which undertakes a missionary program in his name, because the church is a spiritual body, and the only spiritual task assigned of our Lord is the missionary task, and the church is the only institution on earth that is looking after this task in seeking to carry out the missionary purpose, plan and program of our Lord. The church, in carrying this out, is changed from glory to glory.

3rd. Missions have changed the world in that missionaries tell of that name and that power through which alone individuals are saved and find their proper place in society and realize their proper weight and worth as human beings. Missions have changed the work of the world, and from the smallest it has come to be the largest work undertaken by man.

The remainder of the afternoon was given to reports of superintendents, teachers and delegates, in which interesting items from each school were brought out and discussed.

The high peak of the Convention was reached Thursday night at 8:00 o'clock in a most timely and telling address by Rev. Russell J. Clinchy, pastor of Pleasant Hill Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., and president of Washington Association of Congregational Pastors. "The Fire Grains" was the topic chosen, and Brother Clinchy showed how Congregationalism took its rise in the world and had proceeded through the centuries to keep alive the fiery grains of freedom, of liberty and of pursuit of truth in Christ Jesus. The Conference heard Brother Clinchy with deep interest, for he brought a real Christian message.

At 10:00 o'clock, June 17th, Rev. B. J. Earp conducted impressively the devotional services, immediately following which the question of the Cradle Roll was interestingly discussed by Bro. Earp and others following the report of the departmental secretary on that topic. In the round-table discussion of problems that followed, it was found that the teachers and officers had their problems, as all people have them who are trying to work out plans and programs for God, and while their problems may not have been solved, there was enlightening discussion and debate which could help. The morning hour closed with an address by the Mission Secretary, "The Best Missionary Book." In this address, the secretary took up the lessons of the past quarter in the Sunday School and showed how the Bible from the beginning struck the deepest and holiest missionary note and how in almost every chapter thereof the will of God was revealed in his relationship, not for the saving of one or a few peoples, but for the saving of the nations and the redemption of mankind through the power of His Son. The Bible is the best missionary book—three books of the Old and nine books of the New Testament being wholly dedicated to "Foreign" Missions.

After a business session, the Conference adjourned for a bountiful luncheon.

The afternoon of the last day was given to Christian Endeavor work, and the young people, as is always the case, when given a chance, made a most interesting program of it. The Christian Endeavor work was exalted and exhibited to the delight of the audience. The young people in their societies are not ashamed to talk about what their societies are doing and to tell each other of the achievements sought in their work.

Eight Sunday Schools received certificates of credit, and beautiful certificates were presented to these by the president of the Convention in well-chosen words. Mr. R. O. Rothgeb is the faithful treasurer of the Convention, and reported the offerings for the year a little, but not much, below those of a year ago.

The Convention closed at 4:00 P. M., after a most happy and successful session, and Brother Larrick consented to act as president again, which means that the annual session at Whistler's Chapel next year will be a live and well-attended and worth-while one. It was an interesting and profitable session, the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor leaders being in evidence and showing by their deep interest that they were seeking information in trying to find the best methods and plans for their work. J. O. A.

THE CHURCH GOES FORWARD.

It is easy to criticize the church. It is quite fashionable to cast slurs, and rather inviting on the part of some to discount what the church does. There are many who think the church is losing out, going back. The facts are all against such rating. The Christian Herald, carrying in its June issue authentic statistics, says truly: "The church has gained steadily for the 130 years during which accurate records are available. Year by year, decade by decade, the growth has continued, fluctuating at different periods, but always increasing. In fact," says The Herald, "the increase in church membership has far outstripped the rate of the country's growth in population, rapid as that has been. The year 1850 saw our greatest rate of population increase—3.59 per cent. But in the same year the churches gained 4.32 per cent." And so it has been, in varying but always in preponderant degree. In 1800, in the United States, only 6.8 persons out of every 100 were church members; in 1931, 40.1 out of every 100 were church members—and since 1800 each decade has shown an increase. Another significant fact is that the actual total increase in membership during 1931 is many times larger than that of last year, and the largest for several years. "The church has never lost ground," says The Herald, "and it is farther from losing ground today than ever before in our history."

The following are the figures that are worth noting: In 1800, there were 6.0 church members to every 100 people in the United States; in 1810, 8.5 to every 100; in 1820, 11.2 to every 100; in 1830, 13.3 to every 100; in 1840, 14.4 to every 100; in 1850, 15.2 to every 100; in 1860, 16.6 to every 100; in 1870, 17.2 to every 100; in 1880, 19.9 to every 100; in 1890, 32.7 to every 100; in 1900, 34.7 to every 100; in 1910, 38.3 to every 100; in 1920, 39.8 to every 100; in 1930, 40.1 to every 100.

These figures justify The Herald in saying: "Amid the wreck of fortunes and the ruin of material hopes, the church still stands," and is marching on—"as brave and all-conquering as ever that day when he, the Christ, bade his disciples go into all the world and make disciples of all nations."

Our Lord is making good his declaration, "and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

THE WET PRESS.

It is impossible to get a correct impression from the "wet press" of what is taking place at political conventions these days. A chance acquaintance, who was at Chicago last week, himself not an advocate of a dry plank or prohibition, told the writer that what he had witnessed was enough to almost make anyone lose his confidence in the daily press, which he characterized as the "Wet Press." Said our informant: "If any individual, however poorly he said it, or whatever minority he represented, arose to advocate liquor, beer or the wet propaganda, his name and effort got on the front page and into the eye of the reading public throughout the land. But whatever proposition was offered or speech was made for the 'drys' or law enforcement, however much it thrilled the audience and provoked the approval and won the applause of the multitudes, he got no notice in the papers or a bare mention of the facts, if at all."

This need not of itself attract attention, but it is in keeping with the wet propaganda and the policy of the wet press. The people of the United States may or may not have made up their minds to abolish the Eighteenth Amendment, to let down the bars and let liquor flow in, as thousands of ex-saloonkeepers, with their advocates, who own millions and would like the poor man instead of the rich to bear the burden of taxation, are advocating; but thus far the matter has not been registered nor has the point been proven. Thinking people and those who love order, sobriety and good government will bear in mind at least two things:

1st. That thus far the wets have not named a substitute for this Amendment and for our prohibition law. It is well enough to destroy and to abolish when there is something better to offer and to build, but sensible people do not destroy until they have found or think they have found that which is better than that they are destroying. Thus far the wets have not named a substitute, certainly one that seriously appeals to the common sense and good judgment of a sober citizenship.

2nd. The chief argument that this writer has heard against the present statute is that it is not being enforced and cannot be enforced. There is something in that, but it makes one ask this question. Must a great government acknowledge that its law-breakers and those who defy its constitution are stronger and more powerful than the law-observers and the government itself which made the law?

The wet press may deceive, and is deceiving, but our country and civilization so far have not gone from higher to lower moral standards in their organic enactments; and the wet press will find great difficulty in convincing the sober, law-observing people of the United States that more liquor, easier liquor, more beer and readier beer, for which they clamor, are better for the morals of the people than less of the deadly stuff that has been outlawed because it has sent so many to ignominious and untimely graves. All of us at least face a time of serious thinking, and since law is defined as the organized virtue of the community and the State, we shall still bear in mind that what the country and the world needs is virtue—individual and organized virtue—and if the wet press can show us the way to the better law, that which unites, conserves and develops the organized virtue of the community and of the State, then and not until then will the citizenship of the country give them their approval.

THE FIVE-DAY WEEK.

It seems that Business is uppermost in the world today, and there are two classes that lay emphasis on this subject—employers and employees. Both are wrong, and ignore, or do not know, the Fourth Commandment: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; and six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work. But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." (Ecc. 20:8-11.)

There are just two items in this Fourth Commandment. The first is to keep the Sabbath day holy; the second is to work six days, and both are equally binding. The demand for a five-day week grows out of the failure to keep the Sabbath day holy. If the nation kept the Sabbath day holy unemployment would be unknown. It is plain that people spend more and commit more crimes on days when not at work than when they are honestly and busily engaged in work or in worship. People behave better and spend less when they are busy and there would be fewer Sunday accidents if people would regularly attend church services. If both items in the Fourth Commandment were faithfully obeyed hard times would be unknown. Society would be so knit together in love and business would be conducted on such a sound basis that regular prosperity would be enjoyed. Extravagance and voluntary idleness lead to depression, idleness and need. Calamity never came upon the Hebrew nation when faithful to God, and hard times come to Christian nations when they wander from the true path.

This country has disregarded the Sabbath day by neglecting the church, engaging in business, indulging in pleasure, and losing reverence for God's word. A great revival of religion would correct all the evils that rob society of prosperity and peace. More respect for the law of God and the law of the State would reduce selfishness, jealousy, and the conflict between capital and labor. They are dependent upon each other and they must cooperate for prosperity and progress in all that blesses society and the home. The home is the heart of social life, and the church is the heart of business life. Neglect both of these and quakes, floods, depression, and suffering follow as a penalty for sin.

When Sodom and Gomorrah became so grossly wicked, the Lord "rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven." (Gen. 19:24.) Sin finally brings judgment upon itself. "Be sure your sin will find you out." (Num. 32:23.) Punishment is the fruit of sin in this life and not voluntarily imposed by higher authority. The State would never punish a known innocent citizen. God never punishes the innocent though the innocent may bear burdens, and suffer afflictions, as Jesus suffered, "the just for the unjust." (I. Peter 3:18.) Nations might suffer in the same way if they were faithful to God, and by such suffering teach the world a lesson greatly needed at the present time. The prodigal son never suffered any want while he remained with his father. It was in a foreign country in riotous living that he came to want.

SOME BENEFITS OF SELF-DENIAL.

One of the tests of New Testament discipleship, as announced by our Lord, was that of self-denial. He said one day, "If any will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." He knew that this type of disciples would be most efficient in carrying forward his program of witnessing among the nations. Their love for him and their love for others would make the denial of a few things, that would minister to their personal happiness or comfort, a great joy. He set the example by announcing that he came not to do his will, but the will of the Father. He is not only the example for the church to follow, but by the energy and presence of the Holy Spirit, he supplies the motive power, enabling his disciples to walk in his steps.

The rich young ruler with whom Jesus conversed was unwilling to deny himself the pleasures his wealth would purchase. He turned away sorrowful, being unwilling to take the road of self-denial as a disciple. His loss was eternal.

Not so with the great apostle, Paul. For when he heard the voice of Jesus, and caught a glimpse of his glory, while on his way to Damascus, he cried out, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?" Later he said, "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." It is evident that he took the way of self-denial, and his life and ministry still bless the world. His gain was eternal.

A missionary gives the following incident of the willingness on the part of some natives of Burma to sacrifice for the cause of Jesus Christ. "An old Karen pastor came one day with a large contribution for the foreign mission work. I said to him, 'How can your people give so much? I know they are very poor, the overflow of the river has swept away your crops, your cattle are dying of disease, it is the famine time with you.' 'Oh,' he said with such a contented smile, 'it only means rice without curry.' They could live on rice and salt, but they could not live without giving the Bread of Life to their brethren."

Many are standing in the bread-line of the nations, waiting for the Bread of Life. Our self-denial gifts will help to supply the need of some of these perishing souls.

"Tell the blessed tidings,
Ye, whose ears have heard;
Tell it to the captives
Waiting for His word.
Tell the hungry nations,
Longing to be fed,
Of the Living Water,
And the Heavenly Bread."

E. F. McCarty.

O God, who hast made man in thine own likeness who dost love all whom thou hast made, suffer us not because of difference in race, color or condition, to separate ourselves from others and thereby from thee; but teach us the unity of thy family and the universality of thy love.—Mornay Williams.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The One Hundred and Fourteenth Quarterly Session of the Southside Virginia Medical Association met in the Municipal Building, Suffolk, Va., on Tuesday, June 14, 1932. About fifty physicians came together in the spirit of research and cooperation. The topics treated and discussed revealed great interest in disease and remedies for same.

Reports were made and discussed as follows: "Observations on Goat's Milk in Infant Feeding," by Dr. D. P. West; "Diagnosis of Tuberculosis," by Dr. J. H. Smith; "Special Treatment Following the Extraction of Teeth," by Dr. Dewey Davis; "The Values of the Heart in Action," by Dr. D. G. Chapman; "Results of Biliary Tract Surgery, Based on the Study of 545 Cases," by Dr. R. L. Payne; "Difficulties in Diagnosing Certain Acute Abdominal Conditions," by Dr. D. L. Peple; "Seasons as an Aid to Diagnosis and Treatment," by Dr. J. E. Rawls; "Transurethral Resection of the Prostate Gland; Case Reports," by Dr. J. B. Graham; "A New Arsenic Preparation for the Treatment of Amebiasis," by Dr. W. Randolph Graham; "The Prognostic Significance of the Electro-Cardiograph," by Dr. James W. Hunter.

After the reading of the carefully prepared papers, the subjects were discussed in an illuminating way that seemed of value to the Association. Perhaps there are no more diligent searchers after truth than physicians. They render service that only knowledge and skill can render. All the way through there was the closest attention, the most sympathetic interest, and the papers showed a deep study and a sincere desire to know the truth. This letter is written to emphasize a great lesson rather than to simply report the session of the Association. It is this: That the preacher and the doctor are both engaged in doing Christian service for mankind. Read Matt. 4:23. "Jesus went about all Galilee preaching the gospel of the Kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." Then remember that he said, "follow me;" and then he sent forth to do the work which he had taught them to do. His manner of life was their example, and he had done these two things: he had preached and he had healed. The preacher and the doctor are doing just what Jesus did, and he said before he went away, "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go unto my Father." (John 14:12.) Ministers and doctors are doing greater work in saving and healing than Jesus did, because they are reaching so many more than he, as one person, could do. Preaching and healing were inaugurated by Jesus and missionaries are preachers and doctors. Medical missionaries have done a wonderful work. In savage and heathen countries, doctors, nurses and hospitals are unknown.

The gospel through preachers and doctors has changed human society by healing souls and bodies. No two classes of workers are so closely related in work as preachers and doctors; and nearly all doctors are identified with the church. Preachers and doctors meet in the sickroom and the church and their united service has done more than any other agency to improve the individual, the home, and society.

The reception committee for this great convention was composed of Dr. J. E. Rawls, Dr. O. R. Yates, and Dr. G. R. Joyner. The invocation was by Rev. W. W. Staley, and the address of welcome was delivered by Ex-Lieutenant Governor J. E. West and the response was delivered by Dr. C. S. Dodd of Petersburg. Dr. W. W. Wilkinson of La Crosse, Va., was president. The local committee provided for the convention a free luscious supper in the Fellowship Hall of the Christian Church, and the day ended with the sweetest fellowship and Christian cooperation in this work of helping save mankind from sin and from disease. W. W. STALEY.

FROM PASTOR TO PEW.

Dear Friend of South Norfolk Christian:

If I could only see each one of you personally and have a good long heart-to-heart talk with you, this letter would not be necessary. Since that is an impossibility, I am writing you this message and let's imagine we are talking face to face about a very important matter, and one in which we are mutually interested and concerned.

You remember that next Sunday, June 12th, is our Sixth Anniversary Service. A special program will be rendered by members of the different departments of the Sunday School and the church. Now, we are counting on you to be present for this important service, with every member of the family if possible, so let's be there on time, 9:30 o'clock—that is Sunday School hour—and at 10:45 o'clock, we will all assemble in the auditorium of the church ready to enter into the spirit of the day and enjoy a great service commemorating a memorable occasion.

As you know, we are still carrying an indebtedness on our beautiful church to the amount of $29,000.00. Kind friends were good enough to loan us $60,000.00, six years ago and through the heroic efforts of sacrificial giving and of a devoted membership, we have paid back over one-half of this amount, plus $13,300.00 interest, making a total of $43,300.00. We have interest to the amount of $400.00 to be paid next Monday, June 13th, and then on June 30th, $700.00 to the Prudential Insurance Company of America and local banks. One hundred and ten gifts of $10.00 each will solve this.

I am perfectly aware that quite a number of our members are out of work, but a great many have not as yet lost a day. The surprising thing is that many of those folks who are out of work and money, and those who are working only half time, have been making their contributions regularly, while many haven't lost a day and yet the books show they haven't made a contribution in twelve months. These are facts and yet they are sad facts.

My dear friend, if you are in arrears attend your church next Sunday, bring a "catch up" offering, get a package of church envelopes, bring them every Sunday and then your church nor your pastor will be financially embarrassed. Now, what was the question you wanted to ask? No, the pastor's salary is not paid up. Yes, he owes bills, but wait a minute. A minister is better to owe bills than the average member. He is an example. One hundred will criticize him, where one criticises you. Is that clear?

Now, two hundred members pay a dollar each, two hundred pay 50c each, and two hundred pay 25c each next Sunday on the pastor's salary and thus help your pastor help those who helped him.

But don't stop there. Keep this up for twelve months; watch your church grow spiritually, numerically and financially.

Now, before we go, let's have a little talk with the Lord. You thank him, in your own way, for all his many blessings, for Christ our Saviour, his church, our homes, Christian fellowship, the joy of service and for the home that awaits us in heaven.

Just a moment, please. Silence—Amen!

Good-bye, God bless you, till we meet again.

Your Pastor Friend,

OLIVE DANIEL POYTHRESS.

A WORKING MAN.

"Prohibition at its worst is immeasurably better than license ever was at its best." So says Dr. Daniel A. Poling, leader of the coast-to-coast campaign which the Allied Forces for Prohibition recently conducted to crystalize support for the Eighteenth Amendment.

Dr. Poling believes this, because he has seen what conditions were under the old saloon system, and he has studied conditions under enforcement. Eight months on the prohibition battlefield have corroborated his belief that the majority of people want prohibition, but feeling that the cause stands in jeopardy unless all its friends are rallied to its support, he has thrown himself into this great educational campaign in an attempt to stimulate an organized effort in its behalf.

Dr. Poling talks from two to three times a day, and along with the other speakers who are making the tour, has visited nearly 400 cities, crossing and recrossing the country, frequently by airplane. Recently, while the campaigners were in California and neighboring States, Dr. Poling has had to make a flying trip across the country each week-end in order to be in New York for a Sunday afternoon broadcast which he conducts in the interest of young people and vocational guidance.

He has long been a leader of youth. He gave up a life pastorate at the famous Marble Collegiate Church in New York to devote his life to young people, and today, as president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor and the World's Christian Endeavor Union, is the leader of an army of 4,000,000 young people.

"Our young people are not drunken or dissolute as some would have us believe," he says. "The great majority are as sound mentally, morally and physically as any generation that ever lived. I have seen some drinking by young people in public places, but God pity the man who on a few instances would build an indictment."

His Sunday radio talks bring him 200 letters a day from boys and girls who seek his advice—some 73,000 a year—and all of these must be answered. A staff of fourteen persons is employed to do this work alone, and it is all done under Dr. Poling's personal direction.

Meanwhile, he finds time to carry on his work as editor of the Christian Herald, often in hotel rooms two or three thousand miles from headquarters, or while traveling back and forth across the country. Dr. Poling has never been one to let time pass idly.

He was a Prohibition National Convention delegate when hardly out of school, and later ran for Governor of Ohio on the Prohibition ticket. For 59 consecutive days, he made seven speeches a day.

Now, having completed the recent tour of the nation with the Allied Campaigners, one recalls his remark made at the outset of the campaign, which seems to symbolize his attitude toward everything he undertakes: "I don't know whether we'll win," he said, "but I'll fight as hard as I possibly can for the thing I believe is right—the thing which will best promote and conserve the manhood and womanhood and the youth of this nation. I can do no more, and when I am through my conscience will be clear."

CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISM.

"A spiritual revival is a necessary condition of a genuine economic recovery," Roger Babson, President of the Babson Statistical Organization, told representatives of a score of denominations assembled at East Northfield, Mass., June 16th, in a conference on evangelism, under the auspices of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Mr. Babson declared that "the need of the hour is more self-control, more unselfishness, more faith and more courage," and described these as "spiritual qualities which cannot be secured from bankers or stores, but only from vital religion."

Mr. Babson further held that, if ministers are disappointed because church attendance is not larger, they should scrutinize their own preaching, cease discussing abstract problems and give concrete help to people who are face to face with pressing needs.

Mr. Babson's address was, in part, as follows: "For churches to close this summer is like hospitals closing during an epidemic. I say this because an epidemic of fear, such as is raging today, is as dangerous as an epidemic of 'flu,' such as raged in 1918. The need of the hour is not more money, more real estate, or more stocks and bonds, but more self-control, more unselfishness, more faith and more courage.

"Self-control, unselfishness, faith and courage are spiritual qualities which cannot be secured from bankers or stores, but only from vital religion. In behalf of the discouraged business men, the unemployed wage-workers and the millions of others in trouble today, I beg of ministers to minister to the wants of these people at this critical hour. An economic recovery is only awaiting a spiritual revival.

"Preachers wonder why they do not have better church attendance. Is it not because they are failing to give a message which will truly help the bewildered people of the present day? Business men, wage-workers and mothers are today primarily interested in how to pray and how to trust in God, and what to do that they may exist. Under ordinary circumstances it is all right to preach about abstract theological or sociological problems, but today men and women want personal and immediate help in solving pressing needs and in making momentous decisions. It is the ability to make decisions correctly which people really want, rather than any material thing, and this wisdom is a spiritual quality, which only religion can give.

"For a man to expect spiritual help in his time of trouble and yet not be willing to give an hour or two a week in attending and aiding the church, upon which he is absolutely dependent, is to me beyond comprehension. Such a man does not deserve help and cannot logically expect it. To get anything in this world we must make some sacrifice, and the first sacrifice people must make in order to get spiritual help is to give their time and support to the churches. At various times in past history different forms of sacrifice have been required. Once it was goats and bullocks, later it was one-tenth of one's income; today, it may be giving up a game of golf or turning off the radio on a Sunday morning.

"A minister who sees his congregation dwindling may be quite sure it is due to one or more of these four reasons: (1) To sermons which are uninteresting, unintelligent and non-helpful to the average man or woman; (2) To the fact that those who attend his church prove no more honest and kind than those who do not attend; (3) To a lack of spiritual influence in the home and school and example as to church-going as set by certain influential people in the community; (4) To the feeling that the church does not render a service important enough to call for support. By a carefully planned campaign to correct these four handicaps over a period of five years, church attendance and church benevolence could be easily doubled."

At the same meeting, Bishop Wilbur P. Thirkield, of New York, Chairman of the new Committee on Worship appointed by the Federal Council of Churches, outlined the main points in what he characterized as "a revival of interest in worship in Protestantism." Bishop Thirkield said: "The loss of the spirit of reverence has been the greatest weakness in thousands of modern churches. If the choice must be between superstition and irreverence, give me superstition, for superstition may pave the way to faith, while irreverence brings hardness and shallowness of soul and drives out God."

While stressing the value of liturgies and symbols, Bishop Thirkield also pointed out the very different kind of contribution made by the Quakers in their use of silence in worship. He said: "I make a plea for the power of holy silence. One difficulty in worship today is that the preacher is so eternally talking aloud that no space is left for the people to hear God speak. The Psalmist who cried, 'Be still and know,' had a true insight into human need."

Bishop Thirkield was severely critical of the tendency in some churches to substitute entertainment for worship. "When the people are fed on entertainment," he said, "they come to want something more and more exciting. God save us from pulpit thrillers and sensation-mongers. My plea is for a worship which satisfies the mystic's eager quest for God, the moralist's ethical ideals and a passion for helping and saving men."

Dr. Charles L. Goodell, Executive Secretary of the Federal Council's Commission on Evangelism, in interpreting the significance of the conference, declared that "the depression and discouragement prevailing throughout the country at the present time are a summons to all the churches of a year of aggressive evangelism. The statistics of gains in church membership for the past year have been gratifying, showing that more than 430,000 new members were added to the American churches of all denominations during twelve months. This increase is nearly five times as large as that of the preceding year.

"When a sinner is dying he finds no comfort in counting the hypocrites in the church."—Selected.

MARRIAGES

CHAPMAN—ROBERTS.

A simple but beautiful marriage was solemnized on Thursday morning, June 16th, at 11:30 o'clock, at the home of Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Roberts, of Windsor, Va., when their daughter, Emma Alberta, became the bride of Mr. Frederick Perry Chapman. Only the immediate members of the family were present.

The lower floor of the home was decorated with potted plants, ferns and vases and baskets of delphinium, sweet peas, and Queen Anne's lace.

Miss Charlotte Roberts played the wedding music: Nevin's "Venetian Love Song," was followed by the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin, to the strains of which the bridal couple entered together and took their places before the officiating minister, Rev. J. M. Roberts, father of the bride, who used the impressive ring ceremony.

The bride wore an ensemble of poudre blue flat crepe, the blouse being of ashes of roses chiffon and point lace, with accessories to match, and she carried an arm bouquet of delphinium, pink sweet peas and lace flowers.

Mrs. Chapman is a graduate of Elon College, and for the past year has been a member of the Smithfield, Va., High School faculty.

Mr. Chapman, who is a progressive young business man of Smithfield, received his education at Randolph-Macon and is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. James T. Chapman.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served, immediately after which Mr. and Mrs. Chapman left for a two-weeks' wedding trip through the Valley of Virginia to Washington, Atlantic City and other places of interest.

On their return they will make their home in Smithfield.

Great Britain and the Race Track.—

The United Press tells us that race-track betting is on the increase in Great Britain. $2,291,000 more was wagered in 1931 than in 1930. Nearly 12,500,000 bets were registered on the wagering machines during the year, with a turnover of over $14,000,000. This amount, of course, does not include the large amounts bet privately on racing, nor wagers on other sports and games. Our own country seems able to forget the depression when the wish is there, for only recently more than 70,000 people spent nearly $500,000 to see a prize fight in New York.

Unknown Soldier's Tomb Completed.—

At a total cost of $400,000, the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, in the national cemetery at Arlington, Va., has finally been completed. The sarcophagus is eleven feet high, nine feet wide, and is of white marble, matching the amphitheatre in the rear. It is carved from a single block of Colorado marble. On the front panel are the figures of Peace, Victory, and Valor. Each side of the sarcophagus is divided into three panels by Doric pilasters, and in each panel is carved an inverted wreath. No one knows the name of the soldier buried there, but the nation honors him and his brave comrades who sleep in unknown graves here and abroad.

A Judge's Remedy.—

Among other evils that seem to be on the increase is that of divorce, and there is one man who might well speak with authority as to their causes. Judge Joseph Sabath of Chicago, has the reputation of having presided in more divorce suits in court than any other man in the world. From his background of experience he has this to say: "Divorce can only be prevented by keeping the flame of love from dying out. When affection goes out, hatred comes in. True love is born of religious faith, and to preserve home life it must be made spiritual. For that reason I believe in the sanctity of marriage and in the sacredness of family ties. The greatest defense of marital happiness and of the maintenance of the integrity of the home is the open Bible, daily prayers about the family altar and the practice of the principles of religion."

New York Savings Banks and Dividends.—

On July 1st, the 146 mutual savings banks of New York State credited their depositors with interest to the amount of $47,000,000. At this time attention was called to the fact that not one of these banks has ever failed to pay a dividend since its founding, which in some cases means more than a century. The Bank of Savings has, since 1819, paid its depositor-owners $189,000,000 in dividends. The Bowery Savings Bank, which is the largest of all, made its 216th payment; and there are five other banks which have unbroken records running over a century. The oldest account is in the Bank of Savings. A depositor put therein $10 in 1819, and added another $5 in 1820. There have never been any additional deposits, nor has there been any withdrawals, though the account has been kept alive by heirs of the original depositor. It now amounts to $3,100.

Titanium.—

Titanium is used in increasing quantities to replace other paint pigments, such as white lead, zinc oxide and lithopone. For many years white lead was practically the only white pigment, and it is still used in greatest volume. Then came zinc oxide, followed by lithopone, which is another compound of zinc, which while third in point of years now exceeds zinc oxide in amount used. Titanium oxide is the youngest in point of time when volume production is considered, although it was used more than sixty years ago in Great Britain for painting the bottoms of ships. A great deal of secrecy surrounds the whole industry. The pure metal is both rare and unimportant, but the oxide ores are quite plentiful, abounding in Virginia and Florida. The great value of titanium oxide is the covering power of the paint made therefrom. More expensive by the pound, it is said to cost less per foot of covered surface.

Lausanne Conference Non-Conclusive.—

Many were the predictions of failure for the Lausanne Conference. It was hardly thought by anyone who stopped to reason the matter out, that France would yield what Germany demanded, or that Germany would cease to demand more than she thought possible to obtain. Even with its more liberal government in control, France wishes to salvage as much as possible of promised reparations, and Germany has given the flat answer that she will pay nothing more. England wants to see something constructive started, and there is a possibility that there will be a committee to work out some scheme whereby the reparations totals may be made small enough that Germany may be induced to accept them, and yet tangible enough that France may save her political face. This agreement will, no doubt, be coupled with a conditional agreement that the United States write down still further its war debts. Thus, the United States again becomes the center about which the whole matter revolves. It is hoped that the United States will be able to use the pressure of these war debts to force—at least a partial acceptance of her plea for the reduction of armaments by the countries concerned.

The Democratic Wet Plank.—

"The Democratic wet plank for the first time in the history of American politics makes the Eighteenth Amendment a party issue and support of national prohibition repeal a test of democracy and of party membership." This statement is from the pen of Daniel A. Poling, and it gives rise to a question as to whether one can vote the National Democratic ticket next fall without turning his back absolutely upon the Eighteenth Amendment. Mr. Poling favors neither the repeal plank of the Democratic party nor the submission plank offered by the Republicans, but urges that dries, the nation over, support the dry candidates, regardless of their party affiliation. It seems to us that the Democratic party would have done a great service for the entire nation, had it been content even to follow the lead of the Republicans, for with all of their boastings, we believe that it is impossible to repeal at this time, and nullification is even too serious a matter for them to consider as a party. It is true that the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment will not immediately bring back the barroom to the so-called dry States, but we venture to state that barrooms would be opened on the principal streets of all the larger cities in the wet States within three days of the time that the amendment would be repealed. If there is any plan whereby temperance can be promoted to a greater degree than by the present, let us have it, but by all means hold to the life-line until the life-boat picks us up.

Depression Causes Boom!—

A contemporary says: "Gold-mining has its depressions during booms, and its booms during depressions." The reason for this is that during times of depression, the gold dollar will buy more than at any other time. "Money talks" at all times, but in times of depression it talks louder than ever. Airplanes are being used to reach some of the prospective and promising mines in the far north, having taken the place of the slower, if cheaper (?) dog sleds. There have been several attempts to open up the mines in North Carolina, which at one time produced gold in workable quantities, and in the old mines of the West we find unemployed men going out to old placer workings, sometimes with pick and shovel, and sometimes with more modern equipment. We are told that in most cases they are making a living, and in some cases they are laying aside quite a bit above that. During the summer thirty students from the College of Mines of Washington State College will go placer-mining in that State for a company operating there. Several hundred other students will go it on their own in Washington, Montana, Oregon and Idaho. So keen has the interest become that several companies have developed small portable machines that will wash around a ton of gravel an hour, and are said to be very economical in the use of water, which is quite an item in many of the semi-arid places where gold is found. Not only are these small-scale operators looking over the once-discarded gold mines, but the larger mining companies are reopening old workings and, with the aid of modern machinery, making them well worth while.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

WORSHIP.

I should like for us to think this month of worship in our own Sunday School. If the Sunday School is large enough, it is better to have the Young People's division to worship separately, but if the Sunday School is small, the young people should be given a chance to take part in the program.

Groups of different ages should be called on to take charge of the programs. Those who lead should be made to feel the seriousness of their responsibility. They should be well prepared and should sit near the front or on the platform during the service.

Worship service should also have an aim. A general aim for young people's worship services is to provide opportunities for genuine worship services through participation in programs that are graded and adapted to their needs and interests. They should also provide opportunities for training in the field of worship through participation in planning and conducting worship services.

The ideal way to plan a worship service is to select a general theme which may be carried through all four Sundays in the month.

A general subject such as Discipleship could be taken for a month. The worship service for the first Sunday would center around the thought of the Call to Discipleship. The stories of how Christ called his disciples could be read as scripture. "Jesus Calls Us," is an appropriate hymn. Others should be selected.

The second Sunday's worship service would center around the "Cost of Discipleship." The scriptures tell us in Luke 14:25-33 of the exacting requirements of discipleship, and in I. John 3:13-18, that love is the price of discipleship. The hymn, "Thou Didst Leave Thy Throne," tells what Jesus paid for discipleship. The prayer should ask for grace and strength to face the cost of discipleship, to give the full measure of our devotion, to bring our gifts of money, talent, or service, not grudgingly, but in the spirit of Him who used to say, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." An appropriate closing hymn is, "O, Jesus, I Have Promised."

The third Sunday's worship service would bring out the "Character of True Disciples." The Beatitudes, found in Matthew 5:1-16 characterize the disciples of Christ. The hymn, "True-hearted, Whole-hearted, Faithful, and Loyal," tells how a true disciple offers himself. The prayer should be for clean lives, clean thoughts, clean words, and clean deeds; for strength to stand for the right against the easy wrong; for a spirit to work hard and play fair; for charity to all, and a willingness to forgive; for readiness to serve, and for patience under stress of daily duties and irksome toils; for greater love to God and our fellowmen; for faith in Christ and for a master passion to be His true disciple; for forgiveness of sin and shortcomings and victory over everything that would mar our perfect relationship to God. Scriptures relating the true character of disciples are John 13:35, Luke 6:45, John 17:15-19, and Romans 8:5, 6, 9, 14. A fitting hymn with which to close the service is, "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind."

The thought for the fourth Sunday is expressed in the subject, "Universality of Discipleship." The opening hymn could be, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." The thought of the prayer would be for the church of Christ universal, its prosperity and increase in mission lands, for its purging and strengthening in our own country, for the church in our own local community, for our own fitness to be members of the church of Christ. The scripture is found in Mark 9:38-41 and John 10:16. A brief message from the pastor on "The Real Essence of Christianity that Unites All Disciples of Jesus Christ," could come during the service. An excellent closing hymn is "In Christ There is No East or West."

Following a month of planned worship services, using as many different ages and as many individuals as possible, it would be well to ask a few pertinent questions. Has there been increased interests and greater participation in the worship services? Do the young people themselves show initiative and desire to share in the improvement of worship periods? Has there been a finer "spirit of worship," or further evidence that the individuals or groups are entering into actual religious experiences? These questions, if considered carefully and thoughtfully, may lead to the very heart of new problems and then to creative endeavor.

MABEL SMITH.

A HINT TO YOUTH.

This was written for all whom it may concern, but especially for the young people in the Western North Carolina Conference.

Remember, we are to be the men and women of tomorrow. Also, remember, that our country and our church are not the only institutions that are on the brink of that chasm called despair; it is the whole world. Cheer up! Who knows but what God is only testing us; or better, checking the world in its mad rush.

Better times are sure to come. We, as young people, must make those times the best ever, and this world a better place in which to live by giving ourselves for Christian service in the church. And, when we have become aware that God is apparently punishing the world for its "make-believe" life and get down to the reality of what a Christian should be, then we can build as a basic foundation of our lives a true character and personality as we find in the Beatitudes. Then, perhaps, we shall be living in an era when we can appreciate the actual value of money, life and Christianity.

WADLEY TRAINING SCHOOL.

July 28th will be the opening day for the Wadley Training School. The young people and church leaders who are privileged to attend will doubtless be both happier and better able to serve by having spent a week in intensive training, fellowship, and prayer at Wadley.

Standards of International Council of Religious Education will be met in Administration of Elementary Work taught by Miss Annie Campbell, Young People's Methods, taught by Miss Dorothy French; Missions (China), taught by Dr. F. P. Ensminger; and the Life of Christ, taught by Rev. F. C. Lester. There will also be Non-Credit courses in Worship taught by Miss Dorothy French, and Pastors' Problems, taught by Dr. F. P. Ensminger. Young People's discussion, led by Miss Lillian McKee.

Miss Marguerite Davison, who has largely planned the school, will be in charge of recreation.

Rev. J. H. Dollar and Mrs. Dollar have been asked to serve as Deans for men and women.

It is only a month until time for this school—none too early to get ready to be there.

ARE YOU BUSY?

Have you high school graduates, college students, and school teachers found jobs for the summer? If so, you should be happy and put into the job the best of which you are capable, for there are thousands of other young people who would like to work but have not found any paying job.

But if you are among the unlucky who have found no work, you need not be among the lazy who do not want to work. There is plenty of work that is worthy of your best effort.

Why not collect those dozens of boys and girls in your community who have nothing to do and direct them in play, tell them stories, teach them how to be healthy, and show them the Christian way of life? There is no law against such work, and the reward that comes from doing a needed service is much richer than money. In this way you can make a real contribution to the life of your community, one that is worthy of you.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

"HOW DOES CHRIST MEET THE NEEDS OF THE WORLD?"

Once this world was a dark world; we are just now at the dawning. Why are we beginning to see the light across the horizon? Because Jesus Christ, the Son of God, came as a light unto the world. This world is, and always has been, a hungry world. For what is it hungry? It is hungry for the bread of life, the love of God, and his tender care. This world is a lost world; but Christ is the Saviour—the Great Shepherd. "He meets every need of humanity." A better knowledge as to how Jesus meets the needs of the world may be had by reading carefully the Book of Books. There he promises us "freedom" from all these things; for he says, "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make ye free."

Christ cannot meet the needs of the world unless he meets them in the lives of everyone as individuals. They must be met in your life and mine.

Here are subjects and thoughts for speakers in presenting man's great needs—"Man's, Great Yearning to Know God," "Man Seeks to Know the Truth," "Man Longs for a Steadfast Hope," "Man Often Needs Comfort," "Man Needs a Saviour," and "Man, a Needy Creature."

And thoughts for speakers answering the needs of the world—"Christ Came to Answer Man's Needs," "Christ Reveals God to Man," "Christ Reveals the Truth," "Christ Would be a Man's Saviour," "Christ Would Comfort Man With Hope," "Christ Promises an Eternal Home," and "Faith, the Key to Christ's Comfort."

The following questions might be used for discussion also: "What are some of the attainments of which man boasts?" "Do man's boasted attainments answer his deepest needs? Why not?" "What lesson did the World War teach us concerning so-called material progress?" "Why can not man answer his own great needs?"

Sunday School Lesson

CHILDHOOD AND EDUCATION OF MOSES.

LESSON I—JULY 3, 1932.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it."—Prov. 22:6.

LESSON TEXT: Exodus 2:1-10; Acts 7:20-22.

TIME: The Israelites were in Egypt from B. C. 1715 to 1498. Birth of Moses, B. C. 1578.

PLACE: The capital of Egypt, very likely Memphis.

The book of Genesis was a book of "beginnings." The book of Exodus is one of "going out." Here we find the old order of things left behind and a new order forming. Genesis deals with individuals in relation to the world and God. Exodus is confined to God's chosen people.

For years after the death of Joseph, the Israelites prospered and multiplied in the land of Goshen, until they became a veritable nation within themselves. Finally, however, revolution prevailed and the Hyksos or Shepherd Kings were overthrown, and a new dynasty, the nineteenth, was established. We are told, "there arose a new king over Egypt, who knew not Joseph." This monarch, it is generally agreed, was Rameses II, known as the great builder of the nineteenth dynasty. To carry on his tremendous building program, this monarch not only raided the Sudan for slaves, but the semi-independent nations, like the Israelites, were reduced to abject servitude.

Notwithstanding the hardships to which they were subjected, the Israelites continued to increase in numbers until the Egyptian rulers were alarmed. Finally, they became so terrified at the increase in numbers, that they gave orders that every male child of the Hebrews should be destroyed at birth; and when this order was disobeyed they commanded that every boy baby of the Israelites should be thrown into the Nile. At this terrible moment our lesson opens.

"And there went a man of the house of Levi, and took to wife a daughter" of that same tribe, who conceived and bare a son. Thus simply is announced the birth of that greatest of Old Testament characters, Moses.

Now the mother, like all real mothers would, hid the baby, daring the wrath of Pharaoh himself, for three months. "And when she could no longer hide him" in her home, she built an ark, or crib, of bull-rushes, and having daubed it with pitch to keep out the water, placed the child therein, and placed it among the flags at the river bank.

The second part of the lesson tells of the finding of the babe by the daughter of Pharaoh. The princess went, as was possibly her custom, to bathe at the spot where the child had been laid. There she found the basket, and commanded that it be brought to her. "And she opened it, and saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept." The rest of the story naturally follows. Recognizing the child as one of the condemned Hebrews, her heart was touched, and she determined to save it at any cost.

Here we find Miriam, the sister of Moses, who had been placed to watch the ark, entering the picture and offering to find a nurse for the baby. Thus it was that Moses was reared by his own mother and adopted by the princess. Thus, when he had reached the proper age, he was given instruction in the learning of the Egyptians. Thus does God work in his own way to carry on his Kingdom. Out of death he brings forth life, out of the depths he raises his leaders that they may lead his people forth to the land of promise.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

THE RE-INTERPRETATION OF JESUS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT, by C. E. Purinton. Scribner's. 217 pp. $1.75.

Professor Purinton is thoroughly of the opinion that the source materials of the Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, and Paul's Epistles, together with the prior "Q" materials and the later Biblical writings, give us ample information for a reinterpretation of Jesus for our time. He first gives us the Biblical interpretations and then his own. Just as Jesus revealed God, so the New Testament reveals him, from different viewpoints, but all of them essentially true. And just so, each generation and each individual is privileged to arrive at a new and satisfying interpretation of Jesus. It is a well-written book, and will help many to clarify their thinking.

THE JUNIOR SUPERINTENDENT'S MANUAL, by Eva Callarman. Bethany. 212 pp. $1.00

This manual is designed to give practical aid to the Junior Superintendent who has decided to use "The Junior Graded Lesson Courses," prepared by seven denominations for their church schools. The instructions are plain and scientific from the information approach, and even the superintendent who is using the creative approach in her department will find this manual and these lessons valuable as source materials. The view point of the entire book is tersely expressed in this sentence on page 34: "There should be allowance for individual and original thinking but the teacher needs to direct the discussion all the time." Does religious education of Juniors not require initiation and responsible participation on the part of the growing persons in the group, and should there not at all times be free choice of outcomes for problems on their part?

LEADERSHIP THROUGH CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, by Bert H. Davis. The International Society of Christian Endeavor. 180 pp. $1.00.

Christian Endeavor needed a new manual and the writer is well-qualified to write it. The Society has learned a great deal in 50 years and has done a most valiant service for the Kingdom. The idea underlying the Church School is tacitly recognized, when it is suggested that each Sunday School class may become a Christian Endeavor Society. The basic idea underlying the experience centered curriculum is also recognized tacitly when the suggestion is made that any pro-

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

THE UNSELFISHNESS OF TRUE RELIGION.

"Then Satan answered the Lord, and said, doth Job fear God for naught?"—Job 1:9.

The Lord has reminded Satan that he cannot hurt Job, for he was a perfect and upright man. Satan replies by reminding God that Job's motives are not pure, that he is getting something material out of being a Christian. Besides, he reminded God that he had thrown a wall of protection about Job. Satan challenges the Lord that if he will remove these benefits, he will see how soon Job will desert his faith. He would tell the Lord that it is easy to be virtuous on a handsome income. The Devil does not believe that any one serves God gratis, that there is no unselfish piety. The world today challenges the Christian people in the same way.

But God saw a vindication of Job would vindicate human piety at its best for all generations to come. Besides, this was an attack on God. If Satan was right, there was no such thing as unselfish goodness and God is robbed of his highest attribute, and heaven and earth are no longer full of glory. So, to vindicate Job was to vindicate heaven and the justice of God; and Job was sacrificed that all succeeding generations might have hope. Job remained faithful. At the last he said, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." Was it worth it?

We learn from Job that "salvation is not putting man in heaven but putting heaven in man," as Babcock puts it. It is writing the law of God in the human heart. It is recreating a man so that he will make right choices which will make him conqueror over all evil. It makes character the essential reward of noble living. It gives power to resist impurity and be pure, resist the Devil and be heavenly.

Prayer—Our Father, we are thankful that thou hast given us to see that it is impossible for us to do our duty and to render Christian service, except it be rendered out of a heart that is full of faithfulness, that is brave and true. Number us among thy faithful ones.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

FINDING OUT GOD.

"Can'st thou by searching find out God? Can'st thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?"—Job 11:7.

The question arising here is not whether God can be known, but whether he can be knowing perfectly—wholly known. This question was intended to discourage Job. But it did not, for he knew that our knowledge of God must be a constant moving forward, by his grace increasing; that here "we" as Paul said, "know in part," but after this life, when the things which keep us back are gone from us, we shall know him perfectly. Job was ready to tell his enemies, and die in his conviction, that he was ready to continue steadfast unmoveable with undivided intensity until his infinite truth and goodness was manifested in the beyond.

But God does reveal himself. We see him in the heart, the conscience, in the experience of life; he comes in realities, rather than visibly. He comes in a way that we know his power and his grace as a source of our blessings. Scudder said:

"High above the limits of my seeing,
And folded far within the innermost heart,
And deep below the deeps of conscious being,
Thy splendour shineth: There, O God! thou art."

Prayer—O God, we cannot lose thee as we abide in thee, the end is clear. Thou who dost hold the world, guide us until we rest in thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

PATIENCE.

"Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him; fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way."—Psa. 37:7.

It takes a lot of patience, persistence, and perseverance to "endure as seeing him who is invisible." One must, like Paul, believe in the glory to come, "the mark of the prize of the high calling."

One must arrive at this belief before he can work against evil and on the side of enduring good. God has given us this problem to work out for the sake of our spiritual development that we may be like him—nearer like him now, and fully like him then, when we shall have the fuller life.

Thus, we go on working against evil, fighting doubts and difficulties, enduring sufferings, living our lives in a useful and noble fashion, realizing increasing strength, success and hope in enduring virtues, until he calls us unto himself.

"The birds sing for sunshine,
The trees for winter fruit,
And for love in the springtime
When the thickets shoot.

"And I sing for patience
When the tear-drops start;
Clean hands and clear eyes,
And a faithful heart."

—Benson.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, help us to see thee enough along the way of life, however confusing the way, that we may follow steadfastly all the way. Establish our hearts for the coming of the Lord. Amen.

THURSDAY.

TRUST AND MISTRUST.

"Though he slay me, yet will I trust him."—Job 13:15.

This statement of trust and mistrust is the final summing up of Job. It seems to be the verdict of a debate between the soul and God. It describes the struggle between doubts that beset him and the faith that sustained him against those doubts.

This struggle of Job's and his victory serve to show that there is a point of view from which it is seen that the difficulties of life are not fatal to faith, but are trials of it, from which a child of God may emerge purer and stronger than ever.

Our revised version of this text, says, "Behold, he will slay me; I will wait for him; I will maintain my ways (or, I will argue my cause) before him." This is the utterance of a soul not merely resigned to troubles, but conscious of its own integrity, prepares to take the worst, believing that it will be vindicated. It says, "Though I suffer, I trust him, for in the end he doeth all things well."

This assurance must have had its foundation in Job's God-consciousness. Jesus taught this God-consciousness of the soul, when he said,

"If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give to them who ask him." Jesus seems to say, "Find the best in yourself and take that for the reflection of God in you." He who finds the reflection of God in himself, cannot but believe and be assured of the ultimate in God, let come what will. With this assurance, Job could not judge God's dealings with him in any other way but good.

Let us look for the hand of God in ourselves, in all dispensations, however bitter or mysterious. Every good movement with us has its first impulse in heaven. It may be contaminated here, but its origin was divine. It is inspiring to note that as Job recognized this fact he came to truer thoughts of God and more spiritual knowledge of him. He realized that he has been fighting mere travesties and not God himself. He says, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eyes seeth thee."

Prayer—O Lord, God, draw us to thee: if thou art true, thou canst draw as though there be no heaven. We would love thee and be drawn to thee forever. Call thou us to self-renunciation, and enable us to lead the highest life. Amen.

FRIDAY.

TUNNELS.

"I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid."—Leviticus 26:1-13.

Once more the Government of Great Britain has rejected a plan which has been urged upon it for decades, the plan of building a tunnel between that country and France. Such a tunnel would be one of the greatest conveniences in the world.

Of course the Government brings forward a variety of objections, but there is only one reason for turning down the project, and that is fear. An army from France might thus be brought easily to the shore of England, and ceaseless vigilance would be required to prevent it.

But this only one gain from which we are shut off by war and the fear of war, and the threat of attacks injures our personal as well as our national lives. How much more we could do if we did not suspect anyone! What associations we might form, in what joyful enterprises engage, what hindering walls we might throw down, what vast comforts we might obtain, if all the world were one loving, trusting brotherhood! And it is coming some time.

Prayer—Yes, Lord Jesus, our great Elder Brother, it is coming some time. As men draw closer to thee, they will draw closer to one another. Forgive our low suspicions, remove our mean jealousies. Give us an insight into men's hearts. Make us like thyself. Amen.

PETER VS. PAUL.

"When Cephas came to Antioch, I resisted him to the face, because he stood condemned."—Gal. 2:11-21.

Paul was right and Peter was wrong in that matter of eating with the Gentiles. No doubt each had his reasons. We rejoice that each stood up for what he thought was best for the church, but we can not help feeling that two such heroes of the cross might have got together.

The other day, in Michigan, there was a daring bank robbery, and about a thousand farmers set out in pursuit of the criminals. Two parties of these pursuers encountered each other out in GARDENS.

"My beloved has gone into the garden . . . to gather lilies."—S. of S. 6:2.

Let us have in mind some of the significant verses of Scripture concerning gardens. "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden. And out of the garden made the Lord to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food. The tree of life also is in the midst of the garden, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. And a river went out of Eden to water the garden." What words concerning the garden. It is "God-planted," "Eden-watered," and grows every plant pleasant for the sight, or good for food; also the tree of life is in the midst of the garden. A South American who lives in our city has just shown my wife and me through his beautiful gardens. Roses of every hue and color, just seemed to sing their silent songs of beauty and fragrance to their Creator.

"And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day." And as our Peruvian friend talked of his wonderful roses we could but hear God's voice calling to beautiful living and seeing, and indeed there seemed to walk with us One who challenged us to our noblest and best. "Awake, O north wind; and come thou south; blow upon my garden, that the perfumes thereof may flow forth; let my beloved come into his garden among his pleasant fruits." As one walks in a beautiful garden the foregoing verse could easily be one's prayer, and one could surely think of "my beloved" as Jesus, our Saviour.

But let us turn to the stories of Jesus and see what we find: "When Jesus had spoken these words, he went forth with his disciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden into the which he entered, and his disciples. . . Jesus oftentimes resorted thither with his disciples." As we read those words our hearts become heavy, but if we are heroic in our souls we may be able to make the question of the high priest's servant our own prayer: "One of the servants of the high priest saith, Did I not see thee in the garden with him?"

I. God Loves the Garden.

The sacred history of the human race begins with a garden; it ends with a city of golden streets, with eternal parks of undying trees, never fading flowers, and forever flowing streams. God loves the garden, or why did he plant so many, and such beautiful ones? He did not stop with the one in Eden. With it he only began, as anyone who loves and appreciates nature can learn within the hour. God has literally covered the earth with gardens and water with which to water them. In the frigid north and the far south, flowers bloom and vegetation is eternal. Whoever plants a garden, and makes it beautiful works with God.

God planted his best gardens in human hearts. Learn to do likewise.

II. There is Sorrow in the Garden.

There is sorrow in the first garden. There was temptation, and failure and broken hopes, and disappointments. But such things came when God was left out, when he was forgotten, and his will cast aside. And yet even sorrow will find us while we walk in the garden with God. Jesus found it so in the Garden of Gethsemane, and there in that garden Jesus fought out the world's greatest moral battle.

To appreciate the beautiful, and to live a beautiful life, does not mean that one will be exempt from sorrow, yea, and hard battles; but it does mean that one will be able to have profound help in the time of need.

"If I could put my words in song,
And tell what's there enjoyed,
All men would to my garden throng,
And leave my cities void.

"My garden is a forest ledge,
Which older forests bound;
The banks slope to the blue lake edge,
And plunge to depths profound."

Yes, there is something about the garden much akin to worship in a great, or an humble, house of God, a strength comes upon one and makes one able to "learn to endure hardness as a good soldier."

III. There is Victory in the Garden.

Angels ministered to Jesus in his garden of sorrow and grief. There is victory in any garden if one learns the art of communion with the divine Gardener! The first disappointed gardeners found their solace in toil. For their disobedience they were driven out of the first garden, but they learn to keep other gardens, and by the twin blessings of work and responsibility, they found their way back to God.

Jesus found a different use for the garden. For him it became a place of prayer. "With his disciples he often resorted thither." It was a favorite place to meet his Father in prayer. True Christians will learn to come to the garden for comfort and strength of communion with Christ. It will be a beautiful garden of prayer:

"There's a garden where Jesus is waiting,
There's a place that is wondrously fair;
For it glows with the light of his presence,
'Tis the beautiful garden of prayer.

"There's a garden where Jesus is waiting,
And I go with my burden and care,
Just to learn from his lips words of comfort,
In the beautiful garden of prayer.

"There's a garden where Jesus is waiting,
And he bids you to come meet him there;
Just to bow and receive a blessing,
In the beautiful garden of prayer.

"O, the beautiful garden, the garden of prayer;
O, the beautiful garden of prayer;
There my Saviour awaits, and he opens the gates
To the beautiful garden of prayer."

CRITICS OF AMERICAN EDUCATION.

That not all is well in the realm of American education is the contention of some very thoughtful observers. The colleges and universities, according to these critics, are not really imparting education; they are merely extending the training of the high schools. Some of the most highly endowed universities are actually accepting for credits on degrees such courses as "poultry raising, elementary stenography, wrestling and self-defense, cookery, clothing decoration, family meals, principles of home laundering, clog dancing, and social life of the home." Real education, it is claimed, ceased about forty years ago. If this view be true, it explains the remark of an accomplished Italian nobleman who said he had met in America some educated men but they were all about sixty years old.

The small colleges are still insisting on real education. This is emphatically true of those schools under the control of religious denominations. Probably the best-educated class in our country today is coming out of the Church colleges. These schools have not yielded so largely as others to the demands of elective courses. They still believe in the classics and in broad culture. Fortunately, the liberal arts colleges are not altogether eliminated.

The recognition of mistakes and inadequacy in the university courses is growing and this fact points to improvement. The theorists and utilitarians will be forced to yield to the better judgment of the advocates of genuine culture.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

1536 East Broad Street, - - Richmond, Virginia

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The two matrons in the Johnston Hall gave the boys and girls a real surprise at their own expense one evening last week. No evening meal was prepared. The children wondered why. Two boys were let in on the surprise and had gone on ahead to prepare the fire and have the live coals ready. The children were invited to take a stroll over in the pasture where the ground was covered with green grass and the ground was clean and a nice place for the children to play games. When they reached the designated place and saw the bed of live coals and boxes filled with weenies and sharpened sticks they realized that a surprise weenie roast was in store for them.

What is it that a hungry little fellow will enjoy more than a nice roasted weenie in a nice hot roll, with the onions and the pepper-sauce that goes with them to make them fit for a queen's taste? They enjoyed the surprise and after all hunger had been satisfied they played games and sang songs until the whippoorwills began to sing. And as the evening shadows began to fall thick and fast they gave three cheers for the matrons who were so kind as to go into their own pockets in order to give the children this real outing. They then wended their way back to their building with hearts full of joy.

We have collected 56,400 Octagon soap wrappers. We want 75,000 by July 1st.

THE CONFERENCE OF THE CAROLINAS.

the Carolinas and by the one Congregational Conference, made its report. Dr. W. C. Wicker was the chairman and called on the secretary to read the report of his committee. After a suitable preamble, which linked this report with the action taken at Burlington last year the following recommendations were submitted to the Conference for immediate action. They were all unanimously adopted:

1. We suggest to the Conference of Congregational Churches of the Carolinas that at this time such steps as may be necessary be taken legally to change the name of that body from "The Conference of the Congregational Churches of the Carolinas," to "The Association of Congregational and Christian Churches of the Carolinas."

2. We further recommend to the Congregational body that it, as soon as may be, make formal application to the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, when such body has become effective according to the plans adopted at Burlington. This will put the Congregational wing of our churches of the Carolinas on an equal footing with the three present Christian Conferences of the Carolinas in their relationship to the Southern Convention.

3. We further recommend that the Congregational body by all means hold to its present form of organization under its charter, thus conserving all legal and technical requirements of the law.

4. Inasmuch as these matters will take time to develop, we recommend to this joint body meeting here today, that we proceed with the organization of a provisional Congregational and Christian Conference of the Carolinas by electing officers, namely, a president, a vice-president, and secretary.

5. We recommend that these officers, together with the presidents of the Women's State Organizations, the present superintendent of the Congregational Conference of the Carolinas and the presidents of the three Christian Conferences of the Carolinas, and the Moderator and superintendent of the Conference (or Association) of the Congregational Churches of the Carolinas, shall constitute a committee with the following duties:

(a) In harmony with the Executive Committee of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches to work out a constitution and by-laws for our proposed Conference and present the same at a proposed meeting in the spring of 1933.

(b) This committee shall have in charge the preparation of a program and shall determine the time and place of said proposed meeting in the spring of 1933.

The purpose of this Conference shall be to extend among the churches a closer brotherly acquaintance and fellowship, to promote unity of spirit and practice.

These recommendations and suggestions were unanimously adopted. Rev. C. H. Rowland was elected president, Rev. J. Edward Kirby, vice-president, and Rev. Ruth Sargeant, secretary, of this proposed new Conference.

Of the Congregational Conference proper, Rev. W. T. Scott, recently of Salisbury, now of Winston-Salem, and pastor of Trinity Parish, was elected Moderator and Rev. Ruth Sargeant, scribe.

It was manifestly a most gracious and hospitable church which entertained the Conference. Everybody was happy throughout.

Human character does evermore publish itself. It will not be concealed. If you act, you show character; if you sit still, you show it; if you do, you show it.—Emerson.

gram whether made in Boston or in the local situation should be side-tracked to admit a subject that has become paramount in the group thinking. But there is too much handed-down programing and too much organization consciousness to square fully with the highest conceptions of the new approach to character building. One is glad to note the progressive ideals and to commend this manual to those who love a movement that has literally made the modern youth movement possible.

INTERCHURCH COMMUNITY PROGRAMS, by Chas. R. Zahniser. Thomas Nelson & Sons. 286 pp. $2.00.

Dr. Zahniser, in his preface, says: "There is little hope for effective measures of interchurch cooperation until pastors generally believe in it and know how to get it." So this book is written for seminaries and other training centers for the future ministry of our churches.

The author's wide experience as interchurch executive in Pittsburgh, and now as professor of Applied Christianity in Boston University, and Extension Lecturer of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America in Seminaries and Universities, qualifies him well to write this book. His knowledge is intimate and his insight penetrating. His understanding of the methodology involved is evident in every chapter. It is a source-book, in which the idealist keeps his feet on the ground through a practical realism.

It is encouraging to have him sound in conclusion this note of genuine optimism: "When Christian people are confronted with worth-while tasks left undone, or being very poorly done because they are not being done together, when they are shown how these desirable ends can be attained by the churches getting together on the job, their practical common sense and their sanctified grace will respond to the challenge to get together, and will do it. It is the constantly growing vision of such opportunities that is making interchurch cooperation inevitable."

FAMILY ALTAR.

the country, each party thinking the other party to be the robbers. Before mutual recognition took place there was much shooting, and one man was seriously wounded.

Thus it often happens that two good men quarrel, blazing away at each other, perhaps all their lives, just because they do not get together, look each other in the face and catch the real spirit of each other.

Prayer—Let no such calamity come into our life, dear Saviour. While we stand up stoutly for the truth, may we believe the best of all men. Amen.

JOBS FOR ALL.

"God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, then miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, divers kinds of tongues."—I. Cor. 12:12-31.

In the census that has just been taken the town of Wenham, Mass., obtained a conspicuous honor. Of the 1,119 inhabitants of Wenham only one, of those that can work and desire employment, is out of a job. In these days of much unemployment, this is a noble record.

Of course, it ought to be true of every town. Of course, when our civilization is a real one and not a sham, everyone who really wants to work will be given a job. Work in those days will be like the air, open to all, placed freely within the reach of all.

But in the Christian church this condition already exists. From Paul's list of church occupations quoted above, we see that the ideal was reached at the beginning of the church, and it has always been maintained. There is no problem of non-employment in the kingdom of God, whatever may be true of the kingdom of men.

"Go work today in my vineyard," is said by the Master to every believer. There are always chances of helping, of comforting, of ministering, of promoting the gospel. And the pay is always large.

Prayer—Forgive us, our Saviour, that we avail ourselves of so few of these many opportunities to labor for thee and with thee, and receive us thy assistants, workers that do not need to be ashamed. Amen.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

OBITUARIES.

YARBROUGH.

Mrs. Lu E. Yarbrough, daughter of the late James M. and Caroline McAden, was born April 29, 1866, and died June 5, 1932, age 66 years, one month, seven days.

She was married to Deacon John H. Yarbrough December 20, 1885, and to them was born one child, Mrs. Mabel Wells, of Edgerton, Va.

Sister Yarbrough united with the church when twelve years of age and for forty years has been leader of song in Lebanon Christian Church, and other church activities. Her health had been poor for several years. She bore her sufferings with patience and resignation.

On the fifth Sunday morning she was not able to meet her Sunday School class, of which for a long time she had been teacher. She sent her contribution and when her husband returned she inquired about the school. After dinner she lay down on her couch in the living room. Her husband, who was sitting a few feet away, heard a slight struggle and her spirit had taken its flight.

Besides husband and daughter she is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Betty Well, of Williamson, W. Va., and Mrs. Kate McCain, of Newport News, Va.

Sister Yarbrough was a true homemaker, faithful in all her duties, loved her church, kept informed in all its enterprises, and liberally supported them. She will be greatly missed in Lebanon Church, but her faithfulness will be an impetus to others.

The funeral and burial were conducted by the writer at the McAden Cemetery at 10:00 A. M., June 7, 1932.

HARRELL.

John Harrell, of Suffolk, Va., R. F. D., son of the late W. H. Harrell, of Holland community, died June 5, 1932, after a long and severe illness, aged 54 years. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Holy Neck Church in Nansemond County, Va., and the remains were interred in the church cemetery.

The deceased leaves a widow, Mrs. Allie Doughtie Harrell, two sons, Willard and Clarence, Suffolk, R. F. D., and four daughters Mrs. Russell Matthews, Col-raine, N. C., and Catherine, Nellie and Sarah Winnie, of Suffolk R. F. D., one half-brother, Jobie T. Harrell, of Holland, one sister, Mrs. Charlie E. Holland, R. 1, Holland, Va., and one half-sister, Mrs. W. H. Howell, R. 1, Holland, Va. Mr. Harrell had been a member of the Holy Neck Church for many years, and in his last illness expressed himself as trusting in his Saviour and resigned to the Father's will.

Done At Last.—

Theoretically "the budget is balanced." On June 21st, a long list of new taxes went into effect, bringing up a longer list of problems—"how to collect them, where to charge them, and often, alas, how to evade them."

Disciples Celebrate Centennial in Virginia.—

The fifty-seventh annual session of the convention of the Disciples of Christ of Virginia, was also the centennial of the beginning of work by that communion in the State. The first State organization was formed in 1833. Since that time the Disciples have spread over the entire State, until they now have churches in practically every important center of population.

Historic Virginia Flag to be Enclosed.—

The historic old flag of Virginia which was removed from its place above the State capitol by a United States army officer on April 3, 1865, was displayed in the old hall of the House of Delegates during the recent Confederate reunion. It is to be enclosed in a glass case and placed in the State Museum, where it may be seen by visitors. After its removal from the capitol when Richmond was evacuated in 1865, it was carried to New England and remained in the possession of Major A. H. Stevens' family until the fall of 1927, when it was returned to the State of Virginia by descendants of that famous cavalry officer.

Rubber That Isn't Rubber.—

The uses of rubber have increased greatly in number since the days when its main business was the erasure of pencil marks. Yet there are many other uses to which it could be placed were it not for the fact that it deteriorates very rapidly upon coming in contact with oil or gasoline. One of these uses would be for a flexible tubing for motor gas lines, and of course, its use there is out of the question. A new synthetic compound called "Thiokol" has solved the problem. It is made from two domestic compounds, ethylene dichloride and sodium polysulphide, and it can be processed in the same manner as rubber, or can even be combined with it. "Thiokol" is an opaque, pale yellow material, firm but pliable, and does not melt when heated, but becomes plastic. Price will probably prevent it becoming an active competitor of rubber, but the availability of its ingredients would make us independent of foreign rubber sources in time of war.

Statue of Christ to be Erected in Dublin.—

The Christian-Evangelist reports that in Dublin, Ireland, there is to be erected a granite statue of Christ the King, 125 feet high and at a cost of approximately $125,000.00, on a spot overlooking Kingstown Harbor. It says: "The sculptor is Andrew O'Connor, an Irish-American.

A concrete replica in miniature of the finished work has already been erected on the selected site, so that visitors can see what the statue will be like. It is believed that with the arrival of many Irish Roman Catholics from various parts of the world for the Eucharistic Congress in Dublin, the required sum will quickly be raised. About £2,000 is in hand. The statue is expected to be completed in about two years. What would the world not give for a genuine picture of Christ? And yet, it might not prove a blessing, for it would be possible to worship the image and forget the Christ himself. But it is a good thing to put up reminders of him everywhere. Make the very stones cry out in his praise."

Christianizing Hawaiian Japanese.—

There are now in the Hawaiian Islands thirty Japanese Christian Churches, with more than 3,000 members and thirty-two ordained pastors. Originally the Japanese language was used in the services and Japanese customs observed, but gradually the English language is being used and customs are being modified to meet the needs of the Hawaiian-born youth of Japanese parents. It is quite likely that the trend in this direction will be yet more decided on account of the considerable number of children in the Sunday Schools. The Christianizing has had its periods of prosperity and depression since the arrival of the first Japanese contract laborers in Hawaii in 1885. When the Hongwanji Buddhist mission was established in the islands in 1898 many Japanese were drawn from the Christian church. However, in recent years, especially among the children, the trend has been to the church. As they adopt the ideas of American citizenship, they also adopt the religion of America.—P. B. Hall.

A Conspiracy of the Rich Against the Poor.—

We do not belong to the people who foment strife between rich and poor. We think they ought to be friends—the Lord is maker of them all—they are brothers. But notwithstanding this it is impossible in view of developments within the last few days not to see that certain rich men have entered into conspiracy to bind heavy burdens upon the backs of the poor. Several New York multimillionaires have recently come out for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, and for a tax on beer to help pay the public bills. All this has been done with such timed occurrence, and they have all spoken words so much alike that it must be a group agreement, and not individual opinion. We cannot think of anything more debased and debasing than allowing beer to be made, and then putting a tax on it for the sake of public funds. A nation should try to elevate every citizen, his home and his calling. To open the breweries again, and the barrooms, and the distilleries is to go into the business of debauching men and women.—Exchange.

Unemployment Figures Continue to Increase.—

According to recent estimates of the American Federation of Labor, there are now more than 10,000,000 people out of employment in the United States. This is nearly two million more than last year. This unemployment situation is causing a great slump in the buying power of the public, and this in turn seems to be a cause for decreased production and consequently a still further curtailment of payrolls. These payrolls of the nation have fallen off around 15 per cent within the last three months. Life insurance borrowings and reduction in savings accounts are also noted. A restoration of confidence in national and individual credit must come, or an increased medium of exchange must be provided if we are to break through the conditions now binding us. The bimetal standard was in use generally until the last century, and it may be forced upon us again. William Jennings Bryan had many theories which he was unable to put into practice, many of which have been used by more practical men to advantage. We wonder if that silver-tongued orator were so far wrong when he delivered his philippic on "The Cross of Gold."

France Takes Her Gold Home.—

Within the past two and a half months, France has withdrawn from this country more than a half-billion dollars' worth of gold, bringing the total amount of all withdrawals of gold by foreign countries during the past eight months to a billion and a half. New York balances of European nations, once amounting to as much as $2,000,000,000, are today less than a half billion—which is considerably less than that required by them to carry on routine business in normal times, or for that matter, under present conditions. It was a withdrawal of a similar amount from England that caused the abandonment of the gold standard by that country, but the banking system of the United States seems to have stood the strain successfully. Lack of confidence was, of course, the reason for the withdrawals, but theoretically the effect should have been helpful. The actual need of keeping reserves on hand to withstand such a drain has passed, and while the Federal Reserve's reserve has been reduced from around 80 per cent to 58 per cent, it is still 18 per cent above legal requirements. The fact that this large amount has been withdrawn and that the banking system of our government is still in such a good position augurs well for the future. What is needed by this country is confidence on the part of those who are able to spend. Hoarding is the one thing against which we would not be able to protect our reserves. Money constructively spent at this time, not wasted, will do a vast amount toward hastening the return of prosperity. France has undoubtedly done us a kindness.

Beginning July 1st, all subscriptions and renewals should be sent directly to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va. Look at your label now.

Let us not forget that life is brief; that time hurries; and that what we do to make our memories of earth beautiful in heaven, and heaven itself more populous forever, must be done at once.—The Presbyterian Record.

The Western North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention meets at the Christian Church, Biscoe, N. C., 10:00 A. M., July 5th. It is a one-day program, and the president, Bro. Geo. T. Gunter, is exceedingly anxious that all pastors, schools and Endeavor Societies in the Conference be present for the day.

Rev. and Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., were welcome visitors at Elon the past week attending the Summer School of Leadership Training and greeting their many friends on the "hill." Bro. Hardcastle seems fully recovered from his last summer's illness and feels that the week and the fine atmosphere at Elon at this time were a real tonic.

One of our good hard-working Christian friends who earns her daily bread through toil and who enjoys sharing with others the gospel of her Lord, says: "I enclose $20.00 for Missions. I am sorry to learn that some of the missionaries are likely to be called home. Would be so glad for conditions to improve." If the church had enough rare souls like this one, the sorrows, not to say tragedies, of the Mission field would soon be lifted.

Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor, Palm Street, Greensboro, was a happy visitor at THE SUN office on Saturday and reported: "I have just closed a meeting in my home town (Swepsonville) in the Baptist Church. Eighty-six were saved and re-consecrated their lives to the Lord. A fine spirit existed between the two churches, and a large majority of our confessions have been young men and women, and this I think quite hopeful and significant. The meetings were largely attended and the community entered in and cooperated heartily."

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor, Suffolk Church, reports that he placed one hundred coin cards among the members of his Sunday School and church, sixty of which have been returned filled with ten dimes each, and he is hoping for and expecting others. Hopewell Sunday School had placed twenty-five, sixteen of which have been filled and returned. What is the record of your school? Here, indeed, is a way to help a vital work of the church and hurt no other cause, viz.: put a dime a week in one of the ten pockets of the coin card, and at the end of ten weeks have your card join the other cards on their errand of salvation to the unsaved.

The Summer School of Leadership Training closed its session with a sermon by the Dean of the school, Rev. F. C. Lester, Sunday morning, June 26th. It seemed good to have this group of fifty young people, religious students, Christian workers and leaders, on the campus and about Elon. Bro. Lester and others will furnish THE SUN a detailed and full report of the school, but even his fertile pen will not be able to tell the value and merit and far-reaching results of the work done and the lives influenced for good during the week of real consecrated effort in Christian Education. The only regret about such a school is that every church, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society in the whole Convention is not represented by one or more young people who desire and deserve just such teaching and training as are given in these sessions.

The Norfolk Ledger Dispatch of June 20th, presenting the picture of Miss Rebecca Smith, says: "Attractive and talented daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Leon Edgar Smith, whose essay on 'Washington, the Virginian,' won the 1932 medal awarded annually by Hope-Maury Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy for the best essay on some historical subject written by a high school pupil. Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke, president of the chapter, presented the medal at the graduation exercises of the school last week." Our heartiest congratulations to Miss Rebecca and to President L. E. Smith of Elon College, and Mrs. Smith. When the editor personally extended congratulations to Dr. Smith, he promptly denied having any part of the honors and declared that to the young lady's mother, whose talents and good graces the daughter inherited, belonged all the honors of the event. Whereupon we duly made acknowledgment.

The campus of Elon is joyous and active this summer. Three weeks ago the regular summer school at the college began its session for six weeks, bringing some fifty or more students to the classrooms. One week ago the Summer School of Leadership Training of the Christian and Congregational Churches began its seven-day session, bringing some fifty or more young people and leaders in church with teachers in Christian Education to the college. That school closed Sunday, June 26th, and Monday, June 27th, the young people of the Presbyterian Church of the surrounding country with their teachers and instructors, were rolling in for their summer school of religious training. It is a joy, indeed, to have these gatherings, for ours is a beautiful plant, a restful and helpful retreat for the summer, and the cool, spacious buildings are conducive to worship and to service. We welcome most heartily our Presbyterian friends and neighbors to the campus and buildings at Elon.

The Greensboro Daily News, June 27th, carries the announcement that Rev. Ronald Tamblyn resigned as pastor of Grace Methodist Protestant Church, Greensboro, N. C., resignation to become effective September 1st. The News further says: "At this time Mr. Tamblyn is not ready to announce definite plans for the future. It is known, however, that he is terminating his connection with the Methodist Protestant denomination as well as his relationship to Grace Church, and that he expects to enter the ministry of the Congregational Church. He is considering several positions and expects to reach a definite decision in the fairly early future. Mr. and Mrs. Tamblyn have many friends in Greensboro." Rev. Mr. Tamblyn has been pastor of this church for five years and has seemingly been quite successful in his ministry there. Grace Methodist Church is one of the most attractive, physical plants of the city representing an investment of approximately $150,000.00. Before coming to Greensboro, Rev. Mr. Tamblyn was pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church, Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE SUN's editor was called to attend the funeral of Miss Sadie Boyd at Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax County, Va., Saturday, June 25th. Miss Sadie was the only sister of Mrs. Luther E. Carlton, with whom she made her home in recent years at Carlbroom, Paces, Va. Mrs. Carlton was attending the Sunday School Convention at Union Ridge, N. C., when she received the sad news that her sister had died suddenly Thursday evening, June 23rd, being to the moment of her death, seemingly, in good health, and full of strength and vigor. The physician in attendance, soon after the event, pronounced that heart failure had brought almost instantaneous death. A great concourse of people met at the Carlton home Saturday morning, and after a song service and prayer at the home, the body was carried to Pleasant Grove Church, where brief and appropriate funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, Ingram, Va., assisted by Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., and Dr. Wilson, pastor of the local Presbyterian Church, and J. O. Atkinson. The audience attending filled the large auditorium of the church, and scores of friends brought exquisite and appropriate designs, wreaths and banks of flowers, to express their respect and love for the beautiful life that had entered into its reward and rest. All who knew her, and that was a great host, realized that here, indeed, was a choice soul, and that the work of grace and God had its flower and fruitage in the life of Sadie Boyd. Hers was the work of patience, kindness, the ministration of love, care and abiding solicitude for the welfare of the home in which she lived, of the community of which she was a part, the Sunday School and the church to which her life had been, through many years, fully consecrated. As one regards such a life, one is reminded of Isaiah's inspired words: "The works of righteousness are peace; the results of righteousness are quietness and confidence." Peace, quietness, confidence—that peace that the world cannot give, that quietness that the world cannot take away, that calm confidence born of God and which alone is the gift of God. Truly, a beautiful life has entered into larger, fuller, more abundant rewards and activities. The two brothers and the sister, and the loved ones, of her heart and home have, indeed, a rich legacy transmitted to them, a legacy richer than gold, a legacy of a beautiful, a beautiful, and a triumphant life.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS

REV. E. C. GILLETTE, Editor; REV. F. P. ENSMINGER, and REV. M. J. SWEET, Associates.

REV. ORVILLE D. ULLOM began services with the church at Melbourne, Fla., last August and during the period since he has taken seventeen new members into the church. Five of these were young people received at Easter time. The apportionment for this church is almost raised for this year.

REV. THOMAS H. DERRICK, Deland, Fla., formerly pastor at Orange City, was re-elected Department Chaplain for the Spanish War Veterans of Florida. While delivering an address at their recent encampment at Hollywood, Mr. Derrick collapsed and had to be taken to his room. He has gone back to the Veterans Hospital at Lake City for treatment. His friends all wish him a speedy recovery. He will probably be there for a month or six weeks and letters from his friends will certainly be cheering to him.

ROLLINS COLLEGE, Winter Park, Fla., graduated the largest class in its history at its recent commencement exercises. Seventy-five students received degrees. Among the honors conferred was a prize of twenty-five dollars which was offered by the Chi Omega Fraternity "to the Junior girl whose scholarship and conduct during the previous three years of her course had been the most meritorious." This was awarded to Miss Jean W. Fullington, of New Port Richey, who is to be Miss Coghill's companion in the S. S. S. work in Kentucky this summer.

REV. ABRAM SPARKS is this month investigating the work of several churches in and about Raleigh, N. C. Dr. J. Edward Kirby has visioned the larger college parish possibilities and there is hope that increased efficiency may result from this bit of important survey work. Something of the same kind of work is being initiated near Bellevue's Creek and Salem Chapel. Mr. Sparks visited this fertile region Sunday, June 19th. Results are not yet tabulated, but there is promise of an enlarged Sunday School and church movement there in connection with the Larger Trinity Parish, of which Rev. W. T. Scott is pastor.

THE CAROLINAS AND GEORGIA group of S. S. S. men are growing ambitious for Blue Ridge. With "Eddie" DuBois, Arthur Swartz, Ray Chapman, Gregory Williams, David W. Shepherd, assisted by such pastors as George Penn, "Billy" Scott, Cleveland Dierlamm, et al., they expect to challenge any or all other S. S. S. groups for almost any kind of athletic enjoyment: baseball, tennis, horseshoes, golf, swimming, etc. And the S. S. S. girls of these Conferences are taking no back seat because of these fine young men. They include such lady athletes as Annie Campbell, Dora Overstreet, Priscilla Chase, Dorothy Grigsby, Ruth Lott, Mildred Rister, Barbara Chase, and others. It is noised about that for individual, single-handed contests in horseshoe pitching, under the regular National rules, these young ladies are putting forth their champion as challenger to any lady on the grounds. But, anyway, so long as they can boost Blue Ridge they are content, win or lose. But besides the work, they want the world to know that everybody has a good time at Blue Ridge.

REV. W. C. CARPENTER plans his work weeks ahead. That's what helps any minister to be successful. Mr. Carpenter has worked out his schedule for revival meetings as follows: Enigma Church, the first week in July; New Light Church, Doe Run, second week in July; J. F. Hadden and Tommy Richter will assist in this meeting. Vanceville, the third week in July. This church has asked Mr. Carpenter to do his own preaching. Noble idea. In general, in such meetings as these the pastor can unite the people in a systematic campaign of evangelism to extend over a period, not of a few days, but for weeks, even months. Some of the best revivals any church ever has are those which are well organized by the pastor and officers to be continued from January to Easter, or from September to Christmas. Not every night, of course, but persistently in personal work every week, and, for the pastor, at least, every day. One week is good. Three months is much better, if properly organized. The fourth week Mr. Carpenter will have Rev. L. L. Stanley, of Barnesville, to assist him. This meeting will be held in September.

CAMP IMOKALEE.

The Seventh Florida Young People's Conference was held at Camp Immokalee for ten days, ending June 17th. The attendance was large, 108 enjoying the fellowship and inspiration of the Conference, including teachers, counselors, etc. These young people traveled many miles for this privilege. It was interesting to note that the total round-trip mileage for those attending was over 47,000 miles, nearly twice the distance around the world. The average round-trip mileage for each student attending was 462 miles. The longest trip was made by a delegation of five from Key West, a one-way distance of 575 miles. This delegation was enthusiastic and considered the Conference worth the long journey. The largest delegation was from St. Petersburg, being 16 in number from that church. The second largest was from Miami Beach, a delegation of 10. Three attended from the Community Church at Babson Park. It is a pleasure to serve an undenominational church in this fashion.

Rev. Frank Atkinson, of West Palm Beach, was Dean of the Conference, and also in an emergency taught the course in Young People's problems, which proved to be a very popular course. In fact all the courses were enjoyed by the students. The other teachers were Dr. Clarence A. Vincent of Winter Park; Mrs. Edward Parsons representing the American Board; Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke, of St. Petersburg; Miss Dorothy French, of Chattanooga; and Miss Martha Race, of Jacksonville. Rev. Gordon Brokenshire and Rev. Orville D. Ulloa conducted the Vesper services and Dr. Edwin C. Gillette conducted the Communion service. The sermon was preached by Rev. Frank Atkinson. Mrs. C. A. Vincent was House Mother. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill was a very busy young lady as Registrar, looking out for all the details and answering all the numerous questions.

Rev. Frederick Held had charge of a vigorous and interesting athletic and recreation program.

During the forenoon the Conference was busy with classes and study, and in the afternoon there were opportunities for exercise and for group conferences, etc. The evenings were taken up around the camp-fire and with interesting nature lectures, as well as beautiful vesper services by the lake-side. The closing night is always impressive and with the Council Ring testimony meeting when many fine things are said by the young people with regard to the meaning of the Conference to them. Some of these testimonies were most gripping in their disclosure of what some of the young people had been passing through in the way of personal problems and readjustments and the help that had come to them through the classes, the companionships and specially through personal intimate talks with members of the faculty and others. This annual conference for the young people in Florida is the outstanding service we are rendering our young people. Mr. Charles A. Hoyt, Chairman of the State Conference Committee for Young People's Work, and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill are responsible more than any others for the success of Camp Immokalee.

WEST FLORIDA CHRISTIAN LIFE CONFERENCE.

The young people of our West Florida churches met for their Fifth Annual Week-End Conference, June 10th to 12th. Pyron's Chapel, Baker, was host to the biggest delegation we have had. Seven churches were represented: Bonifay, Central, Crestview, Dorcas, Good Hope, Holly and Pyron's Chapel. The delegates from away numbered about sixty-five. The Conference opened Friday night with a get-together meeting, a festive occasion in spite of bad weather which kept away the larger delegations. They arrived in force Saturday morning and remained through the Sunday afternoon meeting. Each group showed the finest kind of spirit and contributed generously to the program.

The theme of the Conference was "Christian Citizenship," and the leaders, Rev. W. H. Tillman, Dr. F. P. Ensminger, Rev. G. Staley Hunt, and Rev. A. C. Commander, brought out many of the phases of that important subject.

A debate of "Prohibition" between Dorcas and Good Hope delegations created a great deal of interest and gave some information on this troublesome question. Three delegations gave plays, all conducted worship and song services, and several gave interesting and amusing stunts. Everyone seemed ready to do anything in his power for the pleasure and benefit of the group.

The business of the Conference was well conducted by Hattie Martin, chairman, and by Miss Nettie Rhodes, secretary. These offices will be held next year by Miss Lillian Cannon, of Pyron's Chapel, and Mrs. Pearl Powell, of Dorcas. Good Hope invited the Conference to meet there next year, and promised as hearty a welcome as Pyron's Chapel had given in 1932.

The award for the delegation showing the finest spirit during the Conference was awarded to Dorcas. Each year we see a remarkable improvement in the participation of the young people in program planning and conducting and in the entertainment of guests. Leadership is building up step by step in West Florida, and the future looks bright when we see the Christian Life Conference delegates united in this fellowship.

HOW LUTHER READ HIS BIBLE.

Luther said he studied his Bible as he gathered apples. First, he shook the whole tree, that the ripest fruit might fall; then he climbed the tree and shook each limb; and when he had shaken each limb he shook each branch, and after each branch, every twig; and then he looked under each leaf.

Search the Bible as a whole, shaking the whole tree. Read it as rapidly as you would any other book, then shake every limb, study book after book. Then shake every branch, giving attention to the chapters when they do not break the sense. Then shake each twig by a careful study of the paragraphs and sentences. And you will be rewarded if you will look under every leaf, by searching the meanings of the words.—Selected.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference met with Union Church, at Union Ridge, N. C., June 23rd and 24th. Mr. W. B. Truitt, of Greensboro, has been president of this convention for several years, and the convention wisely keeps him bound to the task. This writer might as well say here again, as he has said one hundred and one other times elsewhere and at other places, that when the proper arrives in this world, the perplexing problems of church, Sunday School and state are solved. It has been so all through the annals of time, and will doubtless continue to the end. We worry, fret, take counsel, discuss, resolve and adopt, and wonder what in the world we are to do with a condition as an enterprise of the church. Then the proper person arrives, and the problems and difficulties dissolve like a threatening cloud before a rising and penetrating sun.

We didn't know what to do about a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention in this Conference. We could not get one going. The schools would not send delegates. Endeavor Societies would not endeavor. Pastors were listless, indifferent and would not attend. We were about to resolve that it was not worth while anyhow—and then came Truitt. Since he arrived, a real convention began to take form and to come out of an aching void, and get into wholesome and happy shape. Literally, "the dry bones of the desolate valley took life and began to live." That is not an exaggeration nor a figure. It is just a plain, bare statement of fact. And so, from an indifferent, unconcerned, listless shame-faced score or more assembling once a year to "bless out" the folks who were not there and the Sunday Schools who would not send delegates, has grown, under Truitt's leadership, a convention that everybody wants to attend, and actually in the busiest season of the year, with all sorts of other public things going on, three hundred of them gather in convention to get a real thrill, to enjoy life, to catch the inspiration of things that are doing, and to learn more and more about Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavors and the other good things attendant thereto.

We may not have the opportunity of saying it again for one or two weeks, and the present reader may not read THE SUN of one or two weeks hence, so let it be said again, packed down, piled up and running over, that when the right person arrives on the job, by the grace of God, your perplexing problem gets itself solved. We weaklings and faithless and fearing ones produce problems and have problems forced upon us; but the strong ones, the sons and daughters of God, come along and solve them, and leave us to wonder why we did not solve them ourselves a long time ago. The reason why we have to hesitate and capitulate and legislate and disintegrate is because the right person hasn't arrived and God's good hour hasn't struck.

This writer recalls having heard Dr. W. W. Staley preach a great sermon years ago from the text: "And there was a man sent from God whose name was John." From that sermon till this writing, I have been observing that the God-sent men and women are really the messengers, the heralds, crying in the wilderness: "Make a straight path, the kingdom of God is about to appear." But we started to write about the convention, and not about Dr. Staley's sermon, though a good sermon does shed light for a long time and in many directions.

Well, the convention was a joy. The cordiality and hospitality of the Union people, proverbial as it is, suffered nothing from this testing and was more appreciated and enjoyed than ever. "Building for Others" was the great theme of the convention, and every speaker, from the president, W. B. Truitt, who made that the heart of his annual address, to the closing of the convention by Rev. F. C. Lester, reflected that theme and the merit of that theme. Rev. Dale Sander, pastor of the Reidsville Church, who conducted the devotionals at the opening of each session, enlarged upon and emphasized the theme, "Building for Others." The pastor, Dr. P. H. Fleming, in giving greetings to the convention, and Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, in speaking of gratitude for the convention, emphasized character building as the fundamental thing in life, and that the only right character was that which builds for others.

The young people, in their Youth Fellowship program, presided over by Miss Birdie Rowland, of Greensboro, and the pageant presented by a group of girls from the First Christian Church of Greensboro, "Challenge of the Cross," and the various reports of the departments, emphasized the theme, "Building for Others." Practically all the Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies of the convention were represented by messages or in person by delegates, and there were about three hundred registering as members and visitors of the convention.

One happy and outstanding event of the convention was an address by Rev. Wm. T. Scott, of Winston-Salem, emphasizing the need of reaching our city life through the Sunday School and the church, and showed the fine opportunity for us now opened in Winston-Salem.

Miss Essie Mae Truitt, as secretary of the Children's Division, made a report which was requested for, and is to be printed in, THE SUN. Miss Frankye Marshall reported for the Young People's Division, Rev. J. F. Apple for Christian Endeavor, Mrs. C. H. Rowland for the Department of Missions, Miss Lillie Horne, Department of the Christian Orphanage, Miss Priscilla Chase, Elon Summer School.

The convention was edified with an address by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, who told something of her contacts and work last summer in certain areas of Kentucky, where she is to do some work in Christian Education this summer.

The high spot of the convention was an address on "China," by Mrs. D. Marion Parsons, who, with her husband, was in charge of a hospital six years in China. She told of relief work done by their hospital and of many contacts made through its ministry of healing with those who needed physical and spiritual healing. All who heard Mrs. Parsons were, indeed, glad that they had had a part, even a small part, in helping such a work of salvation, of body and soul, and we have no doubt that many determined while hearing her that, by the grace of God, they would do more in future to help the most helpless and the most needy on this earth, where their dimes invested mean dollars in results and achievement for God.

The convention adjourned Friday afternoon with the decision to hold the next annual session with Union Church, Virgilina, Va., Rev. C. E. Newman, pastor. The convention, at its closing hour, stood in silence, expressing its interest in and sympathy for Mrs. L. E. Carlton, an officer of the convention and one deeply interested and actively engaged in the sessions and services of the convention, who a few hours before had been called home by the announcement, wholly unexpected, of the sudden death of her sister, Miss Sadie Boyd. A prayer was offered by the convention for the bereaved ones, and the secretary was instructed to convey by letter the sympathy of the convention to Mrs. Carlton and the family.

W. B. Truitt graciously consented to continue as president, Miss Lillie York as the efficient secretary and Mrs. W. T. Dunn as treasurer. No convention has more efficient and faithful officers.

Such a convention is a great help, full of wholesome suggestions and helps to the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, and means new and added life to these organizations which are seeking so faithfully to reach the youth as well as the adults for the church and for the Kingdom of God.

SUICIDE AND SERVICE

During the year of our Lord 1931, 20,000 persons in the United States committed suicide. This is the highest number in fifteen years, and takes in all classes, rich and poor, employed and unemployed, the strong and the weak, the youth and the aged, some of them even college graduates of the year.

Society is in chaos. The future, to many, seems dark and doubtful, the present uncertain, to many, unpromising. All sorts of remedies are proposed for bringing light into this darkened time, love into these cruel hours, and hope into these despairing moments. For ourselves, we do not know what the details of the problem are, or in what way, or by what process, the same will be solved. But of one thing we are certain, and to that, by one process or another, we shall come before the darkness is lifted and the full light dawns again.

That remedy, the safe and sane remedy that has never failed, was given a long time ago and has been tried through the centuries and has never been found wanting: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."

And this remedy, to give it emphasis and make it permanent and prominent for all time to come, was repeated and enjoined by our Lord Christ: "Come unto me, all ye toiling and burdened ones, and I will give you rest."

CONQUERING DIFFICULTIES.

An exchange tells that the University of Cincinnati, at its recent commencement, awarded the degree of Ph. D. in philosophy, earned through merit and untiring effort to Theodore A. Bretscher, and thereby is written a page that gives history a charm and the reader a thrill. Young Bretscher could not walk until he was six years of age, and from birth till his graduating hour was seriously handicapped by disease. Souls less courageous, spirits less dauntless, would have accepted the decree of fate and been content to live the idle life of the helpless. To this hour his power of speech is exceedingly limited, and the muscles of his body uncontrollable. Through all his college career, he was unable, because he could not control his hands, to write, to take down notes at any of the classes or lectures. The story continues:

"A determination almost superhuman has enabled him to spend ten years in the university where he received first his B. A. degree, later his M. A. degree, and this year by sheer work and honorable attainment, his Ph. D. degree."

And so this cripple faces the future with a frail and diseased body, but with a steady, strong, well-trained mind. Such achievements give us new confidence in human kind, and higher respect for consecrated purpose and tireless energy.

ALCOHOL, DRUNKENNESS AND DEATH.

The Atlanta Constitution brings a tragic story, indeed, from Canton, Ga. Such a story, such a tragedy, alcohol has ever been writing through the annals of time. This latest tragedy, so appalling because it is recent, and so horrible because it is one of a million caused by the same deadly poison, is that of a young father who murdered his wife, whom he adored, and his four small children, whom he loved as he did his own life, and then turned his fatal gun upon himself, thus in one fell stroke, wiping out a family of six who a few weeks ago was so happy and had such promise and prospect of love and life. The Constitution brings the story and explains the awful tragedy in this record:

"Records of the Federal court at Atlanta show that young Hardin was under a $3,000.00 bond for alleged illicit distilling, and this fact was thought to have preyed upon him and compelled him to commit his strange and horrible crime. He had been crazed by brooding and prolonged alcoholism."

The sad story carries its own comment. There is no crime under high heaven of which intoxicating liquor has not been guilty. J. O. A.

THE NEED OF THE HOUR.

We are hearing very much from economists, politicians, those in office, and those desiring to be in office, about the supreme need of the present time. Some are saying we must have more taxation in order to balance the budget. Others are declaring we must have less or we are ruined. Some are declaring that if prohibition is not enforced, we are doomed; if it is not repealed, we are lost. Others are declaring we need more legislation of every type and variety. Some are emphatic that what has ruined us is too much legislation.

Let Roger Babson, the statistician of business, the counsellor of the great and the mighty in the councils of economy and civics, have our ear and mind for one moment as he stands up and emphatically declares: "It is the church which has created America, developed our schools, created our homes, built our cities, done everything that is worth while in America. The need of the hour is not for more legislation; the need of the hour is more Religion!"

Surely, this is getting at the heart of the matter, and we agree most heartily with the declaration that "America is suffering today because she did not and has not taken 'SIN' out of her 'buSINESS.' Sin is in the very middle and heart of business. We need here in America and in the world to take sin out of our business. Not Babson's voice, but a mightier voice than Babson's, cried out to the world long ago to the same effect: 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.' We need to begin to live as though we really believed there is a God in heaven and on earth." Amen.

RECOVERY.

Why is this depression unlike others, and why is prosperity not around any corner and is not likely to be until the peoples of the world see the facts as they are? One of the first things we need to see is the fact of Debts, spelled with two capital letters if that will increase the emphasis. There isn't any possibility of permanent recovery until the debts are satisfactorily adjusted so that they are not like millstones drawing us in the depths of the sea. Study the international situation, and see how it affects the welfare of the whole world.

If the debts of European nations could be taken out of their national budgets for a period of five years there would be a rebound of confidence that would make itself felt everywhere. Trade would revive, confidence would come back, governmental agencies would be stabilized, values would return, the idle would go back to work, and recovery would be rapid.

If the debts of the United States could be held at their present level, the budget balanced by decreased expense and not by increased taxation, at least the emphasis on the first—and State, city and county government put on a business basis, which would guarantee decreased expense and a more sensible and just system of taxation—a system based on the earning capacity of farm, factory or the individual, it would go a long way in reviving confidence and bringing back reasonable attitudes on the part of all. We need to see our debts as they are and plan accordingly. Unless we do, government itself will be brought into contempt for its incompetence and selfishness.

The government of the United States has done something to relieve the situation—it has strengthened the strong in many lines of business. Of course, this is valuable. But it has not reached the deepest places of need. The deepest places of need are to restore the purchasing power of farmers and laboring people and the consuming masses. There can be no great recovery until farm prices are increased and the produce of the farmers can be utilized to their purchasing advantage. The same is true of the laboring folks. A bare subsistence for them is not going to make them purchasers of goods nor builders of homes. And the smaller salaried classes are in the same predicament.

There are two crimes that a respectable government should not allow nor be guilty of these days. One of these is to take a farm from any family for taxes, if that family has been making an honest effort. The other is to allow the disposssession of any home for taxes or for non-payment of installments when the earning power has been destroyed by such times as these. The moral imperative as well as stability for government itself needs to be heeded.

We need the restoration of confidence, willingness to venture, and good will based on an inflexible square deal—a deal of equality and not one of greed or advantage. These have been destroyed in the past few years and they must be rebuilt. It is doubtful whether in the lifetime of any of us there has ever been such an imponderable sense of futility as now exists as to the wisdom exercised in the guidance of the social order.

The National Council of the National Economic League, in a referendum on the Paramount Problems of the Depression, found that the four major emphases were in their order, "Economy and Efficiency in Government, National, State and City—Taxation—Reparations and International Debts—Banks, Banking, Credit, Financing." If these could be settled so as to reach the majorities, it would not be long before a new confidence would appear. And this referendum was conducted among the most thoughtful men of America. Among the men on this Board are Charles G. Dawes, Dr. Angell of Yale, President Lowell of Harvard, Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, Dr. Garfield, President of Williams, besides scores of the leading men of the nation. Other questions associated with these were, reduction and limitation of armaments, tariffs, administration of justice, unemployment, economic planning, railroad transportation, over-speculation, coordination of production and purchasing power, agricultural parity and some others. The fact that such conclusions come from the most thoughtful part of our civilization makes the conclusion worthy of serious thought and purpose.

The National Board of the League of Nations, with a former Attorney General of the U. S. as President, George W. Wickersham has sent out to all its members the following trenchant statement as to the necessities of these days if we are to have recovery. There must be "financial and economic cooperation between governments. Such cooperation must be initiated by the President of the United States, with the approval of Congress. An international conference should be called of interested governments with the object of considering the financial and economic problems, such a conference to include plans for:

(a) "The restoration of monetary stability and the normal operation of the machinery of international credit.

(b) "Definite plans for settlement of inter-governmental debts.

(c) "The adoption of policies which shall lead to a freer international movement of goods, capital and service."

The representative of the United States at the Disarmament Conference at Geneva spoke a plain and necessary word when he said recently that European nations agreeing to the reduction of armaments could rest assured of an easement of the debts to the United States. It can easily be conceived that an easement of the debts to the United States might be thwarted completely by war or increased spending for armaments. Peace policies are necessary for recovery.

There is another strange situation facing us. Facing as we do one of the most prolonged periods of depression with economic tragedies reaching into millions of homes, the liquor traffic followers project this issue to the front as a major problem. If the mindedness of the American people majors upon the return of the liquor traffic more confusion will enter into the recovery. We should center interest upon the main things looking toward national and international recovery. The crystallized sentiment of all classes upon the major issues will soon have a telling effect in the restoration of confidence, in the accomplishment of major projects, and bringing back hope to a social order that is diseased by greed. Lifting the dark pall that has settled over us all may be a long process unless we find the way of righteousness.

CONTRIBUTIONS

THE POWER IN THE BLOOD.

An out-door service was being held by an evangelistic party just preceding the regular evening service. The trumpeter started to play the song, "There is Power in the Blood," the song that means so much to those who have felt that power which so transforms every life that yields in humble submission. Among the party was one who had been reared in a Christian home, who had never been tainted with the sins which many young men are led into in their early life. His life was like unto that young man who said to the Lord Jesus that he had kept all the law of Moses from his youth. As the world says, he was a good moral man. Yet, there is no such thing as a good moral man, for in every heart which has not been cleansed by the blood of Christ there is a root of sin which ever grows worse and worse, ever ready to break out in some open sin or crime.

No one can trust himself to battle with life, for "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?" (Jer. 17:9.) So, this young man was made to feel that his morality was not enough, that he needed the cleansing power which is in the blood of Jesus Christ to make him what he should be. He realized that any life lived apart from the authority of God is a life of sin. He yielded to the will of God and God commissioned him to go forth and preach the gospel of a blood-bought salvation to all men. He has preached it for more than a quarter of a century, and has been a blessing to a vast number of people.

Another in that open-air service was one who had gone to the depths of sin, who had tasted all its vileness, who had been pronounced unclean by God and man. He had been bound by fetters stronger than steel. He tried to break them in his own strength, but ever went deeper and deeper until he thought there was no hope, and his family gave him up in despair.

But one day he met Jesus, his Saviour, and was made to feel that through the death of Jesus on the cross a fountain was opened for sin and uncleanness; that through the shed blood of Jesus atonement had been made for his sins and even though they were as scarlet they could be washed away and he could be whiter than snow. He believed that what he heard was true and yielded his heart and life to this same Jesus who transformed his sinful heart and vile body into a new creature, and sent him out as his messenger to others who needed a messenger that knew what it meant to be shackled by sin. One who would tell them that the power of the blood of Jesus could transform when all reformation failed—a personal worker in deed and in truth.

There were others standing there who had known the power of sin in its different stages, that middle class who people said were not very bad and not very good. That class which seems so indifferent to the gospel message, who pass it on to someone else and go on their way so carelessly. But even of this number there were many who knew Jesus as their Redeemer, who had purchased them not with silver or gold, but with his own blood; their High Priest who had obtained eternal redemption for them, even the forgiveness of sins. They knew that without the shedding of blood, there is no remission for the old Mosaic law, which called for sacrifices each year for the sins of the people, but when Jesus the Christ came and offered himself as a Lamb without blemish and without spot to be an eternal sacrifice for all men, the old covenant was done away with and the blood of Jesus became the everlasting atonement between God and man. The blood that has never lost its power, that still saves and keeps, that still flows for sin and uncleanness, that is the life of all who are in Christ Jesus. Oh, that all men might adore him as Saviour, accept him as Redeemer, and acknowledge him as King. He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. His invitation is to whosoever will and his great desire is to say of all men, "There are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." (Rev. 7:14.)

APPRECIATION.

Sunday, June 19th, was a happy day at the Elon Christian Parsonage. The occasion was the birthday of the writer's father, Rev. A. P. Hurst, who on that day joined the ranks of the octogenarians. At 11:00 A. M., he preached in the Elon Christian Church, from the text, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The afternoon was being spent quietly with the family when a group of people was discovered making their way toward the parsonage. It was a complete birthday surprise planned by the good folks of the community as an evidence of their love and appreciation. There were over one hundred present under the leadership of Dr. W. C. Wicker. They brought two birthday cakes and many other gifts, sang songs, recited poetry, delivered orations, took pictures, and then to augment the surprise, gave the entire family an unforgettable pounding. There were pounds of home cured ham, flour, sugar, potatoes, coffee, cocoa, tea, canned fruits and vegetables, eggs, cereals and other items too numerous to mention. We were grateful for the material gifts which will keep the parsonage table supplied for some time to come. But more valuable and precious still is the spirit of neighborliness and good will which prompted the gifts. Such kindly acts make it difficult to break the ties of pastoral and parish relationship which have been so harmonious and happy. Our feeling for the folks of Elon is expressed by an unknown author:

"These are my Father's folks,
Whate'er their name or sign;
How their familiar look and tone
Doth cheer this heart of mine.
The love-light in their eyes,
The handclasp quick and strong,
The feeling we have met before
And known each other long;
These are my Father's folks!"

VALLEY LETTER.

I have held three revival meetings in my field this spring, viz: Dry Run, Newport and Timber Mountain. Congregations were good, as a rule, at these meetings. There were six conversions at Dry Run, three at Newport, and sixteen at Timber Mountain. At Dry Run and Newport I was ably assisted by Mrs. Margel Spencer, an evangelist from Grafton, W. Va., who assisted me in a fine meeting at Timber Ridge last fall.

Inspiring and well-attended mission rallies have recently been held at Dry Run, Newport and New Hope. Dr. Atkinson was present at all of them, and added greatly to their interest and profit. The attendance at these rallies seems to indicate that interest in missions is growing in this Conference. Let us devoutly hope that such is the case.

Our Sunday School Convention was held June 16th and 17th at Timber Ridge. It was a very enjoyable and profitable convention. In addition to local speakers, we had Dr. J. O. Atkinson with us, who kept the subject of missions prominently before us, and otherwise added much to the convention. We also had Rev. Russell J. Clinchy, President of Washington Association of Congregational Pastors, for an address on Thursday night. Our people were delighted with his address. Roy A. Larrick was again re-elected president; Roy Hosaflook was elected vice-president, R. O. Rothgeb, secretary; Walton E. Brill, treasurer. The convention will meet next year at Whistler's Chapel.

The annual memorial service was held at Leaksville the first Sunday in June, and at Timber Ridge the third Sunday in June. These memorial services attract large numbers of people. Many who formerly lived in these communities or have loved ones buried in the cemeteries, plan to attend these services to meet old friends, and to pay a tribute to their dear departed dead.

Our annual conference will meet in Winchester, August 10th and 11th. The program will soon be in the making. Of even greater importance, however, than program making is the collection of conference apportionments. The need was never greater, and the necessity for a real sacrifice in order to bring everything up in full was never so keen as now. If the churches fail to come up in full, the great enterprises of the church must suffer even more than they are suffering today. General conditions and the great needs of the work constitute a real challenge to our faith, loyalty and love at this time.

FANCY GAP.

Dear SUN Readers:

We were wonderfully blessed in our revival at Rocky Ford Christian Church, which closed on Wednesday night, June 15th. We feel that your prayers have been answered in a great way. Forty souls came to God, asking forgiveness of sin. We were fortunate in having with us Rev. J. C. Reynolds, of Troy, N. C., and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Salvador, of Indiana, who led the music.

As God's servants and your Christian brother and sister, we feel the task here too big for human beings. Will you continue to join us in asking divine guidance in this great work? We know you are interested in the mountain work, but how much more interested you would be if you could only come and see. Do come and be with us some time.

We want you to be happy with us in the work here. We are happy in His service, and ask you to rejoice in the feeling that you, too, have a big part in your home mission work.

Our Sunday School work is fine. We have two well-organized Sunday Schools, and are receiving great blessings through them. Will you remember to feel a part of us each Sunday as you assemble in God's house, and feel assured that we are meeting in our humble way in God's house on this day, thanking him that you made it possible, through your prayers and sacrifices, for us to meet and praise his matchless name here.

Again we join in extending a cordial invitation to each of you to visit us, and get a full realization of things I have briefly mentioned. Also, write us about the work.

Your brother and sister in Christ Jesus.

MR. AND MRS. R. T. GRISSOM.

ELON DOLLAR-A-MONTH CLUB.

My dear CHRISTIAN SUN readers, members of Elon Alumni Association, members of the Christian Church, and friends of our College:

It has been some weeks since I wrote you about our new undertaking for the support of the college—our Dollar-a-Month Club. When I wrote you last, we had 142 members of the Club. Since then we have added 198, making a total of 340.

It is a bit expensive to wage a campaign like this and we have not been able to make a concerted, universal effort as yet, but we are completing an organization, designed to reach everybody, with a heart appeal, and to give everyone interested an opportunity to contribute. We feel that we have your interest and enthusiasm to a certain extent, but we do need sorely your contributions. Have you joined the Dollar-a-Month Club? If not, as you read this article, won't you make up your mind to join the increasing number who are determined at any cost to see that the college continues honorably in her fine efforts in behalf of the young men and women of our church and country. A dollar a month may seem small—may not mean much to you—but if all would make such a contribution, by the time it reached the college treasury, it would be sufficient to help the college meet her obligations and to carry on as she should. If you are behind with your subscription, if at all convenient, won't you please send in your contribution at once?

Everything at the college is going fine—interest and enthusiasm are on the increase, but we do need your financial assistance. Below, you will find a place for your name and address—let us have the same, together with your dollar and you will be enrolled as a member of the Club.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

PRAYER.

Lord, thine arm is not shortened, nor dost thou disregard the believer's faith. The smallness of our faith prevents thy power and souls are slipping anchor. God forgive and reclaim. Corruption assails every phase of the common law. Perchance only by a chastisement yet unfelt can righteousness be made to prevail. Send, O God, such chastisement as thou must, upon whom thou wilt, that our nation, the nations, may yield to thy reign. For the glory of Jesus' name. Amen.

L.

MISSIONS AND NOT MISSIONS.

Some things that we do may be classified truly as Missions. There are many things we do, however, that cannot be so classified. Here is one, for instance:

A deacon in a church told the writer sometime ago that he did not believe in Foreign Missions, but he did believe in Home Missions. I asked him then if he practiced his belief. "Surely, I do," said the deacon. "Not long since a neighbor of mine had a cow that was unfortunate enough to get hung by her horn under a fence. At the call of the neighbor, I stopped my work, got my dehorner and helped that neighbor for an hour in bringing relief to his cow and never charged him one penny for my services. That is what I call real Home Mission work."

Now that is something to laugh about for many; but there are others. Not long since, a good sister in a church, with all solemnity and sincerity, said: "Our Missionary Society has done good work during the past year. It has paid for and put a carpet in our church. It also purchased and paid for a pulpit Bible. It helped the church buy and paid considerably on a much-needed piano, and then, as we were hard up, at the end of the year our Missionary Society gave a good contribution on the pastor's salary, and this took all the money our Society raised."

That isn't to laugh about; that is to weep over. For, as the deacon with his cow was comically ignorant of what Home Missions mean, the pious sister, with her carpet and her church, was tragically and tearfully ignorant as to the meaning of Missions. Neither the "cow-deacon" nor the pious sister, with her Society, sent any gospel to anybody who was living or dying in the earth without the gospel. It is marvelous, indeed, how some pious souls, through ignorance, enlarge upon the word "Missions" and give Missions a meaning which no dictionary ever justified, and which no Bible teaching ever sensed or sanctioned.

We wonder why those in the church, and who seem to want to do the right thing in matters will not learn even the plain teachings of the Bible and of their church itself, as to the meaning of "Missions."

The church, not our Congregational and Christian Churches, but the Church of God on earth, all denominations, as far as we know, for convenience, clarity of thinking and intelligence, has seen fit to build up the kingdom of earth along three separate and distinct lines:

1. Education. That takes in teaching the people in the local church through Sunday School, Christian Endeavor Society, and the rest, and then goes on out to the large and equally essential work of education—that of maintaining church schools and colleges. Why will we not learn that the Church of the living God, a long time ago, discovered and decided that if it was to do its work in the world it must give some of its time, thought and money to education.

2. Benevolence. The Church of the living God long since decided that if it was to express its heart and love and life, it must do so through the channels of charity and the institutions and enterprises of benevolence—the relief of aged ministers, for instance, the care of the sick and the needy in hospitals, the housing and feeding, the rearing of fatherless and motherless children in its orphanages. This is the expression of the benevolent attitude and activity of the Church.

3. Missions. The Church of the living God long since decided, if it is to obey its Lord, it must seek to carry out the Great Commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." Preach the gospel, teach the gospel, carry the gospel. Sending, by proxy through person, purse, and prayer, supporting in the name of the gospel and for the sake of the gospel, those out yonder in the needy and opportune districts of the homeland, in the needy and appalling districts of the foreign lands, sending and supporting those who are there to preach the gospel of the Son of God—that is Missions. The very word "Missions" means "a sending," and in the Biblical sense and in its sacred significance, it means "sending the gospel of the Son of God." This is not the intellectual, not the benevolent, but the purely spiritual task of the church, since it is undertaken solely and unselfishly in the name of the Lord that his name may be held up and sent and carried to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Thus, for convenience, for emphasis, for perfection of purpose and plan, the Church of the living God undertakes to build up and enlarge the Kingdom of God on earth through the three channels—Education, Benevolence, Missions. It does seem that individuals in the church would catch the meaning, and for their own sakes and the sake of the kingdom, would keep the same clear in their minds, not seeking to exalt the one above the other, but seeking to serve all and to do one's best by all, that one may have a share in the work of the church in building up the kingdom of heaven on earth. The soul of education is teaching, enlightenment, knowledge. The soul of benevolence and charity is kindness, gentleness, love. The soul of Missions is sending, a sending to others the gospel of the Son of God, which is earth's great blessing, and the world's one hope of salvation.

To say that one of these should have precedence over and be preferred to the other is like saying to the mind, "you must be ignorant," to the body, "you must starve," or to the soul, "you must suffer."

MISSIONARY REMITTANCES.

The emphasis which has been placed upon "The Dollar Plan" through the Coin Cards during recent weeks ought not to diminish among our people a sense of the importance of regular contributions. Indeed, it is these regular contributions, diminished as little as possible over preceding years, which are our chief dependence. In each church the effort ought plainly to be made to secure the part payment of pledges and if at all possible, to see to it that at least as much is sent in by July 1, 1932, as was sent in during the first half of 1931.

The readers of this paper doubtless constitute our most interested and our most devoted constituency in their respective churches and in the whole state. Not only do we ask for your contributions, but we ask you to do what you can in behalf of the contributions of others.

Lest this word may escape the eye of the church treasurer, or of your Board of Trustees, will you use your influence to have every dollar that has been contributed to Missions sent in on or before July 1st? State Conference treasurers and national society treasurers are, like everybody else, finding it increasingly difficult to borrow money during these times. Moreover, the interest on borrowed money is just so much taken from the work in the field. We do not want appalling debts to face after the depression lets up.

The tragedy of reduced receipts for our state and national missionary work at this time is that such reduction diminishes the effectiveness of what, after all, is our essential hope for the future of the world. Without more religion and better religion in the days to come, there is nothing but catastrophe ahead. The sacrificial and thorough gathering in of contributions from individuals and their churches by July 1st will help to avoid this catastrophe.

Please send your remittances from the Christian Churches to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., and from Congregational Churches to Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, 933 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

WHY BE A MEMBER?

By MRS. IRENE KITE.

(Read at Newport Church Missionary Rally.)

Why should one be a member of the Missionary Society?

1. Because Mission work is God's thought—He asks your cooperation.
2. Because of our love for the Lord Jesus Christ, whose commands are explicit.
3. Because we are the fruit of missionary effort.

Your example will help others to obey the Lord's command.

The work of the Missionary Society is to help the heathen abroad and the spiritually needy at home.

Missions is the work of the church and all Christians should be active church workers.

Millions are yet in darkness, and the laborers are so few.

The security of our own nation now depends upon world-wide civilization.

The Lord has left the work of carrying his message to the world in the hands of his followers. He expects us to help.

There is no greater need in our churches today than that of leaders who are consecrated to their task and skilled in leadership qualifications. Most of our church and social life in this Christian land consists of the interchange of courtesy and kindness—speaking to those who speak to us, loving those that love us, doing good to those that do good to us. But in all this, asks our Master, "What do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans the same?"

But in his foreign mission work he is challenging and lifting his church to a supreme unselfishness. It is carried on for those who can render no return and who, at first, often reward all efforts to help them with abuse, persecution, and sometimes murder. It demands and develops in his church the very likeness of him who "when he suffered he threatened not," who "came not to be ministered unto, to minister, and give his life a ransom for many."

Since so much depends on the leaders let us think of Jesus' idea of leadership. What did he tell his disciples? "Let him who would be great among you be the slave of all." Again he told them that except they become as a little child they could not even get into the kingdom of heaven. He also told that if they would be leaders in his kingdom they must take up the cross and follow him. He was their leader and leadership in his kingdom did not mean an earthly glory and power, but it did mean misunderstanding. It meant persecution and dying for the cause he loved. It meant anxiety for the weakness of his followers. It meant leaving his work in the very bud of its fulfillment and leaving it in the faith of others. It meant relying on God in the utmost of faith that his great life-purpose should be accomplished.

The leadership which Jesus offered to his disciples was not a leadership of authority where they lorded it over one another, not a leadership of pomp and of power, but a leadership in brotherliness, in sacrifice, in love and devotion to one another and to others, even their enemies.

Jesus called his beloved twelve to a leadership which demanded that they give everything that was dear to them and in return receive misunderstanding and a cross, but in the end, through faith, the approval of the heavenly Father.

Jesus trained his disciples for leadership by giving them work to do. Jesus taught his disciples to pray, but above all he tried to teach them how to live. Jesus warned against our holding grudges and quarreling with others. He said, "Agree with thine adversary quickly."

We can not have our own way about everything. We need to work with others and consider others. Organization enables each one to be a part of the whole and gives each a task to perform. Organization gives strength. The greater the number of threads in a cord, the greater the strength in the cord. So it is in our missionary society. All energy and work must be directed toward one purpose. No organization is stronger than its weakest link. Is your society as good as it might be? Have you done all you set out to do? If so, set your goal higher, seek new fields of service. If your society is not successful, find the weak spots. Are your officers as faithful as they might be? If not, how can they improve? Do all committees function well or are they committees in name only? Do all individual members cooperate heartily and do everything possible to improve conditions. In a football team, they all resort to teamwork for success. Is your society a team or do you leave all the work for two or three? Your strength is in the Missionary Society, and the strength of the Missionary Society is in you. There is a task for every member and your society loses if one individual fails.

To the several new societies in our district, I would say, plan programs that are of especial interest to the members of your society, giving special attention to the worship program. Provide an adequate social program and above all give opportunity for members to share in great tasks. Set your ideals high and then strive to reach them.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION LITERATURE.

For two years the Committee on Missionary Education has been getting out ten-cent booklets containing programs for adult groups. You will recall that four in this series were published two years ago and that three more came out in 1931. You may also remember that three more have been announced for 1932: "A Century of Indian Progress," by Mrs. Lawrence Riggs Howard; "Christianity in Revolutionary China," by Rowland M. Cress; and "Why Christian Missions?" by Hugh Vernon White. All three of these have now come from the press.

Many Women's Societies like to use these little booklets because all the necessary material for their program is included within the booklets themselves. In some cases churches use them for mid-week meetings. Anything you can do to further their use will be appreciated and I believe will be of help to the churches. They can be secured at 10c per copy by writing to the Congregational Education Society, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

YOUTH AND PROHIBITION.

Young people who think seriously are concerned about making the everyday relationships and activities of life Christian. And yet, as life is becoming increasingly complex and the problem of making it thoroughly Christian more difficult, the question of prohibition, intensified by the coming presidential election, makes our American life more complex still.

Of course, some of us young people will say, "We are not of voting age, why worry?" We are the ones who would be concerned the most. We are the ones who will have to face the issue later. The challenge is ours. We are a progressive youth. And the young people of today are going to suffer in the future for the mistakes made now. If the Eighteenth Amendment should be repealed that would be one step backward. Remember our motto: "Forward Together," and beg of our fathers to think and act wisely.

An open saloon on the street corner would be a thorn in our flesh. Would our mothers and sisters be safe on a shopping tour if this were true? Since we are partially free, why become slaves again? Let's prune the tree of all fungi, and it will again yield good fruit.

Every young person can look about him and see the effects of alcoholic liquor. It poisons the human body, clogging the channel through which the most effective Christian service can be drawn. Jesus first healed the body and then cleansed the soul in order to have a perfect place for his kingdom. If our lives are to be worth-while we must keep physically fit and mentally alert. Therefore, I challenge you young people to arm yourselves with God's truth and retain the freedom that is yours, fighting as you never fought before.

HELP WANTED, AT ONCE.

At the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, I was elected as vice-president, to work especially with the Christian Endeavor end of the work. In order to do this efficiently it is necessary that I know where the Societies are located, who are the officers, and what your problems are, and in what way I can help you. If you have a problem in Christian Endeavor work, write me and I will try to help you, or secure the proper one to help you.

I need at once the names and addresses of the officers of every Christian Endeavor Society in this Conference—Junior, Intermediate and Senior or Young People's. Also the address of Miss Mabel Smith, Intermediate Secretary of the Convention. Also the names and addresses of the State officers of the North Carolina Christian Endeavor Union.

Will you, who see this, send me any of the above information that you can as early as possible, in order that Christian Endeavor work may go forward for Christ and the church.

W. T. DUNN,
Kemper St. Station,
Lynchburg, Va.

THREE-S C. E. CONVENTION MEETS.

On Sunday afternoon, June 5th, the Three-S Christian Endeavor Union held its mass meeting in the Waverly Christian Church. Mr. W. H. Baker conducted the song service and Mr. C. E. Barfield, ex-president of the State Union, gave a very inspiring talk. Miss Burwell Barrett, of the Dendron Society, conducted the devotional service, and reviewed what the young people had accomplished during the past year. The societies responding to the roll-call were: Salem, Oak Grove, Dendron and Waverly.

The Dendron Society was awarded the banner for having attained the most goals in the past quarter. The Oak Grove Society was awarded the attendance banner. New officers for the coming year were elected and the installation service was conducted by Mr. Barfield. The following officers were elected:

Miss Elizabeth Sharpe, president; Mrs. Albert Johnson, 1st vice-president; Miss Ruby Burrow, 2nd vice-president; Miss Grace Savedge, 3rd vice-president; Mrs. Cephas Brittle, secretary; Miss Estelle Cotton, treasurer; Rev. F. C. Lester, pastoral counsellor; Miss Rose Maynard, superintendent of Tenth Legion and Quiet Hour; Mr. Walter Rawlings, superintendent of Citizenship; Miss Burwell Barrett, superintendent of Publication and Publicity; Mrs. Walter Clarke, Lookout Committee; Miss Mary Knoeller, chairman Program Committee; Miss Irene Cotton, chairman Social Committee; Miss Louise Pittman, chairman Music Committee; Miss Alma Curtis, chairman Finance Committee.

BURWELL BARRETT, Supt. Publicity.

EASTERN N. C. S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION.

At the request of the Vice-President and the Executive Board of the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, I am acting as temporary president of the convention, which will meet in regular annual session July 12th and 13th, at New Hope Church, eight miles east of Youngsville. New Hope Church is about 10 miles from Louisburg. Those attending the convention south and west of Youngsville would come by Youngsville. Those coming from extreme north and east would find the route nearer by Louisburg.

Miss Ollie Dickerson, Bunn, N. C., is chairman of the New Hope Sunday School entertainment committee. Delegates and visitors will please write Miss Dickerson and register for entertainment during the convention.

We are planning for a good convention and hope every Sunday School within the bounds of the Eastern North Carolina Conference will send delegates. Report blanks will be mailed out in a few days. Please be prompt in getting the report of your school and Christian Endeavor Society to Miss Mary Lee Coghill, who is corresponding secretary. Her address is Henderson, N. C., R. F. D. As Miss Whitaker is in Baltimore and will not be present for the convention (Recording Secretary), the reports will be sent to Miss Coghill.

R. A. WHITTEN,
Acting President.

P. S. We hope to mail your school copy of program at an early date.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

WHAT IS FREEDOM, POLITICAL AND PERSONAL?

"If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—John 8:36.

This will be your patriotic meeting of the summer. Both the American and Christian flags should be in evidence. It would be fine to repeat the pledges to these flags, found in the Sunday School Herald for June 26, 1932. Have someone look up the story of Isaac Watts in connection with this old hymn, "O God, Our Help in Ages Past." Tell the story and read the 90th Psalm, then sing this hymn. "America, the Beautiful," and "The Star-Spangled Banner" might be sung later.

Personal Freedom.—The following questions can be used effectively for discussions: "What is personal freedom?" Seek to give a brief, clear statement of just what you mean by these words. The dictionary says, "Liberation from slavery, imprisonment, or restraint from power or control of another." "In what realms do people demand freedom?" "What price have people been willing to pay for freedom to worship?" "Is freedom of speech a fair demand?" "Should people be allowed to say or write whatever they choose?" "Are any limitations needed?" "Does an individual have a right to his own opinions?" "How far should he be willing to extend this same freedom to others?" "What is the price to be paid for personal freedom?"

Political Freedom.—Woodrow Wilson declared in an address in 1912, "Freedom exists only where people take care of the government." Where citizens live together, agreement is needed. The Pilgrims came to American shores to build a new nation, where people would have freedom. The Revolutionary War brought independence. The Civil War freed an enslaved people in a liberty-loving land. What characteristics of a nation and government make it possible for freedom to exist? What is the difference between freedom and anarchy? Liberty and license?

Points for discussion: "What characteristics make a republic different from a monarchy?" "What is the relationship of freedom and law?" "Is it fair to bring up the question of personal freedom as a reason for repealing the Eighteenth Amendment, but ignore it with regard to all other laws?" "Are politicians willing for all people to have freedom?" "What are some requirements which must be met if people of a nation are to have freedom?" "What is the responsibility of a nation to develop an intelligent citizenship?" "What is the place of motive or purpose in a land where people claim freedom?" "How far is it right to have special privileges in a land where freedom of all is a fundamental principle?"

Now, personal and political freedom, it is true, are essential; but, before we can really have these we must be spiritually and religiously free, as well as socially free. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8:32.)

Closing Thought:

"In the beauty of the lilies
Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom
That transfigures you and me.
As he died to make men holy
Let us live to make men free,
While God goes marching on."

Julia Ward Howe.

Sunday School Lesson

THE CALL OF MOSES.

LESSON II—JULY 10, 1932.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Certainly I will be with thee."

LESSON TEXT: Exodus 2:11-4:20.

TIME: B. C. 1539; 1499.

PLACE: Egypt, Midian, near Mt. Horeb.

Forty years pass, and Moses grows to manhood. Throughout these years, he is taught all of the learning of the Egyptians. Moses, the Hebrew foundling, has become Moses, the Egyptian prince. Yet he remained a Hebrew at heart, and when one day he saw an Egyptian unmercifully treating one of his race, he fell upon the oppressor and slew him. The result was that he was forced to flee from Egypt. It was God's plan that Moses, the student prince, should become Moses, the worker, that Moses, the haughty, should become Moses, the meek.

Moses fled to the land of Midian, where we find him defending the daughters of Jethro from the hostile shepherds and watering their flocks for them. In turn he falls in love with one of these daughters and takes her to wife. Thus begins the second forty-year period of his life, the period of meditation with himself and of communion with God. To free the Israelites from Egypt "a man was needed who could endure hardness, a man of nerve, resolution, energy, steadfastness, bravery. Such was Moses, but Egypt did not make him such: Midian did it."

Forty years again pass away. Moses is keeping his flock, when out of a burning bush the call comes to him. When Moses answers, "Here am I," Jehovah says, "I have surely seen the affliction of my people that are in Egypt." Often had Moses' mind turned back toward his fellow kinsmen in the land of bondage, and now God declares that he, too, has seen their affliction. But does he say that he will go and right things? No, but, "I will send thee." In later years his Son says, "Go ye, therefore."

Moses's reply is an objection. We often think things should be done, but do not think that we should do them. Moses pressed his objection too far, forgetting that God was the judge of his fitness. Are we not guilty of the same offense? Yet, God, now as then, answers: "Certainly I will be with thee." Snowden says, "Moses was to supply the human channel and God the divine energy, and the two together would be irresistible." Still Moses raises another objection. The children of Israel would demand his credentials. Whom should he say had sent him. "And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM; and he said, Thus shall ye say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you." Christ later said I AM before Abraham was. God is the I AM—the pre-existence of all that exists.

A plan of action was then outlined for Moses. He was to search out his brother Aaron, and they together were to meet the elders of Israel and enlist them in the plan of deliverance. God wants everyone enlisted in the plan of deliverance from sin. Then they were to go before Pharaoh and state their plan of action. There was to be no secret rebellion, but an open proposal.

Moses was warned that there would be difficulties in the way, but he was promised that he would eventually win. The Christian life is one fraught with temptations and hardships, but like the promise to Moses, we are told that he who endures shall wear a crown of life.

God never keeps us waiting for the gift of forgiveness."

METHODS CORNER

BY REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Miami Beach, Fla.

In almost every conference I have attended during the last year or two, there have been intimations that the motive to missionary effort has weakened with some people. Dr. J. T. Stocking, of St. Louis, Mo., wrote a revealing article in The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, April 9, 1931, on "The Nerve of Missions." I am dependent upon his article for what is written in this present article.

He mentions some of the motives to missions that were once operative, but now, for the most part, given up. One is the belief that missionary effort, especially the so-called Foreign Mission enterprise, was based on the conviction that men and women without a saving knowledge of Christ were doomed to eternal loss. Thus it became a serious business to go to the heathen and tell them of Christ's saving power. There was a great earnestness about this belief. Many people still believe this, but a vast number of people have come to feel that God will do justly with all those who have missed the great opportunity of knowing Jesus Christ.

However such a conviction has come about, it is a fact. Probably an increasing conviction that God is a Father and a God of Love has produced the newer creed. The nerve to this older type of missionary effort has been cut by the larger faith in a loving God who loves the whole world and all mankind. Those who have made this discovery for themselves would not go back to the older order of thought.

But we still believe in missions. The feeling prevails amongst us that we ought to be about our Father's business. We do desire to take the blessed gospel to all men. We know full well that it is a great privilege to do this, but we seek other motives, and think we have discovered another "nerve" to inspire us.

I have just received an advance copy of Hugh Vernon White's booklet, "Why Christian Missions?" It is a book of four programs for adult groups. It is published by the department of Missionary Education and World Friendship of the Congregational Education Society, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. Price 10 cents. If you are really interested in Missions, please send for the booklet and read it. I know of nothing better and it is written by a man who knows his theme thoroughly. In another "Corner" I will write about other phases of this missionary problem.

I entreat a frequent remembrance in your prayers, both of me and mine. This is the best proof we can give of our love to our friends, to bear them upon our hearts before the Lord.—John Newton.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of the servant, and to the prayers of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

THE QUIET LIFE OF JESUS.

"Be still and know that I am God."—Psalm 46:10.

It seems a contradiction to say that Jesus had a quiet life, for he was nearly always in a crowd. However, he was alone much, and these moments of quiet were deliberately achieved. This was done by dismissing the crowds, and when he had anything important to do we find him always dismissing them, and then he would go away, and be quiet—alone.

This method of doing things is different from ours. When we want to do something important we try to gather a crowd, give publicity to it, and whoop it up, with what results, the most of us know. The question is appropriately asked: "Is it not probable that the reason we are able to do so little with the crowd, sometimes, is that we have done so little apart from it?"

One's final and lasting influence with the masses depends on what that one does in the quiet of his own life—alone. He who would lead must have in the background of private life a replenishing of life from the deep inner springs. Only from this source can we know the inner realities, can we measure life's values and significances by the eternal standards of God.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank thee for our home, the quiet of the farm, the silent voice of nature, for the appointed times of quietude and thoughtfulness. We pray for the gift of more of this, and for more of the revelation of thyself. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WISE AND HARMLESS.

"Wise as serpents and harmless as doves."—Matt. 10:16.

To be "harmless as a dove" suggests something insipid, something like "a harmless lunatic." Unfortunately some folk regard a Christian as that sort of person—gentle, ineffectual, harmless, impotent, useless. But fortunately "harmless" here means "guileless." Guileless suggests one with all his powers but with that power controlled—it suggests a life dominated by the positive will of God, upon which there is no stain of sin.

Prayer—Dear heavenly Father, give us wisdom day by day to make all decisions right, to see the true value of things, to comprehend religious and spiritual values, and to steady our nerves ever onward and upward in the faith for God and glory. Be thou our guide always that all our powers may be turned loose for thy kingdom in this world. In his name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

BETRAYING CHILDREN.

"And the Father the Child."—Matt. 10:21.

This text is one of the things that is said will come to pass as a sign of last times—"the Father will betray the child to death." It is given here as one of the most heinous of crimes. Most people agree to that. The idea brings revolt in our minds.

Yet, we do well to ask if this is not a common occurrence, not in a literal sense but morally?

To "deliver up" here means to "betray into the hands of the enemy." Taking into consideration the enemies of child life, let us see how far it is possible to betray our children, viz.: "Betrayed into the hands of fear," bondage to fear, to timidity, to hesitation, to terrors, etc., deprives one of a victorious stride, a buoyant and confident spirit. "Fear not," was one of our Saviour's first lessons.

He who sets out to train his children to be rebels would be looked upon as a mad man. Yet he who trains his children to conventionality transforms them into wax figures, fashion plates and machines, and robs them of the priceless gift of independence of thought and spirit of adventure, which are the world's chief hope of redemption from the tradition of tyranny and sanctified stupidities.

A guardian would be jailed for robbing a child of his legacy, but many parents think nothing of robbing their children of their religious heritage, which is far worse.

Friends, our children will carry with them through life the background of our own training in their young lives.

Prayer—O God, grant unto us thy wisdom to be all thou wouldst have us be that our children and all who see us may know that we are Christians, and striving to be what we ought to be. In the name of Christ, we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE EASY YOKE.

"My yoke is easy."—Matt. 11:30.

"My yoke is kindly." (Moffatt.)

"Kindly" is a much better word than "easy." It is believed that no yoke is easy. Jesus' yoke is not always easy, but it is always kindly.

Moreover, we are not perverting the Scripture in submitting this interpretation. We are reliably informed that the original meaning of the Greek word used here conveyed the meaning of "kindly."

Jesus asks much of us; but he asks it from love, so that, by bearing it, our joy may be full and our life abundant.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, to thee this day we offer our praise and thanksgiving, imploring thee to forgive us our sins, and make us thine own this day to follow thee in suffering as well as in pleasure. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE REPELLENT CHRIST.

"Blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me."—Matt. 11:6.

"Blessed is the man who finds nothing that repels him in me." (Moffatt.)

A recent writer brought up this subject—the aspect of Christ that there are elements in his life that are distinctly repellent to some folk. For instance, they who love the spirit of acquisition, they who love power, they whose motive is for the mighty dollar, they who estimate life in material values, they who worship success: These dislike Jesus; for Jesus demands humility and repentance; Jesus demands following him; and to do this may mean self-denial, poverty and suffering. Jesus demands giving to the poor, and that may impoverish one's own bank account. Jesus demands living righteously, justly, straight, and to live that way may cost one his office and a desirable living. Thus, to some, Christ is repellent.

Again: Man loves comfort, luxuries, servants, and the nursings of hundreds of labor-saving and luxury-producing devices. Hosts of those who can so live will do so though thousands starve at their doors. This, on the contrary, is repelled by the sacrificial life of Jesus. Christ says: "Let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me." Christ said to the young man, "sell all that thou hast." This repels children of comfort. Humans do not like this.

To the current mood of many obsessed of pleasure, loose morals, gratification of desires, etc., Jesus is a disturbing, rebuking figure. He demands severity of personal discipline. Where do we find ourselves in our attitude of mind and soul in doing things Christlike?

Prayer—(Say the Lord's Prayer. Think of each statement and petition as you repeat it. Try to mean it without reservation.)

SATURDAY.

DANGER SPOTS.

"The king of Israel sent to the place which the man of God told him and warned him of; and he saved himself there, not once nor twice."—Read II. Kings 6:8-13.

Anyone who has studied the increasingly complicated and urgent automobile problem, and has watched the terribly lengthening list of fatalities, knows that most of the accidents take place at a comparatively few spots. The authorities know these places and mark them with danger signals. But still the crashes, and still the deaths.

It is just that way on the roads of life. We know the danger spots. We have our Elishas, as the king of Israel had, who point out the places where our foes are lurking. We are familiar with our temptations, and yet we go to meet them, we seek them out, and when the crash comes, we blame Providence. Verily the ways of men are foolish beyond reckoning.

Prayer—Thy warnings, O God, are faithful and wise. Thou dost speak to our conscience in a clear voice, and we always know better when we sin. Strengthen us to do thy will and to walk in thy ways. Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

DIAMONDS ON THE SURFACE.

"God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good."—Read Gen. 1:27-31.

Comparatively few diamonds are now obtained from mines. Instead, steam shovels are employed to scoop up the sand from the surface, from which the diamonds are easily sorted. There are few diamonds, of course, to an immense amount of sand; but also there were few diamonds to an immense amount of rock far down in the bowels of the earth; and the surface method is much less difficult than the deep mining.

There are people who think that the diamonds of human character and of God's goodness are only to be found by deep digging; and they seldom care to take the trouble for that. But really the loveliest things are on the surface of life as well as in the depths. In the events of every day and among the commonplace people you can find, if you look for them, rare gems of goodness, of heroism, and of beauty.

It is only a matter of getting a steam shovel. And the steam shovel is sympathy.

Prayer—Our blessed Redeemer, how ready thou wert to see the charm in character, all around thee, in the most unlikely persons. It was thy love that found it all, and we may find it if thy love dwells in us. So abide with us, dear Lord, and the common world will gleam with loveliness. Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SOURCE OF JOY.

By W. T. MEACHAM.

"Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice."—Phil. 4:4.

To the Christian who is living near to the throne of grace, there are sources of joy unknown to all others. He can even rejoice in tribulation and "be in the Lord," although pain, and suffering and distress fall to his lot. Not that he is insensible to trial and affliction, or that he steels himself to their endurance; not that he can gaze unmoved on the wreck of all his hopes, or behold, without a tear of agony, the loved and cherished laid in the silent grave. No, no, his affections are warm and tender, his sympathies are deeper and stronger, his sensibilities are more substantial and much livelier, than those of the worldling.

He can feel and realize more intensely the stroke of affliction, the severance of fond ties, the robbing of earthly joys; but then he knows where he can go for comfort, peace, satisfaction, and hope. He knows that Jesus has promised to give the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness, and he remembers the words of the Saviour, "Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full."

The one great source of the Christian's joy in Christ. This, in manner, swallows all the rest. The Christian rejoices because he has found Christ, the friend that sticketh closer than a brother. The words of the Apostle is "rejoice in the Lord," and again he has said, "we rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." St. Peter, referring to the surpassing joy attained by many of these early Christians, says, "in whom believing, ye rejoiced with joy unspeakable, and full of glory." We find similar language used in the Old Testament. David says, "Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous, at the remembrance of holiness," and Isaiah, speaking of true Israel, declares, "Thou shalt rejoice in the Lord, and glory in the Holy One of Israel." The prophet Joel, says, "Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God." Under the awful pressure of affliction, Habakuk declares he "will rejoice in the Lord; he will joy in the God of his salvation."

Christ is the only source of the believer's joy: God is incarnate, God the Son in our nature, coming down to our low estate to testify his love and compassion for us. Oh, there are no words which can inspire the heart with fuller joy than these, when uttered in sincerity: "He who was rich, for my sake became poor." He who was rich—rich in the everlasting love of the Father, rich in the adoration of the heavenly host, rich in the glories of his own divinity, rich in the great worlds he had created by a word; yet became poor, so poor that he had no place to lay his head, so poor that when he asked for water they gave him vinegar, so poor that his unpillowed head was crowned with thorns in death; and all for my sins, for my transgressions, bruised for my iniquities, bearing my sins in his own body on the tree; sorrowing under them, enduring all their punishment and blotting them out forever.

Is not this a source of real joy, that Jesus lived and suffered and died for you and for the world, that he paid all that great debt for all, which we owed to law and justice, and washed away the stain of your guilt in his own most precious blood?

Is it not a source of real joy to every Christian to know that the Crucified is now the glorified; that he rose triumphant from the grave, and ascended into glory; that he is seated at God's right hand, to appear as the High Priest and intercessor of his people. This thought has ever been a well-spring of joy to all believers.

It has strengthened his faith in many a bitter draught. Jesus, the changeless friend, the sympathetic brother, our undying, ever-living head, who has promised to his people all sufficient grace now and certain endless glory hereafter. All Christians rejoice in the thought that Christ not only appears in the presence of God for us, but is ever present with his church and people on earth.

"I am with you always even unto the end."

"I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you."

He is watching over and gathering to himself a chosen people, chosen of God, the gift of the Father, the purchase of his blood; and he is supplying all our wants, bestowing all needful blessings, and preparing us for the enjoyment of his heavenly kingdom.

Can we not as Christians of God rejoice in such thoughts as these, and will we not bear witness that, through all our troubles and trials, the faithfulness of our Saviour's love has been the very joy of our hearts?

We have had many crosses and losses. Has he ever deserted us? We have been in severe afflictions, and have seen the flowers of many a sweet hope wither and decay. Did our Great Friend desert us then? Others may have proved faithless, which they sometimes do, all other help may have failed you, the help of friends, promised help, expected help—all may be as a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal; it may be as foot-steps in the sand—but has Christ ever failed us? He has ever been true to every promise but we have, as his children, been almost a complete failure.

Could we, in the saddest hour and darkest grief, say to him, Lord thou hast promised what thou didst not perform? Can we not bear witness concerning the past, not one good thing hath failed, of all that the Lord hath promised, all has come true.

Then when they appeared at the bar of heaven, he was there to welcome them, with one voice the answer would be "No." In all of our troubles, in all bitterness of death, in all agonies of our passing moments, in all the solemnity of the judgment seat, he has been with us, a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.

The gloom of death's valley will be radiant with his smile, its loneliness will be brightened by his presence, its silence will be broken by his voice, its separation will be cheered, supported and strengthened by his encircling arms.

He welcomes us to a blissful home of light and love. And if Christ is the source of satisfaction to his people, he has communicated to them ten thousand other sources of joy, all of them connected with his cross and with his love.

No one but a Christian can say, "I will go unto God my exceeding joy, the Lord Jehovah is my strength and song."

HELP FROM PAST DELIVERANCES.

Sir Francis Drake being in a dangerous storm in the Thames, was heard to say, "Must I who have escaped the rage of the ocean, be drowned in a ditch?" Will you, experienced saints, who have passed through a world of tribulation, lie down and die of despair, or give up your profession because you are at the present moment passing through some light affliction? Let your past preservation inspire you with courage, and constraint you to brave all storms for Jesus' sake. Courage for the present is strengthened by the memory of past deliverances.—Spurgeon.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our hearts, at the Christian Orphanage, were made to feel sad last week when a telegram conveyed to us the sad news of the sudden death of Miss Sadie Boyd, who made her home with her sister, Mrs. L. E. Carlton, near Paces, Va.

The entire Orphanage family knew that death had snatched from us one of our loyal friends and supporters in this work and we are bowed in sorrow. Miss Sadie, as we all called her, has been interested in the Christian Orphanage for a number of years and has often come to our rescue when we needed her most. It would take some time and much space to enumerate all the good deeds she has done to help our little children here. Some years ago when it became necessary to build the building known on our campus as "Johnston Hall," she took an active part in raising money with which to build it in order that the little children (fatherless and motherless) might have a home and gave liberally of her own means to put the project across.

Several years ago, after we had an opportunity to buy a tract of land on which to produce wheat to make bread for the children, she had a liberal share in making it possible to make this much-needed purchase. By these two deeds of love she helped to make a home for the fatherless and motherless children, and bread to sustain their little bodies. As the years roll by her unselfish deeds will live on and little children will have a home and food to eat at the Christian Orphanage because of her abiding interest and sacrifice.

She lived not for herself but for others, and has gone to live in that beautiful world above, and we mourn our loss but her good deeds will live on.

THE NEGLECTED BIBLE.

A remarkable story about an exceedingly costly jewel that for many years was considered of no more value than a mere pebble was related in The Youth's Companion.

Gustaf Gillman, a Chicago lapidary, was at work in his shop, according to the narrative, when John Mihok, of Omaha, entered. Mihok, who was a laborer, drew out of his pocket a rough, red stone and handed it to Gillman, "I want you to cut and polish this," said Mihok. "Where did you get it?" gasped Gillman, as his eyes almost popped out of his head. "My father picked it up in Hungary fifty years ago," was the reply of Mihok. "He thought it was a pretty pebble. When I arrived in this country I found it in my valise. It has been lying around the house ever since. The children played with it. My last baby cut his teeth on it.

"One night I dreamed it was a diamond and worth a lot of money; but it's not a diamond; it's red." "No, it's a pigeon's blood ruby," said Gillman. "What might it be worth," was the question of Mihok. "I'd say anywhere from one hundred thousand to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars," answered Gillman; and Mihok lessened against the door.

The big rough stone, we are told, cut to a flawless ruby of twenty-three and nine-tenths carats. It is believed to be the largest ruby in this country and possibly in the world.

How sad it is that in many homes the Book that is worth more than many jewels is neglected and considered of little value!—The Christian Visitor.

(Any book reviewed in this Department may be had of THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the publisher's price.)

THE INFLUENCE OF DIFFERENT STIMULI UPON PRECEDING BONDS, by J. M. Stephens. 83 pp. $1.50.

Dr. Stephens essays to examine the law of effect. He undertakes to show that the essential element of the law of effect is necessary to the very concept of adaptive learning and further that it may be described in materialistic terms. The dissertation might well be entitled, "In Defense of Behaviorism."

HE UPSET THE WORLD, by Bruce Barton. Bobbs Merrill Co. 186 pp. $2.00.

This interpretation of Paul is thoroughly characteristic of Bruce Barton, who has a way of seeing historic persons in modern terms and settings. He has Paul born in Boston and educated in Washington, which is a composite of New York and the National Capital, and there he has him meet such celebrities as Cardinal Farley, Bishop Manning, Harry Emerson Fosdick, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Owen D. Young, the Justices of the U. S. Supreme Court, etc. Paul, whom Mr. Barton held an antipathy for, lives for him anew in these stirring pages and will live also for the reader. Here is a real portrait, not a photograph.

As the interpretation proceeds, Paul becomes a failure at 40, accepts the buffetings of fate on "his chin," fights one of the decisive battles of the world with the apostles at Jerusalem, plans to introduce the gospel into Spain, which he never does—all of which insights make Paul a typical 20th century American go-getter and therefore attractive to read about.

Mr. Barton does not enter into matters of scholarship. He thinks the scholars have injured the man Paul. He sidesteps also the theological twist Paul gave Jesus' way of life. All these matters are alien to the purpose Mr. Barton has in mind, to present Paul not as a saint, but as a man, a man who made mistakes, had the fighting spirit, was ungainly in personal appearance, and yet had such leadership qualities that he arrived on the top of the earth—the type of man an expert advertising genius will admire in any generation or nook of the planet. You will appreciate Paul after reading these electric pages.

THE WEALTH OF THE DEAD SEA.

There are increasing results accruing from the conquest of Palestine by Lord Allenby beyond that of the destruction of the Turkish power over the Holy Land and the restoration of Palestine as the homeland of the Jews. Every possible endeavor has been made to develop the land agriculturally, and investigations have been made as to water possibilities and possibilities for oil and other minerals. The most startling discovery has been the enormous wealth contained in the Dead Sea. This body of water, nearly sixty miles long and twelve miles wide, and 1,290 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, has for centuries been the wonder among the peoples of the earth. Five million tons of water flow into this lake every day, and yet it has no outlet. Experts representing the Imperial Chemical Industry Company of London have investigated the wealth of the Dead Sea, and their report seems almost impossible of belief. These chemical engineers have evaluated the mineral wealth of the Dead Sea at such figures as to all other earnings of modern industry pale into insignificance before it. They estimate that the Dead Sea contains more than a billion and a quarter tons of potash, valued at seventy billions of dollars; over eight million tons of bromide valued at two hundred and fifty billion dollars, and common salt, gypsum, and magnesium in such quantities as to bring the aggregate value to the estimate of somewhere between a trillion and a trillion and a half dollars. Figures like these are beyond the human imagination, but it is a striking comment on man's mastery over nature that he may be able to extract such wealth from the Dead Sea.—Florida Baptist Witness.

A minister's reputation is something very delicate. To live so as to be above suspicion is a necessary aim. At the same time the mind is set on doing the right. The ideal in all things is Christ. If the minister can transfer Christ to his own spirit he can live above worry.

ELON COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

MARRIAGES

CHAPMAN—ROBERTS.

A simple but beautiful marriage was solemnized on Thursday morning, June 16th, at 11:30 o'clock, at the home of Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Roberts, of Windsor, Va., when their daughter, Emma Alberta, became the bride of Mr. Frederick Perry Chapman. Only the immediate members of the family were present.

The lower floor of the home was decorated with potted plants, ferns and vases and baskets of delphinium, sweet peas, and Queen Anne's lace.

Miss Charlotte Roberts played the wedding music: Nevin's "Venetian Love Song," was followed by the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin, to the strains of which the bridal couple entered together and took their places before the officiating minister, Rev. J. M. Roberts, father of the bride, who used the impressive ring ceremony.

The bride wore an ensemble of poudre blue flat crepe, the blouse being of ashes of roses chiffon and point lace, with accessories to match, and she carried an arm bouquet of delphinium, pink sweet peas and lace flowers.

Mrs. Chapman is a graduate of Elon College, and for the past year has been a member of the Smithfield, Va., High School faculty.

Mr. Chapman, who is a progressive young business man of Smithfield, received his education at Randolph-Macon and is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. James T. Chapman.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served, immediately after which Mr. and Mrs. Chapman left for a two-weeks' wedding trip through the Valley of Virginia to Washington, Atlantic City and other places of interest.

On their return they will make their home in Smithfield.

Great Britain and the Race Track.—

The United Press tells us that race-track betting is on the increase in Great Britain. $2,291,000 more was wagered in 1931 than in 1930. Nearly 12,500,000 bets were registered on the wagering machines during the year, with a turnover of over $14,000,000. This amount, of course, does not include the large amounts bet privately on racing, nor wagers on other sports and games. Our own country seems able to forget the depression when the wish is there, for only recently more than 70,000 people spent nearly $500,000 to see a prize fight in New York.

Unknown Soldier's Tomb Completed.—

At a total cost of $400,000, the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, in the national cemetery at Arlington, Va., has finally been completed. The sarcophagus is eleven feet high, nine feet wide, and is of white marble, matching the amphitheatre in the rear. It is carved from a single block of Colorado marble. On the front panel are the figures of Peace, Victory, and Valor. Each side of the sarcophagus is divided into three panels by Doric pilasters, and in each panel is carved an inverted wreath. No one knows the name of the soldier buried there, but the nation honors him and his brave comrades who sleep in unknown graves here and abroad.

A Judge's Remedy.—

Among other evils that seem to be on the increase is that of divorce, and there is one man who might well speak with authority as to their causes. Judge Joseph Sabath of Chicago, has the reputation of having presided in more divorce suits in court than any other man in the world. From his background of experience he has this to say: "Divorce can only be prevented by keeping the flame of love from dying out. When affection goes out, hatred comes in. True love is born of religious faith, and to preserve home life it must be made spiritual. For that reason I believe in the sanctity of marriage and in the sacredness of family ties. The greatest defense of marital happiness and of the maintenance of the integrity of the home is the open Bible, daily prayers about the family altar and the practice of the principles of religion."

New York Savings Banks and Dividends.—

On July 1st, the 146 mutual savings banks of New York State credited their depositors with interest to the amount of $47,000,000. At this time attention was called to the fact that not one of these banks has ever failed to pay a dividend since its founding, which in some cases means more than a century. The Bank of Savings has, since 1819, paid its depositor-owners $189,000,000 in dividends. The Bowery Savings Bank, which is the largest of all, made its 216th payment; and there are five other banks which have unbroken records running over a century. The oldest account is in the Bank of Savings. A depositor put therein $10 in 1819, and added another $5 in 1820. There have never been any additional deposits, nor has there been any withdrawals, though the account has been kept alive by heirs of the original depositor. It now amounts to $3,100.

Titanium.—

Titanium is used in increasing quantities to replace other paint pigments, such as white lead, zinc oxide and lithopone. For many years white lead was practically the only white pigment, and it is still used in greatest volume. Then came zinc oxide, followed by lithopone, which is another compound of zinc, which while third in point of years now exceeds zinc oxide in amount used. Titanium oxide is the youngest in point of time when volume production is considered, although it was used more than sixty years ago in Great Britain for painting the bottoms of ships. A great deal of secrecy surrounds the whole industry. The pure metal is both rare and unimportant, but the oxide ores are quite plentiful, abounding in Virginia and Florida. The great value of titanium oxide is the covering power of the paint made therefrom. More expensive by the pound, it is said to cost less per foot of covered surface.

Lausanne Conference Non-Conclusive.—

Many were the predictions of failure for the Lausanne Conference. It was hardly thought by anyone who stopped to reason the matter out, that France would yield what Germany demanded, or that Germany would cease to demand more than she thought possible to obtain. Even with its more liberal government in control, France wishes to salvage as much as possible of promised reparations, and Germany has given the flat answer that she will pay nothing more. England wants to see something constructive started, and there is a possibility that there will be a committee to work out some scheme whereby the reparations totals may be made small enough that Germany may be induced to accept them, and yet tangible enough that France may save her political face. This agreement will, no doubt, be coupled with a conditional agreement that the United States write down still further its war debts. Thus, the United States again becomes the center about which the whole matter revolves. It is hoped that the United States will be able to use the pressure of these war debts to force at least a partial acceptance of her plea for the reduction of armaments by the countries concerned.

The Democratic Wet Plank.—

"The Democratic wet plank for the first time in the history of American politics makes the Eighteenth Amendment a party issue and support of national prohibition repeal a test of democracy and of party membership." This statement is from the pen of Daniel A. Poling, and it gives rise to a question as to whether one can vote the National Democratic ticket next fall without turning his back absolutely upon the Eighteenth Amendment. Mr. Poling favors neither the repeal plank of the Democratic party nor the submission plank offered by the Republicans, but urges that dries, the nation over, support the dry candidates, regardless of their party affiliation. It seems to us that the Democratic party would have done a great service for the entire nation, had it been content even to follow the lead of the Republicans, for with all of their boastings, we believe that it is impossible to repeal at this time, and nullification is even too serious a matter for them to consider as a party. It is true that the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment will not immediately bring back the barroom to the so-called dry States, but we venture to state that barrooms would be opened on the principal streets of all the larger cities in the wet States within three days of the time that the amendment would be repealed. If there is any plan whereby temperance can be promoted to a greater degree than by the present, let us have it, but by all means hold to the life-line until the life-boat picks us up.

Depression Causes Boom!—

A contemporary says: "Gold-mining has its depressions during booms, and its booms during depressions." The reason for this is that during times of depression, the gold dollar will buy more than at any other time. "Money talks" at all times, but in times of depression it talks louder than ever. Airplanes are being used to reach some of the prospective and promising mines in the far north, having taken the place of the slower, if cheaper (?) dog sleds. There have been several attempts to open up the mines in North Carolina, which at one time produced gold in workable quantities, and in the old mines of the West we find unemployed men going out to old placer workings, sometimes with pick and shovel, and sometimes with more modern equipment. We are told that in most cases they are making a living, and in some cases they are laying aside quite a bit above that. During the summer thirty students from the College of Mines of Washington State College will go placer-mining in that State for a company operating there. Several hundred other students will go it on their own in Washington, Montana, Oregon and Idaho. So keen has the interest become that several companies have developed small portable machines that will wash around a ton of gravel an hour, and are said to be very economical in the use of water, which is quite an item in many of the semi-arid places where gold is found. Not only are these small-scale operators looking over the once-discarded gold mines, but the larger mining companies are reopening old workings and, with the aid of modern machinery, making them well worth while.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Dr. and Mrs. Edwin C. Gillette are vacationing in the region of Asheville for the month of July.

Dr. and Mrs. Lewis H. Keller, of Holly Hill, Fla., were visitors in the Jacksonville office this week. They have gone to Tryon, N. C., for the summer months, Dr. Keller supplying the Erskine Memorial Congregational Church of that city.

A man is a method, a progressive arrangement, a selecting principle, gathering his like to him, wherever he goes. He is like one of those booms which are set out from the shore on rivers to catch driftwood, or like the lodestone among splinters of steel.—Emerson.

Well, if any CHRISTIAN SUN reader this week misses what "V. E." writes on "Born in the Hills," take our advice and read it. It tells a joyous story, indeed, of life, love, victory. And there are others like this to follow. SUN readers had better look out for them—read them and get a thrill.

The Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention meets with New Hope Church, July 12th and 13th. Rev. R. A. Whitten, Henderson, N. C., is president, and requests that all Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies of the Convention be represented in the two-day session.

Rev. W. H. Tillman, of Crestview, Fla., Rev. M. L. Thrasher, of Andalusia, Ala., and Rev. C. W. Smith, of Phenix City, Ala., conveyed their parties to Demorest, where they were well entertained by Rev. H. B. Mowbray and the local people over night. There was happy reunion and fine fellowship at Blue Ridge.

Evarts, Ky., Christian Endeavorers to the number of twenty-two went to the Christian Life Conference at Corbin, where they won the prize for the best participation. Thirty-six Endeavorers who remained at home held a good meeting in the absence of the prize-winning delegation. This young people's conference is to be at Evarts next year.

Noble Cordell, of Pine Knot, Ky., and the son of the chairman of the building committee of the church, made it possible for the carloads of young people from Pine Knot to attend the Corbin Conference by building up of two cars out of the parts of junked cars. Rev. Sidney Davies headed the delegation, which rivaled the Evarts group for first honors in the conference.

The Damascus Christian Church at Sunbury, N. C., presented its children's program Sunday evening, June 26th. The program consisted of the scripture reading, miscellaneous readings and songs, a pantomime entitled "Jesus Calls Us O'er the Tumult," and a pageant entitled "The Daughter of Jairus." Special music was furnished by the choir of Damascus Church and Miss Lydie Nixon.

SUN readers sure missed the Suffolk Letter and the usual editorial by W. W. S. last week and this. We regret to report that our beloved and ever faithful Dr. W. W. Staley has been in much pain from an attack in his eye of some eye disease. He has suffered much, but was feeling better last Sunday when the editor of THE SUN visited him in Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va. We devoutly trust he will soon be fully recovered.

We congratulate our friend, Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, Dover, Del., on the good fortune he is enjoying in being permitted to take a trip this summer to the Holy Land and to attend the summer sessions of the Oriental School of Research at Jerusalem. Dr. Helfenstein is to be on tour until the first of September, having sailed from New York on the night of Tuesday, June 28th. His uncle, Dr. S. Q. Helfenstein, is to serve the Dover pastorate until August 1st.

Rev. Carl H. Corwin, superintendent of the West Tampa Mission, and pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational Church of West Tampa, Florida, reports that the attendance is keeping up well for the summer season. They have a Sunday School of over one hundred and a large Christian Endeavor Society. At the rally of the societies of the county they won the cup again for the banner attendance. They are also having a very inspiring daily vacation Bible school with an attendance of seventy-one children and young people.

The Salisbury Church is rejoicing over the extensive improvements of the interior of the building. A large crowd greeted the pastor on Sunday morning, June 26th, the opening day. Rev. Theron Zimmerman begins as assistant summer pastor of Trinity Parish, July 3rd. Most of his time will be given to Salisbury, but he will also serve for about two weeks in Winston-Salem and Salem Chapel. He is a senior in Yale University School of Religion. He brings with him his happy bride—they were recently married at her home in Ohio.

We congratulate Prof. E. S. Johnson on being elected superintendent of the schools of Washington, N. C., in which city he had been principal of the high school for the past seven years. He was recently elected to succeed Superintendent M. H. Roland, who has accepted the superintendency of the Burlington, N. C., public schools. Prof. Johnson was a star in Elon athletics and an honor graduate of Elon College with the degree of A. B. He was esteemed and popular as a student at Elon and we are not surprised that he has made good in the work and profession of his choice.

There are now in schools for the blind in the United States about five hundred children who have lost their eyesight as a result of accidents chiefly through the use of fire-works, air-rifles, cap-pistols and toy guns. According to C. Edith Kirby, statistician, each year between 750 and 1,000 children suffer accidentally eye injuries in the United States and about 70 children are actually and permanently made blind by accidents, a very large proportion of which accidents occur on the Fourth of July, and a few days preceding and following, when fire-crackers, toy guns, etc., are in such common use.

Blue Ridge pilgrims from the western tier of the Southeastern States were en route to the annual leadership training assembly on Monday, June 27th. The original bases of the cars were from Ohio to West Florida. Miss Mildred Taylor came from the Ohio young people's conference to Kentucky, and brought a load from Corbin via Pineville. Mr. William Loos brought his passengers from Evarts via Pineville. Mr. Gerald Smith started at Thorsby, gathering delegates in Alabama and Tennessee, and traveling via Knoxville, as did also Dr. Raymond and his Chattanooga party, and Dr. and Mrs. Harper from Nashville.

Rev. Park W. Fisher, who is now at Brass-town, N. C., went from the Atlanta Theological Seminary in Knott County, Ky., to Leburn, which is between the creeks "Kingdom Come" and "Hell-for-Sartin." His work was at Mill Creek. Don L. West, who taught in the Hindman Settlement School two years ago, has reorganized at Mill Creek the second Sunday School in the county. With three helpers, Jack Adams, James Still and Horace Walker Fletcher, he is conducting Vacation Bible School, Boy Scout and recreation work for the county. Clearing a baseball diamond at the county seat is a part of the program for needed recreation.

We wish to call attention to the special combination subscription offer which is made on page five of this issue. We hope that our Christian ministers will avail themselves of this opportunity of taking The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty. We would also suggest to Congregational ministers that it is a wonderful opportunity, if they are now taking The Congregationalist and Herald, to get THE CHRISTIAN SUN without much additional cost. Ministers would also do well to solicit combination subscriptions among their members. The man who takes his church papers is usually a man who supports the minister.

We are passing on our best wishes and congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Simpson, Summerfield, N. C. Mrs. Simpson, until her marriage at the Christian parsonage in Martinsville, Va., at 10:30 A. M., June 22nd, was Miss Essie Mae Truitt, one of Elon's fine graduates, a sister of Rev. John G. Truitt, Dayton, Ohio. Mr. Robert Simpson, the happy groom, received his education at Guilford College and was president of the Stokesdale, N. C., Bank, where he has been associated for several years. Mrs. Simpson, since her graduation at Elon, has been a very successful teacher in Bethel High School. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson are deservedly popular and have a wide circle of friends who will join in our felicitations.

The North Carolina S. S. S. men this year will be glad to hear from or see their new friends in this region this year. They are: John Chapman, of Massachusetts, at Asheville; "Eddie" DuBois, of Gainesville, Fla., at Chapel Hill; Theron Zimmerman, of Ohio, at Trinity Parish; and Arthur Swartz, of Pennsylvania, at Sophia Larger Parish and Albemarle. The Georgia S. S. S. men include Mr. DuBois and Mr. Swartz, together with Mr. Arnold Slater, of Tennessee, and Gregory Williamson, of Massachusetts. Mr. Slater will be located in Cochran and in South Georgia Friendship Parish, while Mr. Williams will be in Columbus, Ga. Miss Mildred Rister, of Headland, Ala., and Miss Dorothy Grigsby, of Kodak, Tenn., will also be special workers in Georgia. The outlook for these States under the leadership of these splendid young leaders is very bright.

The Presbyterians of the Orange Presbytery put on a splendid program for their young people in their seventh annual meeting at Elon College last week. The subjects taught by competent leaders were: Bible, Rev. N. N. Fleming and Rev. W. M. Baker; Foreign Missions, Rev. M. S. Huske; Home Missions, Rev. W. R. Turner; Stewardship, Rev. A. P. Dickinson; Kingdom Highways, Mrs. W. M. Baker; Vespers, Rev. W. M. Baker; Recreation, Mrs. Clyde Cole; Counselors, Rev. N. N. Fleming and Mrs. Clyde Cole. Special speakers for the evenings were Rev. A. P. Dickson, Rev. M. S. Huske, Dr. R. A. Lapsley, Jr., and Carl Pritchette. There were more than seventy-five in attendance, and it was a delight to have this splendid and well-behaved group of teachers and young people in the buildings and on the campus at Elon. We trust they will keep on holding their annual sessions here.

Our sympathies are again extended to Mrs. L. E. Carlton, Carlbrook, Paces, Va., who, in less than a week from the time she buried her only sister, Miss Sadie Boyd, was called upon to lament the going away of one of her two brothers, Ira William Boyd, who died at the hospital in Henderson, N. C., on Tuesday evening, June 28th. The service was conducted from the home at Henderson, N. C., where Bro. Boyd had resided for several years, and interment was in the cemetery at Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax County, Va. He leaves to mourn their loss a widow, Mrs. Ann Boyd, and the following children: Archer, Robert, Scott, Luther, Ray, Eliza and Eugenia; one brother, A. W. Boyd, of Chase City, Va., and one sister, Mrs. Luther E. Carlton. While living in Henderson Bro. Boyd was trustee of the Methodist Protestant Church. The bereaved family have our deepest sympathy.

Rev. S. E. Madren, Route 1, Henderson, pastor of Liberty (Vance) Church, June 29th, writes: "In addition to our mission offering, we passed out several of the coin cards, seventeen of which have come in with a dollar each, and I am sending you check for the $17.00." We appreciate each and every contributor in the Liberty Church whose names were furnished. The coin card is certainly a convenient arrangement to any and every one who is willing to make denial even in a small way to the cause of Missions and the glory of God. Pastor Madren adds: "I am greatly enjoying the work at Liberty. It is a pleasure and a joy to work for and live among these people. Our meeting begins the third Sunday in July. We are having prayer meetings now, three or four a week, in the homes of the community. These prayer services are in preparation for our revival." Bro. Madren has certainly begun in the right way to have a revival, since it is through prayer that the people of God are revived.

THE COIN CARD PLAN.

The American Board, which originated and is cooperating in promoting the coin card plan, declares in a recent bulletin, "that it will gradually be made a success." At the moment of this writing there are actually 350,000 "Dollar Coin Cards" which have been distributed to church members, but have not been heard from as yet. "A total of 417,000 were actually distributed. Somewhere they have been covered up with a newspaper or poked into a cubby-hole, or forgotten in a drawer. There is yet an opportunity for these collection cards to be placed on the collection plate to help lift the burdens of the Board and the mission work." Surely, CHRISTIAN SUN readers who have received the coin cards will fill and return them. I have distributed over 3,000, and they are beginning to come in. Here is hoping that none "will be covered up with a newspaper or forgotten in a drawer or somewhere."

J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Sec'y.

FORT MYERS, FLORIDA.

The Community Congregational Church of Fort Myers, Fla., of which Rev. Orvis T. Anderson is pastor, recently completed the twenty-seven consecutive Sunday evening forum meetings begun in November. The interest and attendance was maintained until the end of the series and from first to last attracted considerable interest and an unusual amount of publicity. The subjects discussed in these forum meetings were religious, semi-religious, social and economic. The church has joined three other churches in Sunday evening services to be continued through June, July and August.

These services are under a council of the young people's societies of the cooperating churches and the young people have full charge of the services, calling on the ministers only for the sermons and prayers.

Mr. Anderson gave an address before the local Rotary Club on "What May Happen in Our World Crisis," which awakened considerable interest in the community and which another civic organization asked him to repeat at a public meeting held at the county court-house. The local Rotary Club authorized copies of the address to be sent to the Governor of Rotary in the State and to Rotary International headquarters. Since this was done, Mr. Anderson has been asked if he would agree to give addresses on economic questions before other Rotary Clubs in the State. He has promised to do so, if invited by clubs, during the month of August. The three addresses which he has consented to give are: "What Has Happened to the World—and Why?" "What May Happen in Our World Crisis?" and "Banks and the Banking Situation."

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

The Interstate Commerce Commission declared in a decision the other day that it has "no authority to enforce the Ten Commandments nor any one of them." Of course not, but the assertion raises the question, regardless of enforcing powers, "How does America stand in relation to the observance of the Ten Commandments?" Let us consider them in order, in condensed form:

1. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." This obviously is a land which has many gods before him. Most of the tribulations of ancient Israel were caused, according to the biblical records, by their wandering off after strange gods. The worship of Jehovah is below par, to say the least, in America.

2. "Thou shalt not make thee any graven image." A dead letter.

3. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." It is being done in the best society, as well as in the worst.

4. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Our memories in this particular are somewhat defective, and we are not at all sure what "keeping it holy" means.

5. "Honor thy father and thy mother." There is probably less of this in America than in any other country.

6. "Thou shalt not kill." America leads the world in killers.

7. "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Rather a conventional offense in these United States.

8. "Thou shalt not steal." "Oh, yeah?" seems

9. "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." Let the courts testify as to the observance of this command.

10. "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, nor anything that is his." Almost universally violated.

These commands are a concise statement of the basic essentials of an orderly civilization. Though they were promulgated more than 3,000 years ago, they are still in force in the written or unwritten statutes of human society, and any society, or any people, that ignores them or persistently violates them, is bound to deteriorate. Regardless of the forms of religious belief, and whether we like it or not, the moral law is necessarily supreme in the relations of civilized mankind and if not obeyed or enforced it creates its own penalties. The Ten Commandments ought to be displayed in every church and every court and inscribed upon the conscience of every citizen.—An Editorial in St. Louis Globe Democrat.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A GOODLY COMPANY.

It is said that "a dollar is judged and valued by the company it keeps." So is a person. One's life certainly is worth more, and is safer, too, when in good company than in bad.

That was, indeed, "good company" President Smith presented to us through THE CHRISTIAN SUN last week. This writer rejoiced in heart when he saw his own name there. He recalls that when quite a lad his parents taught him to keep good company or stay at home. Well, he was keeping good company last week. There were 339 others and every name of them looked good. President Smith was telling us through THE SUN that 340 names now compose that goodly company who pledge to pay $1.00 a month in each of the twelve months of the year as a donation to Elon College. That is good. That is great. That gets us somewhere. It sounds like a marriage bell, or a Christmas chime, carrying joy and assurance in its tone.

Some one asked this writer a while ago, "Where is the individual with money who is going to save Elon College?" The reply was, "There are several hundred of us without money, but with eternal love, loyalty and devotion, which means money plus. Out of our want, out of our need, a great troop of us are just going to join together, and since we can not pay $100.00, or half of it (either one of us, if we had to), all of us together will pay each month as many dollars as there were individuals of us. When 300 of us get together, we will pay $300.00 a month—$3,600.00 a year. When 500 of us get together we will pay $500.00 a month—$6,000.00 a year. When our number gets to a thousand, we will pay $1,000.00 a month—$12,000.00 per year. When the mantle of love and loyalty shall be flung over the shoulders and warm the hearts of 5,000 of us, we will pay $5,000.00 a month—$60,000.00 a year. Then Elon College will have a foundation and men of means will take knowledge of us, and out of their abundance will join our goodly company, to the joy of all and the salvation of the college. People who have big money usually walk by sight, as far as they can, in investing that money. When they see and can be shown that there are those who walk by faith through self-denial, then faith reaps its rewards and victory comes. Give Elon a steady income from hundreds of constant, even though very small givers, and you will see that current broadening and deepening into a mighty stream.

One is reminded, as one reads the list, and contemplates the swelling volume thereof, of the vision the Lord gave to Ezekiel: "He brought me through the waters; the waters were to the ankles." Then, there was another measuring, and again, "He brought me through the waters; the waters were to the knees." Then he measured again and, "He brought me through; the waters were to the loins." Afterwards he measured, and then, "It was a river that I could not pass over, for the waters were risen, waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over." This stream of monthly givers in the modest sum of $1.00 each seems shallow now, unable to bear a light craft, much less the weight of a great institution, but under God, that stream will deepen and broaden until this great institution, which has already carried so many hundreds from ignorance into the light and life of learning and Christian graces, will be made safe and secure for the hundreds of boys and girls yet to come. That list of monthly givers is, indeed, good company to be in.

A MIRACLE MAN.

There is not any other way to think of him. After a hundred years (he was born May 21, 1832, in Yorkshire, England), one cannot think of Hudson Taylor except as a miracle man. God simply wrought a miracle before the eyes of the world and suggested that his mother and father call that miracle Hudson Taylor. No, he could not get a college education; he had to quit school at thirteen. And yet, no doubt, if the history of the past century carries names that surpass that of Hudson Taylor in the matter of knowing some worth-while things in this world.

Well, at any rate, those of us who read history know that at least two men have walked with God. One was called Enoch, and his name is in the Bible; the other was called Hudson Taylor, and his name is in the annals of God as revealed in the salvation of men. One cannot contemplate this man, nor measure him, by any ordinary human standard. The fact is his achievements do not seem to be human; they are superhuman, they are divine, they are indeed another one of the world-great miracles. This young man at the age of twenty-four, just eight years after he could not go to school any more, heard the call of God. The prophets of old heard his voice and gave heed. Ditto Hudson Taylor. For sheer adventure of faith in God, for bold and fearless trust in God, commend us to Hudson Taylor. It was laid upon his heart to go into the interior of China and preach the gospel of the Son of God there, and thereby hangs one of the most marvelous stories ever written, except that it isn't a story; it is now a plain, simple fact. It was in 1866 that this man, away out in the interior of China, on pure simple faith in God, founded what has come to be known as the China Inland Mission. This man believed if he would do his part, God would do his, and God did not disappoint him. He went out with the complete trust in God for support, determining that he would not appeal to man for help, but to God, and that he would not go in debt except to his Creator, and let come what might, he was going to adhere to the teachings of the Bible. Take this item from authentic history:

"As a result of sixty-five years of faithful missionary testimony, this mission founded by Hudson Taylor, has now over 1,200 missionaries on the field, over twice as many as any other society. They are located in 297 inland centers and nearly 2,000 out-stations in sixteen provinces of China. They have won more than 130,000 Chinese to Christ, of whom 75,000 are now living communicants. Today they have over 3,000 enlisted as Chinese Christian workers; of these, 1,900 are volunteers and 57 are ordained pastors. In the last two years, while practically all missionary and philanthropic societies have reported large deficits and decreased budgets, the China Inland Mission, without making public appeals for funds, and without incurring debt, has been able to maintain its usual budget and has equipped and sent out two hundred new missionaries.

"The China Inland Mission leaders do not claim greater faith than is shown by other followers of Christ. They do not claim that their methods and principles are the only ones that conform to New Testament standards. They do not set themselves or their mission as a model for others, but seek prayerfully, intelligently and consistently to follow the example and teachings of Christ and the apostolic missionary methods."

How is that for the work of one man, who yielded himself wholly and fully to God? Surely here is a miracle for which the world cannot give account.

FOR WE KNOW.

The glory and the strength of the Bible is its positiveness. It does not surmise, it asserts. It does not speculate, it declares. It does not hesitate, it announces. It does not give opinions, it reveals truth. Through its pages from cover to cover, we are confronted and comforted with "We know." Think of it! Hundreds of volumes have been written on "Immortality," speculating and theorizing about the hereafter. Over against all these volumes, just put this one declaration of Paul and see how it goes home and abides: "For we know if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

How many thousands of pages have been written on "What Shall a Man Believe?" Over against these theories and speculations, just put the positive statement of Paul's letter to Timothy (even when trouble and trials and tribulations of every kind had harrassed to the limit "the least of all the apostles"), "For I know whom I have believed."

And then over against the philosophies of man bearing on the existence in another state and life, put this from the beloved disciple: "We know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." When the mind is weary of theory and the soul becomes faint in the fog of uncertainty, one may turn to the Bible, like a thirsty body in a hot, sandy desert would turn to a gushing spring and drink, yea drink, out of the very fountain of life. For the Bible does not say, "we think," it says, "we know." And it does.

J. O. A.

He who walks through life with an even temper and a gentle patience—patient with himself, patient with others, patient with difficulties and crosses—he has an everyday greatness beyond that which is won in the battle or chanted in cathedrals.—Dr. Dewey.

WHAT SHALL THIS MAN DO?

The Bible is full of humanity as well as of divinity. The stories of men in the Bible might easily have been written about men of today. After all, history repeats itself, "there is nothing new under the sun," and the dispositions, shortcomings, faults, weaknesses, and natural propensities of men as revealed in the Bible may be seen reproduced in their posterity who live today. In revelation every man can perceive himself as to his character and disposition. Reading these stories should help us to correct our faults and better develop our lives.

In the twenty-first chapter of the Gospel of John there is an account of a very memorable occasion in the life of the apostle Peter. He has just experienced a very definite quiz, an extremely personal catechizing. He is evidently still disturbed and apparently seeking some self-justification. He sees John also following Jesus, and so seeks to change the subject which had been very painful to him and had exposed before the whole group of disciples his weakness on the night of betrayal. There is a question asked and an answer given which can very profitably be pondered by many of us. The question asked by Peter was: "And what shall this man do?" The answer returned by Christ was: "What is that to thee? Follow thou me."

Too many children of God today are like Peter. They are seeking to divert attention from themselves by asking, "What shall this man do?" We are doing this in practically every realm of church work. When conscience pricks us, we all too often begin to seek self-justification by asking about what the other fellow is, or is not, doing. When preaching is heard that rings our number, we retaliate with, "What about the other fellow?" If money is to be raised for the cause of the Lord or mission work should be done, and we know we are not responding as we should, cuttle fishlike, we ask about the other fellow, no better than ourselves, and think we will get the attention of the Lord off of our case on to that of some one else.

Christianity is a supremely personal system. All men will meet God's approval or condemnation personally and without respect to each other's successes or failures. I may be saved though all others are lost, or I may be lost though all others are saved. The four great fundamentals of God's relationship and dealings with men are revealed in Romans 14:10, 11. We must all stand before the judgment seat of God. To God every knee shall bow; to God every tongue shall confess; to God every one of us shall give account.

Every man is a separate, original, and distinct personality. Every individual is possessed of powers no other has, and probably no other ever had or will ever have. God never duplicates. Though he sow a billion flowers in the spring, he never grows any two alike. When God makes a man, he breaks the mold. We being each one an original personality, there must of necessity attach a distinct value to every one of us. There is a work I alone can do. My work is born with me, and unless I discharge it, it ever remains undone. To fill my place should be the supreme desire of my heart and the distinct burden of my effort. I cannot believe in God without believing he plans the universe and everything in it. In these plans he has a place for me, if I will but fit into it. This is neither fatalism nor Calvinism, for I am at liberty to do or to leave undone as I individually choose. Shall I, then, manifest more interest in what the other man is doing than what God expects of me? Or shall I shoulder the responsibility of Christ's sheep and lambs, irrespective of what John does or does not do?

There are many churches not discharging their duty. There are many Christians who do not do their best or what they know is demanded. Shall I follow Christ, irrespective of, and in spite of, the others? Shall I see to it that the congregation of which I am a member carries on unto the uttermost part? Or, in the event it will not, shall I do my best? Is this not a lesson I may learn from that record of the scene by the lake in the early morning? May I now see in Peter a fault that usually looms larger in me?

O, the things left undone because I am thinking of the faults in others rather than those in self! Think of the untaught truth, the unrendered services, the unprayed prayers, and the unspent dollars. All because I am saying to my Lord, "What shall this man do?" We do not intend to be bad; we are not bad at heart; but we leave undone, thoughtlessly, carelessly, and selfishly, what we may do ourselves, while we worry about what the other fellow should have done or should be doing. "What is that to thee? Follow thou me."—F. B. Shepherd in the Gospel Advocate.

WHAT IS IN YOU.

The average man contains enough oxygen, hydrogen, and nitrogen to make $2.45 worth of illuminating gas; and yet he may not be bright enough to throw light on any subject.

He contains enough carbon to make 9,360 lead pencils, yet he may not have a thought worth noting by a single lead pencil.

He contains enough phosphorus to make 800,000 matches and yet he may be a poor stick and therefore a very poor match for any girl.

He contains about sixty lumps of sugar, and yet he may be sour-tempered.

He contains enough iron to make a spike that hold his own weight, and yet he may be a man of putty.

He contains a lot of starch and yet he may have no starch in him.

What is a man? From the scientific viewpoint, about the same amount of chemical elements for every man. From the spiritual viewpoint, elements of endless diversity and of infinitely varied degrees of power.

And you cannot do much toward changing the chemical composition of your body, but you can change the make up of your spirit as you will.—Selected.

Special Combination Subscription Offer!

A special arrangement has been made whereby those who desire to do so may receive both THE CHRISTIAN SUN and The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty for just a little more than they now pay for one of these papers.

Beginning immediately, we will accept subscriptions for the two papers at the price of $3.75 for the combined subscription. This means to SUN readers that for only $1.75 additional they may receive the great wealth of knowledge that The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty brings weekly. Those who are already subscribers for the latter paper may add THE SUN to their list for only 75 cents for the whole year.

You do not have to wait until your subscription to one or the other paper has expired, but send in your subscription now. You will begin immediately to receive the other paper and that which you are already receiving will be marked up a year in advance.

While this offer is open to everyone, it should appeal especially to the pastors and lay workers in the Southeast Convention, and we beg them to take advantage of this opportunity.

It is, of course, understood that under this special offer all subscriptions must be in advance, and must be sent directly to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond, Va., or to The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

SUBSCRIPTION BLANK.

DEAR SIRs:

Please (enter my name as a new subscriber) (advance my present subscription one year) to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and (enter my name as a new subscriber) (advance my subscription one year) to The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

(Please mark out the words not applicable.)

I enclose, herewith, check or money order for $3.75 to cover same.

THE ELON CONFERENCE.

The Youth Movement of the Carolinas and Virginia received one of its greatest inspirations at the Elon College Summer Conference, June 20th-26th. As is usual, the faculty made a difference. At the head stood Rev. F. C. Lester as Dean. Always full of the spirit of youth, always blending well-chosen humor with serious didactics in such a way as to fix the point with pleasing emphasis and always the executive with a well-studied purpose, Dean Lester filled the office full of the life that counts. Of course, Miss Priscilla Chase brought to this assembly of fifty-two registered delegates including the faculty, the proper dignity and symmetry of purpose while the young people themselves furnished enough pep and go to make any conference a success.

But the two mentioned above were by no means all of the faculty. There were: A. R. VanCleave, G. A. Bennett, Pattie Lee Coghill, Mrs. Marian T. Parsons, recently from China, and Ruth Johnson. William T. Scott was also present with his breezy personality and appreciated ability in leading the work with boys.

Of course, the serious work of the conference kept everybody busy. But there was time for recreation. Conducted by the Dean and Mr. Scott, the students visited the Catacombs, the Seven Wonders of the World, the birthplace of George Washington, the Natural Bridge crossing the turbulent Elon waterways, and many other fascinating points of interest. The campus was a place of joy for the evening hours, where students and faculty enjoyed easy walks and friendly conversation. These were happy hours, but not more so than the baseball games and other athletic contests and indoor games in which all joyously joined.

But the best of all was the real work of the students and the work of the faculty. Mrs. Parsons, for example, conducted the morning hours of worship in a beautiful and impressive manner. It was real worship under her fine leadership. The vespers were conducted happily by the young people themselves. This furnished something of a laboratory of the courses given in class. It was a very successful piece of practical effort and practice in applying the things studied for recitation.

The high point of the whole conference was the masterly sermon by Dean Lester, followed by the communion conducted by Rev. Alfred Hurst. This was the time of heart worship and mind development in Christian worship at its best.

It shall not be forgotten that the evening meetings consisted of lectures or addresses given by such men as Prof. Carl C. Taylor, Mrs. Parsons, Rev. John Brice, of Sedalia, with a special quartet which sang as few can sing and inspired all to a higher feeling again and again; and D. D. Carroll of the School of Commerce of the University at Chapel Hill. The concert-recital given by Miss Barbara Chase, assisted by Miss Frances DuPont, was thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed by all.

Much credit is due the management of the conference. Not many could be better.

MILO J. SWEET.

TOYOHICO KAWAGA, DISCIPLE OF CHRIST.

The best known person in Japan today is Toyohiko Kagawa, the preacher, author, philosopher, labor leader and saint of the slums. When just a small boy Kagawa was adopted by a wealthy uncle, whose plan was to train him for a diplomatic position of high rank. With his remarkable ability and his uncle's financial backing there was nothing to prevent Kagawa from achieving a position which would mean that his life would be spent among the political and social leaders of Japan.

Through a Bible class taught by one of our missionaries this remarkable boy came to know and to love the true God. This brought about a complete change in his ambition—instead of a life spent among the great people of his land he chose to labor and live among the poor and humble.

Down into the worst slum section in Kobe he went and there he made his home among the lowest classes of people in his land. He welcomed into his tiny hut all who were in need of help and he shared with them his meager food and scanty coverings. It is any wonder that these people came to love and trust him? Honors and wealth have been offered to Kagawa, but, in the spirit of him whose he is and whom he serves, Kagawa has chosen to invest his life in the service of the humbler folk of Japan. No human power could establish a bond of sympathy between the slum people and this cultured and intellectual leader—it takes the spirit of God in his heart to accomplish this which would otherwise be impossible. Through no effort on his own part to do so, Kagawa has risen to a position of great importance in the affairs of Japan. Although his purpose has ever been to serve unselfishly wherever the need is greatest, he is looked upon by rich and poor as the outstanding leader of Japan today and many even consider him the greatest man of his age.

Kagawa is the originator of the Million Souls Movement, now known as the Kingdom of God Movement, which is no longer confined to Japan, but is quickening the imagination of Christian people everywhere. His aim is to win one million people in Japan for Christ and his service. The irresistible force of his great personality has been given without reserve to this supreme task. Through this movement the message of the gospel has already been brought to vast multitudes in Japan. He intends to go into every Province in Japan and win converts by his personal presence and preaching. In addition to the spoken word, hundreds of thousands of his evangelist books have been sold.

The capacity of Kagawa for work is amazing. Be it remembered that since his young manhood his health has been precarious. He has fought a grim fight against tuberculosis. Sharing his bed years ago with a man afflicted with trachoma, he contracted the disease and ever since his eyes have been weak and painful. He carries in his pocket a small lens which he places to his eyes when he wishes to read. His weight is a little over one hundred and ten pounds.

This man, with physical handicaps that would have daunted the spirit of most men, has pressed on with indomitable courage and with a high sense of divine purpose in his life. By his powers of organization; his writings; his addresses; by the sacrificial quality of his character and service, his influence for good has extended to almost every part of the world.

He is dominated by the principle of love, which he believes to be the essence of Christ's teaching. He is arrayed against all learning, all institutions, all governments, all arts, all religions, which rely on force and reject love. "Love alone can win the world." He is himself the personification of the spirit of love, and lives it out in every human relationship.—S. S. Herald.

THE GRISSOMS AND "OUR HILLS."

(A very personal letter from a young friend—a "shut-in"—who enjoys her hills and has learned to wait upon the Lord.—Ed.):

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

I must tell you that I like these young people who have come to be our neighbors. These Grissoms are good folks. They love the hills so much that I think I shall call them "Our Hilly Grissoms." Bro. Grissom is still looking at the hills. Every time he has an opportunity to stop and look, you can see him feasting his eyes upon these laurel-clad peaks that shut us in. Oh, surely, these hills are for them, or God made the Grissoms for our hills.

I no longer say "my hills," for they are "our hills" now.

And I have heard that the best things are put up in the smallest packages; now I believe this to be true. That little lady you call Mrs. Grissom, is the dearest lady at all.

I am thankful that I am no longer alone. There are two young hearts that wait with me now. And each morning as I watch the sun come up over a blue mountain, I know two more are watching also with the same prayer in their hearts that has been in mine for all these years. Yes, it's a pleasant thought that I am no longer alone.

I thank you for "Our Hilly Grissoms." I doubt if anyone but you could have found them.

It looks good to me to see children passing once more on their way to Sunday School.

Of course, it will take time to do anything here. But I often see in THE SUN where some preacher, in some city like Suffolk, or almost any place, has been busy in his church holding meetings—"made a house-to-house canvass"—and many souls were won for Christ. Now, if they need all that out there where they have walked hand in hand with civilization and Christianity for all these years, can they not have patience with our hills here where we have only had a church for about ten years?

So let us "wait upon the Lord," and give our Hilly Grissoms a chance.

Gratefully,

"VICTORIA OF THE HILLS."

LANETT, ALABAMA.

On the first Sunday in October, I will finish my work with the church at Lanett. I have been with these good people for five years, and notified them last Sunday that I will not be with them another year. So I am giving this notice through THE SUN, that pastors who may be approached may feel free to correspond with the representatives of the church.

I assure them that they will find some as good people here as can be found anywhere.

We have made some progress in these five years, though not what we had hoped to see, but I feel that with the right leader there is a great future for the Lanett Christian Church. May God bless and prosper them with their new pastor, whoever he may be.

Yours in the service of the Master,

J. D. DOLLAR.

Resolved to live with all my might while I live. Resolved, never to lose one moment of time, to improve it in the most profitable way I possibly can. Resolved, never to do anything which I should despise or think meanly of in another. Resolved, never to do anything out of revenge. Resolved, never to do anything which I should be afraid to do if it were the last hour of my life,—Jonathan Edwards.

OUT OF A CLEAR SKY.

A revolver pressed against his temple, there stood the sailor—life a failure, money wasted, character debauched. With nothing left to live for, he planned the end. That his neighbors might not hear the discharge, lowering the weapon for a moment, he stepped to the radio to turn it on at full force. Suddenly he was arrested—a clear, ringing voice out of the air said the thing that makes this story possible.

Having served four years in the United States Navy, W. S. was a full-fledged seaman.

His enlistment was contrary to the wishes and prayers of both father and stepmother. His own mother had died when he was but a child, praying that his life might honor God. Perhaps through over-persuasion and youth's desire to see the world, he affixed his name to the dotted line. There was no turning back. So the boy of twenty faced his Christian parents with the news of his enlistment.

"Father," said the lad, as they clasped hands at parting, "I realize now that I have made a terrible mistake, and I can only ask you to forgive me, and to forgive also the many times I have broken your heart and brought you worry by the life I have lived."

"Sure I will, son; sure I will!" and the father closed his eyes and added earnest prayer for his boy.

The mother's farewell included the gift of a Bible, and the counsel, "Let this be your guide and if ever you are in trouble, look up to God."

The father's parting assurance was, "My boy, if things don't go right, remember, this is your home."

Training concluded, a world tour was begun. For many weeks the boy kept faith with promises and ideals. Shore leave, the influence of comrades, the lure of license—the sequel: a debauched and fallen boy.

However, home ties were not wholly forgotten or entirely severed, and when the four-year enlistment came to its end, the wanderer made for the haven of home. He had announced his arrival by telephone, and as he approached he saw his father hurrying to welcome him. They walked toward home, and the boy asked of his mother's health. No answer. Again, he inquired. No response. Thinking that his father may have become deaf in the years he had been gone, he raised his voice and asked again.

Tears came to the father's eyes. He said, "Son, your mother died only yesterday, sitting in her chair, and watching for you to come."

Scorched by his grief, and removed from the lure of his former life, for many months the returned sailor walked a path of comparative morality. But Satan had not forgotten him. Tempters lurked about, and at last, though in the meantime he had married, he was again on the path of wickedness. He forgot God—but God did not forget him.

Months sped by, each alike in that grossness and carousal were the mighty billows driving him against the rocks of despair.

He had disgraced friends, had spent all and was in want; his wife threatened to divorce him. Why continue living? In desperation he determined to take his own life. It was an easy way out. The weapon was prepared. In the room where he purposed to commit the deed stood the family radio. If this were on in full force, the neighbors might not hear the discharge of the pistol. Turning it on, he stepped off to point the weapon at his temple. Hark! What was that?

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."

At just the moment of need, John 3:16, that blessed message of salvation, had come in over WMBI, the radio station of the Moody Bible Institute.

The gun dropped at his side. He fell to his knees. A cry of anguish and of a prayer of need escaped his lips. God heard. The storm-tossed sailor grasped the life-line, was brought to shore, and his feet were planted on the Rock of Ages.

A spiritual change had truly been wrought. Habits that held him were stricken from his soul. Peace and hope came to his heart.

After a few days he made his way down into the city and was led of the Spirit of God to attend the noon meeting being held in a downtown theater by the Christian Business Men's Committee. The prayer from the platform again used his life-line verse, John 3:16. The speaker was from the Moody Bible Institute, and his text was that same John 3:16. The entire service was used of the Spirit to help the saved seaman make his public confession. He was the first one to walk down the aisle to enlist in lifelong service blessed message of salvation, had come in over for God's only begotten Son, who had made it possible that he should not perish, but that he should have everlasting life.

For this seaman, John 3:16 was a life line. A true story, by one who knows the facts.

UNIVERSAL BIBLE SUNDAY.

The Rev. Alfred W. Beaven, D. D., president of Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, has written the brochure issued annually by the American Bible Society for the use of pastors in the annual observance of Universal Bible Sunday which falls this year in Sunday, December 4th. The topic selected is, "Rejoicing in Hope."

The American Bible Society for a number of years has sent to approximately 80,000 pastors in the United States material for their use on Universal Bible Sunday. In addition to the brochure, last year's set of material included an attractive poster and a sample copy of a Scriptural responsive reading folder in purple designed to resemble a small Bible. In 1931 more requests were received for more copies from more pastors in more denominations than in any preceding year, indicating that Universal Bible Sunday is finding an increasingly large place in the calendar of the churches of America.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

PRAYER.

Lord, thine arm is not shortened, nor dost thou disregard the believer's faith. The smallness of our faith prevents thy power and souls are slipping anchor. God forgive and reclaim. Corruption assails every phase of the common law. Perchance only by a chastisement yet unfelt can righteousness be made to prevail. Send, O God, such chastisement as thou must, upon whom thou wilt, that our nation, the nations, may yield to thy reign. For the glory of Jesus' name. Amen.

CONQUERING THE DEPRESSION.

(The following will be of particular interest to CHRISTIAN SUN readers, since our own Rev. Joseph W. Fix, former pastor at Franklin, Va., is pastor of the First Christian Church, of Urbana, Ill., spoken of as an essential factor in conquering the depression in Urbana. The writing, which appeared recently in The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, is by Associate Editor Hermon Eldredge.—J. O. A.):

You will forgive us if we go back to Illinois again and share the inspiration of how they face "the depression" in one part of that state (not Chicago). When there came a run on the banks of Urbana last January the mayor called a halt on business in general and to depression "whispering campaigns" by a "business holiday" of five days, and sent 200 volunteers into the homes of the people to ferret out what caused the lack of confidence, and have the people "sign up" to stand together behind the banks. More than that all the churches of the city preached on "Faith" the following Sunday, and Urbana's banks opened and her plan has gone to other centers.

In that city we have a Christian church, which not only joined in fighting "Old Man Depression" in the community, but adopted new goals for itself and started uphill. When the depression first struck Urbana this church felt too poor to support a pastor, and had to lose its leader because of this. Now, it is not content simply to support a pastor, but it has adopted a goal of fifty per cent increase on its mission budget. This spirit seems to be in protest of that old couplet which runs:

"And dear Lord shall we ever live
At this poor dying rate?"

The First Christian Church of Urbana has gone beyond the local situation and taken projects in three wider spheres, that the people may have vision and inspiration, and that the Kingdom may go forward. These three projects are one needy field in Illinois (state), one in Porto Rico (national) and one in Africa (world). Reports tell us that the adoption of this extensive program has put heart into the people, and twenty-five additional givers have joined the ranks of the contributors to the church. A systematic educational and inspirational program of stewardship has been promoted, and at last reports the number of givers were one-half the membership, and the number of tithers were one-ninth of the membership. This sounds uninspiring until you study out what the average number of givers and tithers are in our churches—in your own church, for example.

Grenfell of Labrador says, "Faith is reason grown courageous," and the church which is eternally harping on paying the preacher" or the coal bill or some other local project does not exhibit any great amount of courage or faith, nor should it be surprised if it does not arouse the imagination or spur the impulses of a church toward victorious living. Good sermons and soft pews and warmed and lighted churches are fine and desirable, but they stand for nothing but consecrated littleness if it ends there, and gives comfortable people in the pews no opportunity to "fight the good fight" by extending their lines of offense beyond the town limits. Someone has said that the church is in more danger of littleness than sinfulness. It is in danger of both, and when a church of the living God grows so little that it lives to itself alone and forgets the world for which its Lord lived and died, it is time for that church to shut up shop and give its room to another. If our whole life is to go to pay "the butcher, the baker and the lipstick maker," we surely may pray again, questioningly:

"Dear Lord, and shall we ever live
At this poor dying rate?"

But my friend out of work says that he has nothing to give, or that his earnings are so cut that he must cut his giving. If the Lord gives him nothing he expects nothing from him. If he gives him anything, he expects something. If he gives much he expects much. The ancient Jew and the modern Seventh Day Adventist give not only "tithes," but beyond a tithe "an offering unto the Lord." You may look down on a Jew (although you should look up to him and what his people represent) or you may despise a Seventh Day Adventist (and some do), but if our faith in God as represented by gifts to the extension of his Kingdom were equal to their standards, we would embarrass our boards with the gifts that would flow in, and enrich ourselves with the blessings from heaven that would come because of our faith and loyalty.

And lest we appear over-zealous or seem to be merely theoretical, may we insert that this gospel of partnership with God was given us many years ago when we were earning five dollars a week and paying four dollars for our board and washing. The faithful pastor who preached that to us publicly and privately, persuaded us that fifty cents out of that remaining dollar belonged to the Lord, and as much more of an "offering" as could be sacrificially given. It demanded in those days "reason grown courageous" but it proved out as the best investment of life.

We are satisfied that other churches besides the First Christian Church of Urbana, Ill., are not content to "march around this mountain" much longer, but are determined with them to go forward. We are not saying that Urbana people are "saints above all others," but we had to pick on some church for a vent from the depressing atmosphere that some are creating by a limited vision. Incidentally, there is a little woman in that parsonage in Urbana who sees with, and stands back of, the man who stands in the pulpit and circulates in the pastorate of that forward-looking church. They have not done great and impossible things, but they have earned the Master's commending word that "they have done what they could."

But if we are to come down to earth again, let us, at least, not distrust God so much that we make the bulk of our "cuts" on his Kingdom work. We wonder if there is any philosophy "connectable" with all this in Frank R. Stanton's verse, which sings:

"They say dat I am poah,
But de woman's in de doah,
And de chillen's on de floah,
A-singin' an' a-singin' in de mornin',"

A TRAGIC CALL TO HELP.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers who care will learn with sorrow and deep regret that our Mission Board, the Commission on Missions, has been driven by necessity to send out to our churches and people the following distressing facts:

"Force to desperate action by present conditions, your Mission Board, through its Prudential Committee, has now ordered that within one year six stations and six institutions must be closed, and sixty-eight missionaries must be withdrawn from their fields, so that over $200,000 more shall be cut from the budget at home and abroad. Orders to this effect and information to the missionaries have been sent to the various missions, and comprise the most tragic message ever sent out from the offices at home to the workers overseas."

If we of the churches at home could only realize, visualize, what that means, we would begin, at any rate, to practice self-denial about which we know so little and which none of us practice in comparison with those to whom we are trying to send the gospel in fields afar. There are many of us who do not think that those to whom we are sending missionaries join in giving and in self-denial. The fact is that they put us to shame in comparison, for out of their want and starvation they share with others in trying to make known to others the gospel. Take a few examples from missionaries on the field as related in the American Board Bulletin, March 15th:

"Mrs. Robert Hume, widow of the famous veteran missionary, who herself passed away recently, wrote last January from Wai, India: 'The Wai Church has done a very nice thing quite by themselves. They have raised 600 rupees from their meager incomes for the Loyalty Fund. I am amazed and delighted about it all. The community is a small one and no one is rich, only doing fairly well. The workers in the hospital gave wonderfully. Some women who do the cleaning receive $5.00 a month for their pay. They contributed generously to the Fund and three of them are Hindu women. No suggestions from the missionaries were given. Many have given beyond their means and they must sacrifice.'

"Another missionary writes: 'This year we knew that it would be impossible for the Christian people to give in cash, so we decided that collections should be made in grain at the end of the harvest. We went from village to village to receive the offerings in grain. I assure you it was a joyful time. We did not have bags enough with us to receive the gifts. Many villages surprised us with their generosity in these times of depression.'

"Again: 'The district workers heard about it and offered to give one month's salary. This started the ball rolling and many other workers have followed in their footsteps. It was inspiring to have one after another offer so much.'

Another: 'We can go home in good spirits and with a kindly and co-operative feeling for the work being done by the ——— mission. If we must return I shall be only too glad to co-operate with the Board in every possible way to check the falling income. Certainly one who feels the heartache as we do, can do something to loosen the purse-strings of those who might give.'

Then comes the following from missionaries:

"When the leading officer of the Kumiai churches heard this news and that these cuts were not directed toward Japan alone, he said: 'Yes, we had better cut off the leg in order to save the patient.'

"I console myself that I am in good company, but can hardly make up my mind that I must go home this fall. I can too well imagine the weight of anxiety and sorrow that you all must be carrying in sending out this crushing word to our fields. I am sorry for those of your staff at 14 Beacon Street who are having to leave, too. If I do not come back I can extend a hand and shed a sympathizing tear with some of them."

"Whether you have any money to keep our salaries going or not, some of us will want to stay and put our lives into the work with the people here. We could get jobs in local schools, without doubt, if we had none of our own. More pupils than ever are trying to come to us! Nearly 200 young people have come and gone again because we have no room for them.

"We are willing to forfeit anything just to come back here for another term to work among these people. If any country still feels the need of missionaries this country does. And after one term here we are more convinced than ever that missionaries are needed in the Christian leadership of these people.

"The native workers of the Marathi Mission decided they wanted to give their share to the Loyalty Fund alongside the missionaries, and to add something as a general contribution to the Board's treasury. One worker pledged a month's salary, saying he had been supported as a boy by some lady in America and he wanted to help. He had grain in the house that would enable his family to get on with less pay and if necessary they would give up their tea, their one luxury, indicating the sacrificial giving of many of our people."

BORN IN THE HILLS.

Have you ever thought just what it means to be born in the hills?

To come into the hills with all the education and money one needs is one thing. To be born in a windowless log cabin and fed salt pork and catnip tea is quite another thing.

However, being born in the hills does not mean what some writers have said. For instance, I read a book once in which the writer made his heroine seem like a mountain girl until the end, then brought out that she had been lost in the hills when real young, but was not of the hills. Then the hero remarked that he had known all the while that this girl had higher blood than could be found in the hills.

Well, I don't know how folks get that way, for we are over three thousand feet in the sky here, and that ought to be high enough blood for anybody.

No, really, being born in the hills doesn't hurt one's blood except as it has hurt mine. Hills do not keep one from being a human being, nor do they keep one from having a soul.

Though the many writers who have written of "mountain pride" have not been so far wrong.

Oh yes, we have our pride, and how I have had to swallow mine since I have been mixing with the outside world!

I still recall some of my experiences when I went to the Mission school here.

Back in those days a strange man called at my mountain cabin one day to ask about where this trail led. After I had answered his questions, he said, "Pardon me, but you don't live here?" I told him I did, and he said, "You were not raised here." I told him I was. He looked a little funny, and said, "You haven't always stayed here; you've been to school." Then I had to tell that man that I went to the Christian Mission School. That hurt, too. I felt that meant that I was accepting charity, and I hated that.

Then I made up my mind that it was all a big mistake about these hills. They should never have been. No one wanted to be born in these hills, yet we were here. And even God couldn't do anything about it better than to offer us charity. I must accept that or do worse. I was bitter. All things seemed wrong. Why I could not have been born in some city and come up here dressed up with a pretty Bible under my arm to preach to mountain people, I could not see. But here I was, so I determined to get an education. If only I could get to college I would show them how to call me a "mountain girl."

So I went to school, and little by little I learned the meaning of missions, learned that only the Christ of whom they taught could make my hills a place that I could love.

That seems long ago, for now, as I write, I hear the clear young voice of a little mountain boy singing over the hills. It is strange that at this moment he gives me just the words I need.

"There is power, power, wonder-working power, in the precious blood of the Lamb." Even though one must be born in the hills, this power can reach one.

I no longer feel that these hills are just a mistake. They are an opportunity for you folks out there to prove there is "Power in the Blood."

Our Hilly Grissoms are still in love with the hills and their work. They are learning what it means to be born in the hills and they are glad to help. You Christians out there can back them with your prayers. They will need your prayers for the mountain trails are steep. V. E.

"Mother," called Donald, nine-year-old son of Rev. and Mrs. John P. Dysart, of Geogi, East Africa, "there's a man out here who wants to come in and see my gold-fish." "All right, son," replied Mrs. Dysart, "who is he?" "I don't know, but he is a Christian." "How do you know he is a Christian?" "Well," replied Donald, "he speaks English, so I know he MUST be a Christian." Donald, not so long ago, was the only white person at a South African wedding, a distinction he thoroughly enjoyed, according to his mother.

ELON SUMMER SCHOOL—APPRECIATION.

Mere words can never express the values of the recent Elon Summer School of Leadership Training. Life alone can do that, for it was the making of new life that meant the most during those happy days at Elon.

Seven excellent teachers assisted by several other workers sought daily to train youth in Christian life and service. From 6:45 in the morning until 10:30 at night this family of more than half a hundred fine young people and consecrated leaders were eagerly in search of the best that life can give.

Whether in the class room studying the Characteristics of the Pupil, Values of the New Testament, Methods of Worship, the Art of Story-Telling, Beauties of the Bible, the Challenge of World Missions, or Methods of Young People's Work, or playing together on the campus, or hiking to see the Seven Wonders of the World, or visiting the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, or worshipping under the open sky at eventide, or seeking divine guidance at chapel in the early morning, or studying national problems at night, always there was a diligent search for the way to the best in Christian living and serving.

There were almost no absences from the four hours of daily classes, and every person save one received credit for work done, and sickness prevented her from attending the necessary number of classes.

In many respects this was the best summer schools ever held at Elon. Those who missed it would be unhappy if they knew what they missed and would doubtless resolve to be present next year. Those who were there returned home with new hope, courage, eagerness, and determination to make life a bit better wherever they may touch it.

VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR MEETS.

The Virginia State Christian Endeavor Union held its thirty-eighth annual convention, at the Christian Temple in Norfolk, June 23-26, 1932. The convention opened Thursday afternoon and held its final session Sunday evening with more than two hundred delegates from all over the State and as many from Norfolk and Portsmouth in attendance. Miss Margaret Richards, State President, presided over all meetings except one or two.

Thursday afternoon and evening was observed as Loyalty Day for the Endeavorers with worship, music, inspirational talks, and a reception.

As a windup of a busy series of meetings Friday, which was Citizenship Day, the Endeavorers met that night and after hearing George Earle Owen tell of the Allied Youth for Prohibition meeting in Atlantic City, N. J., and Miss Phyllis Brown, of Richmond, read an essay on Citizenship, went on record as upholding the Eighteenth Amendment. The closing feature of the session was an address on the topic, "Greater Things Through Christian Citizenship," by Rev. Harold Cheyney, field secretary of the Maryland Christian Endeavor Union.

And Saturday's sessions began with a Quiet Hour service conducted by Warren Hoopes, field secretary for Pennsylvania, at 9:00 A. M. Songs were led by W. H. Baker, Newport News, formerly State president. Mr. Hoopes spoke on the importance of living the Quiet Hour. He mentioned the Lindbergh kidnapping and said "It had caused mothers to clasp their babies closer to them but has it helped mothers and fathers to be on their guard against their children suffering spiritual kidnapping?" After his talk many joined the Quiet Hour; and, following announcements by Miss Richards, the Endeavorers adjourned to their various conference classrooms. The Juniors, in their special session, heard Miss Mildred Haggard, National Junior worker.

After the morning session, the main convention group spent the afternoon in sightseeing about the city. The workers reassembled in time for the annual banquet and program of the evening. Banners were awarded to the District, City and County Unions and the Junior, Intermediate and Senior Societies doing the best type of work for the year. About four hundred Endeavorers, who were at the banquet, heard Mr. Sandusky Curtis give the Virginia Christian Endeavor History.

A day filled with Sunday activities brought the curtain down upon the State Convention. From the early morning service until the consecration meeting at the close there was a stream of talks, prayers and worth-while suggestions for workers. Rev. Stanley Vandersail, superintendent of vocations for the International Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston, Mass., gave the concluding message on, "The Answer of Youth to Christ." After the reconsecration of the Endeavorers, a friendship circle was formed for the final prayer and hymn—"Blest Be the Tie that Binds,"—and the C. E. benediction.

YOUTH CONGRESS TO MEET.

The annual meeting of the Youth Congress of Eastern Virginia will be held in Bethlehem Christian Church, near Suffolk, Va., July 26, 1932.

The Executive Committee held a very important meeting in Suffolk last week at which time the program for the coming meeting was completed and a proposed constitution and by-laws considered. Mr. C. E. Warrington, of Norfolk, the president of this group, is giving much time and thought to the work, and goes about it in a business-like way. He is ably assisted by Miss Irene Cotton, of Dendron, who is the efficient secretary. This writer has never seen business dispatched more rapidly and decorously than was done in this Executive Committee meeting.

Young people in Eastern Virginia should surely plan to attend the annual meeting at Bethlehem the 26th, if they are at all interested in the religious life of their church and nation.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet in a one-day session at 9:30 A. M., Tuesday, July 19th, with the church at Cypress Chapel. The Executive Committee unanimously agreed on this change of program and has arranged for a full day, including evening vesper services, to be followed by a great address.

I most urgently request that every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society be fully represented, that your reports be promptly sent in to the secretary, and that every delegate remain through the entire day and evening program. Only in this way will we get the full benefit of the Convention and show your appreciation of the invitation on the part of the folk at Cypress Chapel. Dinner and supper, will be served on the Harvard plan, as in the past.

May we have a great crowd and a great Convention.
J. F. WEST, Jr., Pres.

NEW C. E. SOCIETY ORGANIZED.

Some time ago a new Christian Endeavor Society was organized at Brown's Chapel in Western North Carolina, by the young people of that church. Rev. E. Carl Brady, pastor of Brown's Chapel, and Miss Gertrude Bryant helped this group of young people to get started in the Christian quest.

Here's a place to reap a hundred-fold, and many great and good things can come out of this Society. Mr. A. D. Brewer, who is president, and key-worker for Youth Fellowship, has all the faculties of leadership. Let's help him and the Society with our prayers, to love a little more, serve a little more, and thereby make this work a stepping-stone to greater things.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

"HAVE I A RIGHT TO 'LIVE MY OWN LIFE'?"

Today, life is becoming more complex than ever before. Fear, unemployment, the depression, the liquor problem and many other factors help to make up this complexity. For many, the present is an uncertainty, and there is no hope whatever in the future. Why not dispel all fear and rely on the Lord? The Psalmist says, "The Lord will give strength unto his people; the Lord will bless his people with peace." We must keep right on keepin' on, and a part of the freedom we desire will be ours in spite of adverse conditions.

It is well for us to face fairly and frankly the topic of this evening, "Have I a Right to Live My Own Life?" Most assuredly, under certain conditions, we do have that right. Some restrictions placed upon us may be unjust, but it may be to our best interest to accept them. Other restrictions are entirely justified. There are certain duties and obligations which the conscientious, self-respecting young person cannot shirk. Some sacrifice of selfish desires should be made gladly. The whole problem requires intelligence, reason, and calm judgment.

Here are some thoughts that will give a basis for interesting discussions; "Self-Made." (The writers and thinkers of the present day say there are no self-made men. We should remember that God gave us life, and we are dependent on others for a great many things.) The gifts of parents; my debt to my community; society's rights versus individual rights; consider our neighbors; my rights on the highway; and rights that we desire.

What would happen in your community if every member decided to live for himself irrespective of the rights of others? Describe what would happen in the home and in business. What would happen to all welfare and church work? To the civic league and cooperative organizations?

A prayer poem for thought:

"Lord help me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayer shall be for others.

"Help me in all the work I do
To ever be sincere and true
And know that all I'd do for you,
Must needs be done for others."

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

THE PASSOVER.

LESSON III.—JULY 17, 1932.

GOLDEN TEXT: "For even Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us."—I. Cor. 5:7.

LESSON TEXT: Exodus 11:1 to 12:36.

TIME: 1501-1499 B. C.

PLACE: Egypt, the palace; Goshen.

In the lesson for last Sunday we saw Moses called of the Lord for the task of delivering the Israelites from the sufferings and indignities that they were suffering at the hands of the Egyptians. Between the events of the last lesson and that of today Moses has gone back to the land of Egypt, acquainted Aaron with the work that they were jointly to engage in, and enlisted Aaron's co-operation. They had gone before Pharaoh with the request that he let the people of Israel go, and their request had been refused. Then followed nine of the ten plagues that were visited upon the Egyptians. None of the nine plagues had done more than to cause Pharaoh to relent temporarily. The Lord then announced to Moses the nature of the tenth plague, which was to be the slaying of all the first-born throughout the land of Egypt.

The Passover was designed to serve a two-fold purpose. It was to serve an immediate purpose of preparing the Israelites for their journey, and marking their houses as the habitations of those who were looking to the Lord for deliverance. There is no finer lesson in religious ritual to be found anywhere than that which is contained in the directions which Moses received concerning the preparation for and the eating of the first Passover. Every detail spoke directly, in a figurative way, to the immediate needs of the situation that was confronting the people at that particular time. We read our Bibles most superficially if we fail to see that always God addresses his message directly to the situation confronting his people. No message is spiritually inspired that does not present specific things that the people may begin to do immediately for the improvement of their condition.

But the Passover was intended to serve a perpetual purpose. It was to be an everlasting reminder to the Israelites of God's gracious deliverance from Egyptian bondage. It was to be an annual sermon on the love of God for his people, and an object lesson as to the lengths to which God would use his power for the blessing of those who would obey his commandments. It was a stupid soul indeed who could listen to the story of the deliverance from Egypt, hearing it amid the ceremonies that relived again the atmosphere of that deliverance, and not be made aware of God's solicitous care, and his ability to save no matter what the situation may be.

The Passover was designed to remind people of the things they are ever prone to forget. It is perhaps a gracious design of God that people can forget the horrors of bitter experiences through which they pass. But it is also a gift of God that man can fix indelibly in his memory those events that convey truths of abiding worth. Man can remember the things that he wills to remember. The trouble is that man is too often careless about giving attention to the things that materially affect his welfare. Thirteen years have passed since the World War, and the nations that swore to renounce war forever are slipping back into that state of mind that breeds war. Thirteen years have passed since the outlawing of the liquor traffic in the United States, and this nation is now seriously considering going back into partnership with the most nefarious iniquity that ever debased mankind. Surely it was divine wisdom to give the children of Israel an everlasting reminder.

There is another lesson that the world sorely needs that is wrapped up in the Passover. No people were ever in a worse social and industrial position than were the Israelites in Egypt. But the Lord delivered them safely. Surely the present status of the world is not hopeless if there are a few people who have not lost their faith in the love and power of God.

PUBLICATIONS.

In a previous article something was said relative to the value of reading Christian literature, especially the church papers. We hope that you have not forgotten that.

Christian writers of the time make it possible for you to have in your homes such weekly publications as THE CHRISTIAN SUN, The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, The Sunday School Herald, The Wellspring, and numbers of other papers for small children to read. These publications give the activities of all the churches throughout the Convention and some from the outside world. Often there are interesting articles on Missions, World Friendship, Fellowship, Prayer, and World Service. The Convention viewpoint on these activities are always inspirational.

We would not be treating you fair if we did not suggest some of the best books on the market for Christian young people to read. First, we suggest that you read Walter G. Beach's book on "Social Aims in a Changing World," (Stanford University Press, $1.75), which is an excellent exposition of the social nature of religion.

The following are also good summer readings for young folks: "The Development of the Peace Idea and Other Essays," Trueblood; "Young George Washington," Thompson (Boston Press, $1.75); "The Flood Fighters," Williamson (Houghton Mifflin, $2.00); "The Road Ahead," Laidler (Crowell, $1.00); "The Knights of St. John, Anderson (Appleton, $2.00); "The House that Took Root, Millikin (Abingdon, $1.50); and "Pilgrim's Progress," Bunyan, retold for young people by Wade C. Smith, and illustrated by the Little Jettys (Harper, $1.50). If you do not have these books, THE CHRISTIAN SUN office, 1536 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va., will be glad to secure them for you, upon receipt of the price.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."—II. Chron. 7:14.

MONDAY.

BIGGER AND BETTER GREETINGS.

"If ye love them which love you, what reward have you? Do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans so."—Matt. 5:46, 47.

Weymouth Version: "For if ye love only those who love you, what reward do you get for that? And if you only salute your relatives (Moffatt, 'friends'), what is special about that? Do not the very pagans do as much?"

These words of Jesus have two applications. One is the narrow love of limiting our genuineness to relatives and friends. The other refers to the special bonds between God's people; all of which teaches that the Christian spirit is universal. Jesus came to save all mankind, especially to seek and to save the lost. No greater reference can be sighted than that found in his teachings in Matthew 25:31-45, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these ye did it unto me." "I was a stranger and ye took me in."

It is a natural propensity of human kind to be nice to friends and let the rest of the world go by. It is not so easy to extend our friendship to all others outside this pale. It is so easy to feel that we and ours are "it."

In our travels we see South America, its towns and gauchos; Spain, her funny looking peasantry, huts and bull-fights; Italy, her history, vineyards, cart-saddles and Facisti; France, with her ranks, colors, royalty and impoverished peasantry; England, with her Lords, Noblemen, and proud subjects; Germany, with her high and low, teamed in grim determination to conquer; rank, color, barbarism, civilization, and what not, all over the world, and we go among them, discriminately. Christianity says salute all inhabitants of the earth indiscriminately. Bear to them the love of God.

This Christianity applies in and around our own community. Humanity is on one common pilgrimage in search for God. To help the stranger to find God is our field. Therein is our reward.

Prayer—O Lord, Our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth. We pray for that love of thine and that spirit that makes us thine and shares thy blessings with all whom we meet. We ask for Jesus sake. Amen.

TUESDAY

MOTH AND RUST.

"Lay not up for yourselves treasure upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt."—Matt. 6:19.
Moffatt: "Moth and rust doth corrode."

Weymouth: "Wear and tear doth destroy."

Corrosion is a chief destroyer. Depreciation of property is enormous. Depreciation of spirit and soul is a tragic story. This depreciation is described as the "incessant rubbing of daily annoyances;" "the grind of fatiguing duties;" "the fine promises of life overcast with fatigue of the march and the wearing down of the body in fruitless effort;" "when the sensitiveness to moral values drop out;" "when the spiritual glow dwindles to a black ember, and hope fades out of vision, and we are asked what has happened?" vision becomes misty, the need of repeated effort finds lessening response; it is a case of corrosion from the lack of use, or the "wear and tear" from use; hold on life is loosened, life ceases to care, and one asks, "what is the use?"

Bishop McConnell has truly said, "This does not mean that a man who has fought a noble battle is about to give up; it does not mean that he has lost his zest of the moral struggle. He may hang on grimly to the end, but it does mean that the inner fire may be burning low." To the man of God it means that he will apply himself daily to the source of all help, for the rebuilding process which is given by God as incessantly, and relentlessly as destruction.

Prayer—Our Father, we could not live a day didst thou not rebuild our bodies, nor can our spirit and souls live without thy renewing life in us incessantly. O Lord, be thou our stay this and every day. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

NOT ADVICE.

"And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom."—Matt. 9:35.

Weymouth Version: "Proclaiming the good news of the kingdom."

We all understand that the word "Gospel" means "good news." Our text tells us that Jesus went about declaring the good news. He was not giving advice. Christianity was first preached as good news. Wherever it has been preached with power, it has not been propounded as rules restricting and governing conduct, but proclaimed as "good news." When it ceases to be good news, it dwindles down into mere advice, and it ceases to be itself. Take the word daily as thy daily pastime and it thrills you.

Prayer—Our Father, in heaven, be with us this day. Reveal thyself to us and make thy revelations so clear that we may know what is good and walk therein. This we ask for Jesus sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

JESUS' APPEAL TO THE IRRELIGIOUS.

"For I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."—Matt. 9:13.

"I did not come to invite the pious, but the irreligious to repentance." (Goodspeed.)

Goodspeed's interpretation brings to us a new shade of meaning of this Scripture. It contrasts two classes of people, the pious and the irreligious. The pious, Jesus was not so concerned about, but he was distinctly concerned about the irreligious. These are people who, while not lacking in religious instinct, are less susceptible to moods and feelings of piety, to whom religious ceremonies and observances do not appeal. They have little of the mystical temperament, and they are usually not credulous toward Christian experience. They are a hard class to win, perhaps because Christian workers find them hard to like. It was this class of folk Jesus sought out, yea, it was this class from which he chose his disciples, and it was his fellowship with this class that furnished the major scandals of his life.

Jesus loved these people, first, probably because they were as much the Father's own as the pious, that they misunderstood the meaning of the Kingdom, and he would save them as a Father would save his lost child. Second, he must have loved them for their vigor, energy and potency. Run through incidents in Christ's life on earth to see how he loved and extolled these traits in people, viz.: "the parable of the talents," the "importunate widow," the "lost coin," and "the lost sheep." Look at the disciples—men of prodigious energy. Look at Paul, than whom, until he was converted, there was none more irreligious, and one can but conclude what wonderful love the Master had for these people.

There are a lot of folk in the world in this class today and apparently destined to increase. The most of them have magnificent virtues. Jesus would have us love them as he did; he would have us disregard all petty legalisms, formalisms, and "barbed-wire fences" and open up God's lanes to their hearts, and break the "good news" to them, touch their heaven-given virtues for the Kingdom.

Prayer—Our Father, we confess our prejudices and limitations. It is hard for us to rise above them, thou dost know. We cannot, without thee. Come thou and dwell within our hearts and lives and make us messengers before thy face unto all people whom we meet. Amen.

FRIDAY.

CANDY AND CHRIST.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Read Matt. 25:31-40.

An Episcopal clergyman near Boston was calling on a woman who had been confined to her home, with terrible pain, for fifteen years, when a man came in bringing her a box of candy made by his wife. The clergyman was so moved by the incident, and by the pleasure which the little gift gave, that he wrote the giver a letter so overflowing with beautiful appreciation that it was printed in a Boston daily paper. In the bearer of the candy, the minister wrote, he seemed to see another Presence, and he heard a voice which said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Some may think it irreverent thus to associate candy with Christ, but surely our Lord would have no such thought. The "it" which Christ was commending was not what some great person might want, but what "one of the least" might want to take pleasure in. "Little things are great to little men." Small privileges are great blessings to the underprivileged. If we consider the doing of little kindnesses as beneath us, we consider Christ's approval as beneath us.

Prayer—We seek thy spirit, Jesus, Friend of men! We would put thy love into our daily lives. We would rank tenderness with heroism, and loving thoughtfulness with heavenly glory. Amen.

WELDED.

"Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might."—Read Eph. 6:10-18.

The Carolinian, a tanker, has just taken its first cruise to test its powers. It has been put together without rivets, by the new process of electric welding, and it stood the test perfectly, its tanks forward and aft being loaded so as to strain the middle of the ship as much as possible. The new way of constructing vessels is a success.

"He's all of a piece," we often say of a man, meaning that he is sound through and through, the same staunch character appearing in whatever he says and does. Many people are all of many pieces, tied together more or less firmly—generally less. The rivets work loose, the seams open up, the plates lose their solidity, the entire

THE SACRED FIRE.

By REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

(Communion sermon preached at the Burlington, N. C., Convention.)

Of all the earnest appeals to live the Christian life triumphantly there is nothing more impressive than the 12th chapter of Romans. St. Paul says, "Put affection into your love for the brotherhood; be forward to honor one another; never let your zeal flag; maintain the spiritual glow."

Here is a combination of science and religion, a mingling of physical phenomena and religious faith. The word "glow" means to shine with an intense or white heat. The physical fact behind the word is fire, but translated into human feeling means intense excitement or earnestness.

Fire has always been associated with religion either as a symbol of Divine Power or Truth, or purification from the dross of life.

One of the most interesting religious ceremonies of the church year is that of the appearance of the Holy Fire on Easter evening in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem where thousands of devotees crowd together to receive the Fire from the Holy Priest. The church is dark and the sepulchre is sealed. Eagerly the crowd waits for the first torch of flaming fire which is pulled from a hole in the wall of the shrine. This burst of flame is greeted with cheers, the clapping of hands and the ringing of bells. It is the fire of the resurrection, the fire of Immortal Life. The fire is given first to selected representatives of the community who rush to the lamps on the sacred altar. Then each pilgrim presses forward to light his candle. Then they go out into the streets and carry the light far and wide. Formerly pilgrims from Russia have been known to carry their fire to the remotest parts of their country.

This custom of lighting fires by the sacred flame is old indeed. It was a custom in Mexico among the Aztecs. There it was an outgrowth of the national calendar. The old Mayan-Aztec Calendar is one of the wonders of the world. The year consisted of 365 days with eighteen months of twenty days each, making it necessary to add five extra days at the end of the year. These were called "useless days" and caused a great deal of anxiety, but the greatest anxieties came at the end of the cycles. Mexican Cycles consisted of fifty-two years. There were four periods of thirteen years each. Knowing the difference between the Solar and Civil year the makers of the calendar added thirteen days to the end of each Cycle to harmonize them. These were days of terrible uncertainty because it seemed like the end of the world. There was no surety that another Cycle would begin.

On the evening of the last day of the closing Cycle of fifty-two years all of the fires everywhere were extinguished. This included the Temple fires and the home fires. All the earthen utensils were destroyed as if the end of the world were surely coming. Everyone was in a terrible suspense of mind fearing that fire had been seen for the last time! People by the thousands stood on towers and roofs looking anxiously toward the tops of the mountains and high hills to see if there were any bonfires—which fires would be the sign that the Gods were merciful—and assurance that another Cycle would begin.

The beginning of the ceremony saw the Priests gorgeously robed marching out of the Great Temple accompanied by crowds of excited and terrified people. They headed for the Sacred Mountain about two and one-half miles from Mexico City. They marched by the stars so as to arrive at the appointed spot at midnight. One of the Priests was assigned the duty of producing new fire by friction—the primitive method of producing fire. He rubbed two pieces of dry wood together. But this had to be done on the dead body of a human sacrifice. Just as soon as a spark of fire was seen the people began to shout for joy. They now knew that another day would dawn, that the sun would brighten the earth for fifty-two years more!

When there was fire enough a funeral pyre was ignited and the sacrificial body was burned thereon. Each person who had followed the priests had carried an unlighted torch. Now the torches were lighted from this bonfire and the people started for their homes waving their blazing torches and shouting for joy. As they met other people with unlighted torches they shared their sacred fire and these in turn spread the fire to others until everywhere the morning hours were resplendent with burning torches and bonfires.

The official party returned to the Great Temple and placed a huge brazier before the altar of the great Aztec God. Then the people who had not gotten the fire before came to the Temple, lighted their torches from the Sacred Brazier and ran home to start the fires on their own hearths. The people laughed and sang and congratulated each other for they now felt sure there would be a continuation of life.

The custom of Fire Lighting has come down through the years in the form of candle-lighting services of many kinds. Christianity has continued to remember the affirmation of Jesus: "I am the Light of the world." In all our symbolic ceremonies we represent him as the source of spiritual light and a Great Central Light is used to represent him, and from that light all our little candles are lighted. Jesus said that each one of his followers is a light and it is his business to "let his light shine."

The passage of scripture that we began with exhorts us to maintain the Spiritual Glow. It assumes that we have it to maintain. We have, if we are Christians, been some time stirred with a great emotion that has kindled in us a spiritual glow. In technical theological language we say that we have been moved by the Holy Spirit.

This first spiritual glow may have cooled off. (In cold sections of the country, people still burn coal in grates to heat their houses. Have you ever watched a hot coal, partly burned, roll out of the fire on the hearth? It soon cools off and turns to ashes. But let that same coal roll up against another glowing coal or several and they will so encourage one another that they will burn brightly and give out heat.) It is not very different with people who have once been warmed by the radiant Spirit of Christ. It is possible for them to cool off and lose interest and become indifferent. I suppose it is possible for one who has rejoiced and been glad, to cool off and produce nothing but ashes. It seems a shame, however, that any Christian should lose his radiance. Dr. L. P. Jacks, in his lecture on "The Lost Radiance of the Christian Religion," says that "Christianity is the most encouraging, the most joyous, the least repressive and the least forbidding of all the religions of mankind." Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our Octagon soap wrappers are coming in very nicely. We have received to date 60,000. The Sunday School at Lanett, Ala., mailed us a package of 2,700 last week. They used a very unique plan to collect the soap coupons. The Sunday School teachers gave an ice cream supper and all who attended had to bring a certain number of soap coupons. The idea went across with a shout, and 2,700 coupons resulted from the splendid idea. Why not other Sunday Schools try something similar to this and we would soon have our 75,000 we want to get by August 1st. It will not take long to get the next 15,000 if the Sunday Schools will become interested. We all have to use soap—it's a necessity. Buy Octagon and send us the coupons. If six Sunday Schools would send in as many as Lanett Sunday School, we would soon reach the 75,000 mark.

It is an easy way to help the Orphanage pay for a much-needed equipment and not cost you any money. Gather up the coupons you have and mail them to the Christian Orphanage and you will be doing a good deed.

THE SACRED FIRE.

tians do have a radiance but "it is a subtle and elusive thing which no definition can capture and no eloquence describe."

Sometimes we make a mistake and think that the formal things that make up a church constitute religion. We may think that the acceptance of a creed is religion, or we may identify regular church attendance with religion. All these are good and valuable helps, but they are like polishing the candlestick, or trimming the wick or providing electricity. It all helps, but life is the burning. It is the Sacred Fire that is in us that burns. In other words Christian living is what counts. This we must maintain or turn to ashes.

The early Christian won their way by superior living. The early church was made up, at first, of artisans, freedmen and slaves. The proud Roman aristocracy of wealth, power and knowledge looked down upon such people and it is not surprising that they considered the church, made up of such folks, a vulgar superstition, and naturally a scandal. But some of these very converts were servants in the homes of the cultured and they beheld the transformation of character going on right under their eyes. Tertullian said that when anyone looked into the matter he saw the power of transformation and this experience won the good-will and trust of people. In time people of culture and social standing were drawn into church membership. Both men and women were attracted by the glow, warmth and radiance of these earnest Christian people and thus the church grew.

This subtle, inner fire has a way of radiating its heat. The story is told of a woman, rather worldly and not much interested in religion who entertained her sister once while on a visit. In years past, before the sisters separated they had not got on very well together. However, now, when the visit was over the worldly-minded sister said, "I have enjoyed your visit very much. I do not understand your religion, but I know one thing, it has made you easier to live with."

This is in line with a story told of a Chinese who very much desired to join the church. He came from Ningpo and when asked where and how he had heard the Gospel he said, "I have never heard the Gospel, I have seen it." A good-for-nothing opium-smoker with a terrible temper had heard of the Gospel and his life had been changed. He gave up opium and became a man of amiable spirit. "I tell you," said the inquirer,

"I have never heard the Gospel, I have seen it." There is a radiance of life the world knows not of, but it sees it and so long as men and women walk humbly with God and serve their fellow-men lovingly and cheerfully their religion will be propagated.

One does not ordinarily think of Harry Lauder as a homilist, yet he once said, "I was sitting in the gloaming one evening when the lamp-lighter passed. He pushed his pole into the lamp and lighted it. Then he went to another and another. He disappeared from sight, but I knew where he was by the lights that broke out down the street until he had left a beautiful avenue of lights. Ye are all lamplighters. They'll know where ye've been by the lights." And it was Jesus who said, "Ye are the light of the world; let your light shine." For centuries Christians have lighted their lives at the sacred altar where the bread and wine, symbols of life and energy, of service and sacrifice, have nourished the soul.

As we come today to light our glowing torch at the fiery altar of Christ, let us pass on the Torch:

"Pass on the torch, pass on the flame;
Remember whence the glory came;
And eyes are on you as you run,
Beyond the shining of the sun.

"Lord Christ, we take the torch from thee;
We must be true, we must be free,
And clean of heart and strong of soul,
To bear the glory to its goal.

"O Lord of life, to thee we kneel;
Maker of men, our purpose seal!
We will, for honor of thy name,
Pass on the torch, pass on the flame."

THE ROCKEFELLER STATEMENT.

John D. Rockefeller's statement that drinking has increased under prohibition is without foundation in fact. The American people as a nation have decreased drinking so much that alcoholism as a disease is a negligible factor; alcoholism death rates have been cut in two; alcoholic diseases generally have been reduced to a point where it can be said that more lives have been saved by prohibition than were lost by us in the World War; the government's official estimate is that drinking has been reduced to 35 per cent of what it was; social agencies report poverty from drink reduced to a negligible minimum; the National Education Association reports that a million children have gone to high school from homes that would have been unable to send them under pre-prohibition conditions; industry reports a sober army of producers; competent investigators are not half so eager to blame crime on prohibition as they were before they started to investigate and found that local politics is the main factor in crime and racketeering.

Mr. Rockefeller should realize that when the Eighteenth Amendment was ratified the liquor interests threatened to organize a nation-wide disobedience of the prohibition laws. Much of the present lax observance and organized nullification is the result of that threat.

We think Mr. Rockefeller wrong in his statement that States and cities still retain their former laws and regulations covering the liquor trade. In most instances State prohibition laws automatically repealed the old laws regulating liquor; and any drive sufficient to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment would result in liberal State liquor laws that would insure a flood of liquor with its attendant evils.

Present problems cannot be solved by restoring the liquor traffic to a legal status; nor can they be solved by allowing prohibition enforcement to remain in its present status. We require clean government with better men in office; aroused civic consciousness, enforcement of the law, and serious and effective educational campaigns.

To repeal the Eighteenth Amendment would be murderous in that it would surrender to the liquor interests, which, regardless of the protests of wet leaders, are bent on complete liberalization of liquor laws around the world.

As far as the political parties go, both of them have had their experiences with the domination of distillers, brewers and retail liquor dealers. The history of the past justifies us in saying that the political party is doomed, which for the sake of political expediency, opens the door through which liquor may return to a legal status.

CALEB'S CONQUEST.

"Therefore Hebron became the inheritance of Caleb . . . unto this day, because that he wholly followed Jehovah."—Read Joshua 14:6-14.

Caleb was eighty-five years old, but he was not too old to conquer the gigantic Anakim and win Hebron for himself and his descendants. Never quote the silly proverb, "Old men for counsel, young men for war." Here was an old man who was as vigorous as any for battle; and as a young man, he had been wiser in counsel than ten other explorers.

It depends on the spirit in the man. Whoever, like valiant Caleb, wholly follows Jehovah, is wise to point out the best way and brave to pursue that way, and it makes no difference whether he is forty or eighty. So let youth and age each learn to recognize in the other the spirit of the Lord. Let them learn to work together, and fight together, side by side. For what is youth and what is age in the eternity to which all the sons of God are heirs?

Prayer—Ancient of days! Thou the ever-young, the Omnipotent, the all-wise, give us of thyself! Enable us to overcome all our foes and win our Hebrons. In thy strength and for thy sake. Amen.

WHITLEY MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

SUMMER TERM, JUNE 6th to JULY 15th. The college has arranged for a summer session of six weeks this summer at a very low rate for the expenses. Students living near the college, and coming from their homes, can take the six-weeks' course for as little as $15.00. The total cost for students that board on the campus is $45.00 to $50.00. Courses will be offered for college credit towards a degree and for raising and renewing Teacher's Certificate.

Negro Baritone Sings in "Aida."—

On Monday night of this week, more than 5,000 opera-goers heard and applauded Jules Bledsoe, negro baritone, who was the first man of his race ever to sing the role of Amenasro in Verdi's famous opera, "Aida," on the American stage. With only 21 hours' notice in which to prepare himself, the negro baritone gave a remarkable portrayal of the captive Ethiopian king. The writer has seen the opera several times, but he would like to have seen the part of the dark-skinned king as it was portrayed by one of his own race.

A Good Story With a Good Moral.—

It is a good story, and the lesson taught should be heeded, which Dr. L. E. Smith tells about "band instruments" in this issue. There is one fine thing about those old bass horns: If the right fellow gets hold of one of them, he can tune it. It is true that the makers of musical instruments have decreed that Middle A shall have a vibration of 440 beats rather than 435, as formerly. Yet, just as sweet, just as harmonious, music can be produced on instruments of the old pitch as on those of the new, provided all the instruments are tuned together and their players are willing to play as their conductor directs.

Dry Test Shows Little Change in Sentiment.—

United States Senators either have their hands upon the pulse of the nation, or have a keener insight into the desires of their constituents than have the so-called political leaders. The first prohibition test in Congress since the meeting of the national party conventions showed but little change from the past overwhelmingly dry sentiment. On last Monday, the Senate turned down the Bingham bill to legalize beer of higher alcoholic content by a 2 to 1 vote, thus stopping the beer movement for the present session. Despite the platform declaration of the Democratic party for immediate modification of the Volstead Act, the beer advocates could only muster to their support eleven Democratic votes.

President Hoover Vetoes Garner Bill.—

Speaker of the House and Vice-Presidential nominee on the Democratic ticket, Garner, has lost a good bit of his prestige as a statesman by the attitude he took on the relief bill which bore his name, and which has just been vetoed by the President. Even the anti-Hoover press says: "Politics or no politics, Mr. Hoover is right and Mr. Garner is wrong" in the attitudes they have taken as to governmental loans to individuals. Mr. Glass and other Democrats tried unsuccessfully to get the Speaker to so modify the bill as to make it acceptable, but to no avail. The sound of the bill had a "popular appeal," and Mr. Garner fell for petty politics. A new bill, which it is believed will be acceptable to Mr. Hoover, is to be introduced in the Senate immediately by Senator Wagner, Democrat of New York.

Negro Christian Convention Meets.—

The thirty-third session of the Afro-Christian Convention met in St. Stephens Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., June 19th to 24th. The convention was presided over by Rev. I. D. C. Goodson, and was composed of seven conferences located in Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, New Jersey and New York. The convention includes some two hundred churches, and there are a number of colored Congregational churches in this same territory. There was a strong expression for the union of the Congregational and Christian colored churches throughout the South, and committees were appointed and the proper steps taken to carry this out. It will lend a great impetus to the union and do a great amount of good if the colored Congregational churches of the North will throw their lot with the Southern brethren, thereby greatly adding to their strength and leadership.

Opportunity.—

Men have talked depression until the average person would hesitate literally to buy "a gold brick." A man who has money is afraid to spend it, and the man who hasn't it, cannot get credit as in former times—the wheels just won't "go round." Yet, every day we hear of some outstanding character who is succeeding in spite of, or possibly because of the depression. Elbert Hubbard once wrote, and we believe it is true today, the following: "The actual fact is that in this day Opportunity not only knocks at your door, but is playing an anvil chorus on every man's door, and then lays for the owner around the corner with a club. The world is in sore need of men who can do things. Indeed, cases can be recalled by everyone where Opportunity actually smashed in the door and collared her candidate and dragged him forth to success. These cases are exceptional; usually you have to meet Opportunity half-way. But the only place where you can get away from Opportunity is to lie down and die. Opportunity does not trouble dead men, or dead ones who flatter themselves alive."

World Bank Urges Return of Gold Standard.—

Word comes from Switzerland that the directors of the Bank of International Settlements, with the approval of the representatives of Great Britain, Japan and Sweden, which are now off the gold standard, are in favor of an immediate return to the use of gold as the basis of exchange. The resolution unanimously adopted by the board of directors, took on added significance, following as it did the Lausanne conference on reparations last week. The resolution said that gold is the "best available monetary mechanism and best suited to make possible a free flow of the world's trade." It also added that for the mechanism of international payments to operate successfully, it will be necessary "to restore to a reasonable degree the freedom of movement of goods, services and capital; to complete the solution of reparations reached at Lausanne by a satisfactory solution of the war debts, and to take the necessary steps in each country to restore and maintain the equilibrium of international economy, not only as regards the public revenue and expenditure, but also as regards production costs and the organization of the internal money and capital markets."

Only One Out of Six.—

It seems almost too late to drag the Literary Digest Prohibition Poll back into print, but in the light of present happenings, or rather predicted happenings, an expert's comment on this vote might be inspiring. We give herewith the substance of the findings of Dr. Richard C. Cabot, who is Professor of Social Ethics and Clinical Medicine at Harvard University. Prof. Cabot thinks, that "with all the ballyhoo of the Digest, plus the news stories and editorials" of the wet press throughout the nation, and the radio broadcasts reaching millions, and the tons of literature sent out to 20,706,352 people, "the outcome is that the mountain labored and brought forth a mouse. . . . True, of the total of 4,668,537 ballots cast in its poll, 3,431,877, or 73 per cent were for repeal. It is also true, and more significant, in view of the sweeping claims of the wets, that out of 20,706,452 receiving ballots, only 3,431,877, or 16½ per cent were interested enough to vote wet." The question is raised why, if there is so strong a demand for repeal, did so many millions fail to mark a secret ballot for repeal and return it (it was prepaid) to the Digest. It could not have been an oversight on their part, for they were nightly reminded of this greatest of all opportunities to express their desire for a change. Evidently this great wet interest is pure fiction, we are reminded, "for it is generally conceded that those who want a change will welcome the chance to say so, especially when the chance is provided at no expense and little trouble on their part." It is also significant that from twelve States in which are located the big cities of the country, always on the side of liquor, came 2,416,259 wet votes, or 70 per cent of the wet vote cast. The remaining 30 per cent were scattered over the other thirty-six States. It looks, upon the face of things, as if some of our professional politicians have failed to keep their ears to the ground. Or possibly, the noise made by the wet interests has been so loud that they have been distracted from the fact that only one out of six ballots sent out in the Literary Digest Poll was returned marked for repeal.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

We must bear or we must die. It is easier to die, but infinitely less noble.—Tennyson.

The Bible has been the Magna Charta of the poor and oppressed.—Thomas Huxley.

Rev. Staley Hunt, of Alabama, passed in his credit work at Blue Ridge in spite of spending a time at an Asheville hospital where he lost his tonsils.

Rev. A. W. Hurst, Elon College, N. C., was the first one to avail himself of the Congregationalist-Herald-CHRISTIAN SUN combination subscription offer. Who will be next?

Mrs. Elmer Johnson, of Evarts, Ky., the youngest daughter of the lamented deacon of the church, Will Turner, attended the conference at Blue Ridge, and much enjoyed the experience.

West Tallassee, Ala., has witnessed regular services in recent weeks by the Congregational group which has remained faithful to the fellowship since the church was discontinued some years ago.

Mrs. J. W. Stephenson, wife of Deacon Stephenson of our Richmond Church, is quite seriously ill at this writing. Mrs. Stephenson has been in poor health for some time, but was taken suddenly worse July 3rd.

Rev. James M. Trosper, whose headquarters are at Corbin, Ky., who has been a devoted son to his aged father, has finally lost him to other scenes. He passed on at the old home place at Woodbine early in July.

The Youth representatives, Misses Dorma Bruce, of Mt. Olivet Church, Tallassee, Mabel Thrasher, of Antioch Church, Andalusia, and Lorene McGlawn, of Mt. Grove Church, Steppville, well represented their three churches at the Blue Ridge Conference.

Rev. C. W. Smith of Alabama, had a thrill when his son Gerald Smith, a ministerial student who is in summer work, passed him the elements in the impressive communion service which concluded the Blue Ridge Conference and was conducted by Dr. Raymond.

Chattanooga was well and attractively represented at Blue Ridge, as to young people, by three girls of different types—Dorothy French, who was publicity secretary to Dr. Bloom, Mary Lusk of Pilgrim Church, and Elizabeth Renegar of Union Church, who took part in the dramatic program.

Don West, who has produced two little volumes of poetry, gave a reading at a camp-fire at the Blue Ridge Conference. His poems were approved by other mountain people who heard them. They are in dialect and are brief, each carrying a particular idea. They are generally solemn, with occasional flashes of quiet humor.

The world's Sunday School Convention is held this year at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, July 25th-31st. A delegation of about five hundred sailed from the United States, and there are to be over two thousand delegates representing all the countries of the world. During the convention, there are to be four sessions of the World Council of Youth, under the leadership of Dr. George Stewart.

Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun sends the editor this word about our beloved Dr. W. W. Staley, who is still confined in Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va.: "Operation was performed on papa's eye Thursday afternoon, and he has been more comfortable since. Does not at present suffer so much pain. His special night nurse phoned this morning, (July 9th), saying that he seemed brighter."

There is a medical chicken yard at Sachikela, West Africa, where Dr. Henry S. Hollenbeck parks his fees. The Ovimbundus among whom he works, are often exceedingly poor, too poor to pay for treatments. But they appreciate so deeply what is done for them that they want to give something in return. Hence, the hens and chickens—with occasionally vegetables. Many Ovimbundus have never handled money but carry on their business by barter.

Our heartiest congratulations, though belated, are extended to Rev. Richie E. Brittle, the honored and esteemed pastor of Cypress Chapel and Bethlehem Churches, Nansemond County, Va. The good woman he won was Miss Mary Sue Parker, and the ministers who pronounced the ceremony were Drs. W. D. Harward and W. M. Jay. The happy event was on the evening of June 7th. Thus, another home starts on its happy way through time, and there are hopes that theirs shall, indeed, be a symbol and a type of the home above—"that house not made with hands."

The Federal Government has been appealed to with an immense petition from numerous school organizations to make a large grant from the Federal Treasury to save our public schools. It is pointed out that during last year 13,000 localities—cities, districts, etc.—were unable to meet their school budgets, with the result that many of the schools were closed, others cut salaries of teachers, some raised the age standards, still others increased the number of pupils in each class. It is reported that more than one hundred million dollars are due teachers in public schools on back salaries from last year.

Elon College will, this week, close its first six-weeks' summer school for teachers. Those in charge pronounced it quite a success and were highly gratified at the results. Over fifty were enrolled during the school, and these have kept alive the college activities and the college spirit, and made our campus and buildings seem like a continuation of the good days of school activities. This summer school should grow and will no doubt grow into one of large proportions since the Elon buildings and grounds are delightful, restful, inviting, cool, pleasant, in which to live, to teach, and to study during the summer weeks.

This story going about, whether true or not, at least reveals a sense of justice and proportion: A merchant, being told that he had only a few days to live, called his lawyer, and said: "Make my will so my overdraft at the bank goes to my wife—she can explain it; the equity in my car to my son—he will have to go to work and keep up the payments; give my good will to the supply houses—they took some awful chances on me and are entitled to something; my equipment you can give to the junkman—he has had his eye on it for several years. I want six of my creditors for pallbearers—they have carried me so long, they might as well finish the job."

The report of Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom, Fancy Gap, Va., for the month of June, the one month they have been at work among our friends in Carroll County, would indicate that their work is engaging and fruitful: "Prayer meetings, 10; families visited, 21; pupils in Sunday School classes taught, 139; conversions, 40; received into the church fellowship, 4; received in cash from their co-workers in the community, $25.12 (this mostly a free-will offering for help in revival work at Rocky Ford)." Our friends have enjoyed their month's work and are full of hope and anticipation as they begin to settle in their new home and make acquaintances who are to be their friends and neighbors through the coming years.

One of our very faithful, consecrated pastors, such, indeed, as make up the kingdom of heaven on earth, writes this personal line from experience: "To be frank with you, I am preaching to people this year who wear their overalls to church because that is the best they can do, and some are staying away from church because they are barefooted. I am getting more real joy out of my church service this year than ever before, I think, because I am exercising more faith in God. It is true that we are in the greatest financial strain we have ever been in, but Christ is with us. I came home from one of my churches this morning with old T Ford loaded with corn meal and syrup, and my heart overflowing with joy."

From Dr. W. M. Jay, Holland, Va.: "We had a very interesting service at our church last Sunday night. The entire service was in charge of the young people. A junior choir of about twenty voices led the music and sang two special selections. Miss Frances Everett conducted the service. Miss Nancy Holland read the scripture lesson, Miss Virginia May led in prayer, and Miss Virginia Jay presided at the pipe organ. The pastor then delivered a sermon to the young people. At the last quarterly conference of the church, Mr. J. T. Jones and Mr. Holland Ballard were recommended by the Board of Deacons and elected by the church to fill the office of deacons. Their ordination will be arranged for soon."

Rev. T. F. Wright, of Sanford, sends the following message, which we trust many SUN readers will see and will appreciate, so that our venerable and beloved Rev. G. R. Underwood may realize in his confinement that the labors and services of his active days are not forgotten. Take the friendly pen, and write him a line today. Here is the word from Bro. Wright: "Our venerable friend and brother, Rev. G. R. Underwood, has been confined to his home, with a nurse employed full time, for several weeks, and I am sorry to say that he seems to be growing weaker as the warm weather continues. He appreciates visits from old friends very much, and I am sure he would be glad to have any member of THE SUN family visit him in person or by letter or card. His heart is much weaker and his strength is waning, but he still delights to testify for his Lord. His address is Goldston, N. C."

Rev. A. W. Hurst, Elon College, returned from the Blue Ridge M. E. M. Conference last Friday, and reports a splendid meeting and a really great and good session of the Conference. As Dr. Gillette reports in his letter elsewhere in THE SUN, the various denominations have organized their summer conferences, all growing out of the original Missionary Education Movement Conference, and so the number attending Blue Ridge is much less than in former years, but the spirit of the occasion is maintained and the program, under the leadership of Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, maintains the excellence of Blue Ridge and measures up to the high standards of former days when hundreds attended each session. The Summer conferences and schools are wonderful helps, both in information and inspiration to youth and to age through an exchange of ideas as well as opportunities for larger visions and spiritual development.

A sympathetic friend applauds and approves, at a most suitable time, even if in an unusual manner, for whoever takes a pen to write a contributor, much less an editor of a church paper, a word of approval and appreciation is a rare specimen, indeed. But just behold this "rock" in a weary land, a cool, refreshing shade from a burning sun: "I want to express my appreciation for the splendid CHRISTIAN SUN of this week. It was virile and vital all the way through. The Personals were very interesting and more in number than usual. (Even) the editorials were inviting, and of just the right length. Really, I do not think THE SUN ever shone brighter than it did this week." One who can write like that has a great heart and is a friend, indeed. That is enough to make us wish to try again and do better the next time. Let all our contributors take heart, accept the applause, and try our hands for a continuous and ever better SUN-shine.

Rev. J. F. Apple, pastor, reports two services, largely attended, at Mt. Zion Church, Orange County, N. C., Sunday July 10th. It was the beginning, and a very auspicious one, of his annual evangelistic meeting, the minister for the day being Rev. A. P. Hurst, of Elon College. There was evidence of much interest at the services, and the pastor is hopeful of a successful meeting this week. Since Sunday, Rev. J. L. Neese, Greensboro, has been assisting the pastor in the services. Next week, beginning July 17th, Bro. Apple is to assist Pastor Neese in the annual meeting at New Lebanon, Rockingham County. We join these pastors in the hope of successful meetings, and agree with the following declaration from a brother editor: "Evangelism is the first task of the church. The angels brought an evangel when Christ was born and his continuous rebirth in the hearts of men is dependent upon his present-day messengers telling the good news of his redeeming love. The growth of the church is secured by evangelism. The remedy for a depression is a revival."

THE COIN CARD PLAN.

The American Board, which originated and is cooperating in promoting the coin card plan, declares in a recent bulletin, "that it will gradually be made a success." At the moment of this writing there are actually 350,000 "Dollar Coin Cards" which have been distributed to church members, but have not been heard from as yet. "A total of 417,000 were actually distributed. Somewhere they have been covered up with a newspaper or poked into a cubby-hole, or forgotten in a drawer. There is yet an opportunity for these collection cards to be placed on the collection plate to help lift the burdens of the Board and the mission work." Surely, CHRISTIAN SUN readers who have received the coin cards will fill and return them. I have distributed over 3,000, and they are beginning to come in. Here is hoping that none "will be covered up with a newspaper or forgotten in a drawer or somewhere."

BLUE RIDGE CONFERENCE.

Blue Ridge has come to mean a great deal in our Southeastern Congregational and Christian fellowship. The Missionary Education Movement conference is an interdenominational affair with the backing of the M. E. M., but owing to the development of denominational conferences the attendance of the other denominations has dwindled away, while the Congregational-Christian group, under the leadership of Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, has come to be the predominant group. This year the total enrollment was 111, of whom 89 belonged to our group. Of this number 22 were going into Student Summer Service work in the Southeast. Of the total enrollment, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida sent 16 each, and Georgia, 14. Eight denominations were represented, and there were delegates from 17 States. In addition there were 43 visitors. The Daily Vacation School conducted at Black Mountain as a demonstration school had 89 enrolled.

Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, as chairman of the conference, was largely responsible for the success of the conference, and it is safe to say that it is his faith in Blue Ridge, and his efforts, that have kept these conferences alive.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill was registrar. Dr. W. A. Harper conducted a popular credit course for young people on "The Message and Program of the Christian Church." Among others of our group participating were Miss Priscilla Chase, Miss Marguerite Davison, Rev. A. W. Sparks, Rev. Malcolm Dana, Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, D. D., Mrs. Marion Tucker Parsons, representing the A. B. C. F. M., and Rev. Frank Henry of the Home Boards.

Each day the Congregational-Christian group met in conference and most valuable group conferences were held for the S. S. S. workers, the Youth group, and the pastors and their Christian workers. Practical problems were considered in each group. Perhaps the most beautiful and impressive event in the whole conference was the commissioning service for the S. S. S. workers, and for three others who were going into full-time service in the Southeast. This service was held on Sunday evening in the glen, and was conducted by Dr. Bloom, assisted by his staff of workers. All of those present felt that it was thrilling in its spiritual significance. It ended with a beautiful candle-lighting service.

At the final Commencement service, 74 credits were given by the Dean, Dr. Gilbert Q. LeSourd, representing the Missionary Education Movement. At this time three were chosen to speak on "What Blue Ridge Has Meant to Me." Among them were, Miss Elizabeth Conwell, of St. Petersburg, Fla., and Rev. Allen Jones, of Waycross, Ga. At the beautiful closing communion service, conducted by Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, a solo was sung by Rev. Alfred Hurst, of Elon College.

All present enjoyed the fine fellowship and it is felt that there is nothing that is being done in the Southeast that so unifies our program and develops our sense of fellowship in a real service, as these annual conferences at Blue Ridge. It is to be doubted if there is a more significant movement than the Student Summer Service, and here at Blue Ridge, where they meet to study and prepare for their work, this movement is seen in its full significance. By common consent and by definite expression, the full credit is to be given to Dr. W. Knighton Bloom.

After the Blue Ridge conference, it will be interesting to many to know the places where our S. S. S. workers are going for their first work. For the Carolinas and Georgia the following is the schedule: Arthur Swartz goes to the Sophia Parish, North Carolina; Edward DuBois goes to Chapel Hill; Mr. and Mrs. Theron Zimmerman to Salisbury (Trinity Parish); and John Chapman, of Massachusetts, to Asheville.

For Georgia: Miss Annie Campbell, extension worker, and Miss Mildred Rister, of Alabama, to LaGrange; Miss Dorothy Grigsby, of Tennessee, and Gregory Williams, of Rollins College, to Columbus; Miss Ruth Lott, of Georgia, to Macedonia Parish; Miss Susie Elder, of Georgia, to Ambrose Parish; and Miss Dorothy Overstreet, of Georgia, to Friendship Parish, Baxley.

These young people will cooperate with the pastors of these churches in every way. Some of the young men will act as evangelists, assisting the pastors in special meetings. They will conduct Vacation Bible Schools. They will make parish surveys and do parish calling. They will help young people properly to organize. They will teach teacher training classes, and help to organize Sunday Schools along the most efficient lines, and they will inspire young people to share splendidly in the life of the church. In all this they will carry with them the inspiration of Blue Ridge. Surely, the summer should bring results of great importance to the churches. And they, in turn, will be furnishing opportunities for those progressive young people to prepare in more ways than one for college next year.

METHODS CORNER

BY REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Miami Beach, Fla.

I have been thinking with you recently about the "nerves" of Missions. One of the motives to missionary endeavor in former days was the belief that the Christian religion was true and all other religions false. It was easy to push such an idea. It has gradually come over the Christian Church that there is some truth in every religion. Missionaries are supposed to study the religions of the people among whom they go. They undertake to show that the Christian religion contains all the best in the native religions and very much more. Christ overtops all other teachers, all other founders of religion. He becomes the Supreme One and the most adequate revelation of God. This is, however, quite different from the older idea of true and false. The newer motive is better, we think, but it takes more effort to carry on missionary evangelism and education than the other plan.

Then there is another "nerve" that used to function with great force and that was the belief in the superiority of western civilization. This statement should not be pushed with too much energy because not all missionaries were conscious of spreading the gospel of western civilization. Unfortunately our efforts were associated with western customs and converts were expected to adopt our customs and manners. A great change has come over missionary work in this respect. Native peoples have done much to emphasize the fact that they prefer to be Chinese Christians or African Christians than to be American Christians in China, etc. Our knowledge of other peoples has done this. We have come to respect other people's points of view, and this has in some measure changed our feelings and halted our pressures. We go now to other peoples to learn all we can about them and respect their customs and their ideas.

Another "motive" that has entered into the missionary drive is the financial profit that might come to the business world through the opening up of new markets. Dr. Stocking, whom I am following at present, says the force that cut that "nerve" was decency. Another "motive" was the "command" of Jesus to go into all the world and preach the Gospel. This still holds.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

BEWILDERED!

Those who at heart and soul desire temperance and sober citizenship are bewildered. No other word seems to fit. Many of them pinned their hopes on prohibition. They were honest in their convictions, and in large numbers they feel that the Eighteenth Amendment and Volstead Act are steps in the right direction. Many of those who believe this are now bewildered. The daily press, hundred of "knowing individuals," neighbors and friends, are declaring that prohibition has failed, and that it did not prohibit; that the law on the statute books is not only futile, but a menace.

No, it does not carry us anywhere to say that the whiskey element and the wets have never let up and that they have fought prohibition from the beginning till now. The bare fact stares us in the face, that your neighbors, good folks, honest people, will point out to you that drinking among the young people is worse than ever; that respectable and otherwise law-abiding citizens flaunt prohibition in the face, have their drinking parties, that liquors of various kinds and degrees are supplied openly and without any excuse. One of our pastors, a sound prohibitionist, of course, recently told the writer that he knew that the law was being defied in a building close by his residence, that he reported the bootlegger to the police, but to no avail, and the nefarious business kept up. He then reported to the chief enforcement officer of his State at the capital by letter and written complaint. Two or three days thereafter the bootlegger quietly moved to another town, and then a policeman of his town came and said, "We went this morning to arrest the man you reported, but he has gone." "Of course, he was gone," replied our ministerial friend. "You officers gave him ample notice so that he might not be disturbed, and you and your kind, professing to be officers of the law, really connive at the law and make it of no effect. This bootlegger escaped because you notified him after hearing from your superior officer that it was time for him to move on. You protected this law-breaker instead of protecting us, the keepers of the law."

Another informant said to this writer recently that a bootlegger in his city confessed to him that bootlegging was his business, and he had no fear whatever of being caught, since he kept "three of the policemen on his pay-roll, giving them a monthly salary for protection, just as he paid his delivery boy and distillers." And so on and so on.

We have to acknowledge that the United States has not enforced its law, and so this government must confess that the bootlegger and his ilk defied Uncle Sam, denounced him, abused, rebuked and laughed at him, until good and honest people on all sides have from one cause or another become disgusted. What a pity, what a shame!

Meanwhile, the breweries are getting busy and are preparing to manufacture their output and be ready when the day arrives. Through the Associated Press this and similar activities on the part of the breweries are noted:

"Rochester, N. Y., July 5.—Papers for reincorporation of the Genesee Brewing Company were forwarded today to the secretary of state by a group of business men with a view to marketing once more the famous Liebotchaner beer of pre-Volstead days.

"The group plans to reconstruct the old Genesee brewery. Louis A. Wehl, who was superintendent of the old brewery until 1917, said, if and when the manufacture of beer becomes legal, the corporation will install 100 carloads of machinery, and will re-engage all former brewery hands available."

And, so, while people who believe in prohibition are working for a dry and sober America, those who abuse prohibition declare that they favor temperance and the only way to have temperance is to abolish the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act, and so the breweries begin to get busy.

Dr. Hugh K. Tucker, president of the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church, in an open letter, recently, asked John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who comes out for repeal, to state what in his judgment is the next forward movement in the fight for temperance and the social control of the liquor problem.

Many of us feel as Dr. Kerr says:

"If, after the repeal has been submitted to the people and voted upon, and if it is proved that the country does not wish to repeal the law, but stands by the present law, will those who now oppose the law honestly and frankly support it after such resubmission? There can never be an ideal solution of a traffic that has always been and always will be lawless and antisocial. There is no country in the world that has an ideal solution. The Eighteenth Amendment was the result of a long process of temperance agitation and economic dissatisfaction with the liquor traffic. Naked repeal can mean nothing else but reversion to the old order and there is still a majority, I believe, who will vote to move forward rather than backward."

CONQUERING DIFFICULTIES.

Most of our difficulties are within and not without. Many of us count our burdens instead of our blessings. We take counsel of our fears instead of our faith. The great, the valiant, the victorious are not so. They put their difficulties down as steps on which to climb. A while ago a writer in an educational journal declared that the sixteenth chapter of I. Corinthians was divinely inspired because in the ninth verse of that chapter occurs the word "and," where any uninspired and ordinary writer would have put "but." Paul, the writer, had courage, and so numbered his adversaries whom God had given him, along with other advantages and opportunities. Look how Paul puts it: "For a great door is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." We weak ones, and fearing, would have said, and so often do say: "For a great door is opened unto me, but there are so many adversaries."

But all the courageous ones are not gone. We are still finding them. The following even sounds "fishy." The incident is related in The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, the detail of the story being taken from the Sunday Oklahoman in describing Frederick L. Drake, formerly head of the Music Department of Kingfisher College, a man totally blind, helpless, in fact, lying flat on his back for many years with no prospect or promise of recovery, and yet always beaming with cheerfulness. Read the facts and discover with us that the seat and secret of success is within and not without. Victory comes by conquering rather than by yielding to handicaps:

"Here is a man who cannot open his mouth to receive food; who cannot raise an arm, bend a knee, or wiggle a toe, and yet he is happy and enjoys life. And this man works! He is a voice teacher with fifteen pupils; he directs a choir of thirty singers; he recently drilled a group of eighty singers in the presentation of Handel's 'Messiah.' And yet he cannot wield a baton, cannot even nod his head. He asks that you share your pity and your charity with those who need it. He does not, because he, the inner man, is a perfectly normal person. All he ever knew he still knows. His hearing is unimpaired. His mind is clear. He reads through his wife's eyes. Worry is a word unknown to him. He finds that a choir, properly trained, will interpret the feeling in the music, without a director 'shaking a stick in front of them.' When the choir is singing in church, this leader has the telephone imbedded against his ear; he hears every note and tells the choir where it was off key the next time there is a rehearsal. Professor Drake claims that his physical afflictions have not marred his abilities. 'I and my body are two entirely different institutions,' he explains. He enjoys his work! Everyone in Kingfisher loves and honors him. He is almost a saint in their eyes. But he is regarded in the community as a normal person."

In the story of Professor Drake one is reminded of Miss Helen Keller, now one of the outstanding figures of America, who, though blind, deaf and dumb, has learned to enjoy the beauty of the world, interpret the melody of music, and speak a language to which the world listens in amazement.

SHENANDOAH.

And so the Shenandoah National Forest is not to be that after all. It has been ordered by the "powers that be" that henceforth we call it the George Washington National Forest. Well, we do honor George Washington, and idolize his memory, but the "Shenandoah" is sentimental and stirs the emotions. For our part, we wish the sentimental could have remained and the emotional could have been preserved. The Indians had it right, as any and all will testify, who have looked upon the sparkling, gurgling waters of the Shenandoah and watched those waters move with colorful grace and glory through the changing and ever-inspiring scenery of the fertile Valley of Virginia, and between those hills which adorn and protect it—the Shenandoah.

History relates that it was in 1716, when the gallant Governor Spotswood led his "intrepid knights of the golden horseshoe on their tour of exploration." An old Indian was guide, and as the adventurous governor, from a prominent peak of the Blue Ridge, saw the magic beauty and marvelous wonders of the intervening valley, with its sparkling, silver river, like some slow, slumbering serpent, winding its way through the breathless vision, he inquired of his guide the name. "Shenandoah," came the reply, the English of which is "Daughter of the Stars," "a name chosen," said the old Indian, "because the river was as bright and beautiful as stardust."

This writer remembers driving several years ago, on a starlit night, with the silvery moon above, across the Shenandoah a hundred or more yards wide, where there was a ford but no bridge, the horse above his knees and the buggy to its axles in the friendly waters, and to this day, with the memory still lingering, the writer hardly knows whether he was riding on star-spangles and moonbeams in fairyland, or through actual waters that defied definition and description.

Those of us who love the sentimental and like our emotions stirred within us, will keep on honoring George Washington, but we wish that it had been sufficient to name our parks and counties and states and statues for him, but had retained "Shenandoah," "The Daughter of the Stars," because in favor, fertility, in grandeur and in glory of creation, our God, the God of all creation, did his best when he made, and displayed to the eyes and heart of a wondering world the lovely Shenandoah—its spreading valley, its majestic hills, its boundless forests, and its limpid "Daughter of the Stars." ELON COLLEGE DOLLAR-A-MONTH CLUB.

A little more than four months ago an effort was started to organize the Dollar-a-Month Club for the support of Elon College. The movement was suggested by Mr. M. L. Patrick and, at first, was confined to members of the Alumni Association. Later, it was extended to the entire membership of the Christian Church and all friends of the College, with the hope that the enrollment might reach the five thousand mark at an early date.

From time to time, report of the progress of the Club has been made through THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We have received most favorable comment from all sides commending this plan for the financial support of the college during these days of depression. In last week's paper, we printed a list of names which has been sent in since our last report to THE SUN. A number of those who had previously joined the Club, and whose names had already appeared in THE SUN, failed to find their names in this recent list, of course, and have written in to inquire why their names were left off. I am, therefore, presenting in this issue, the entire membership of the Club, indicating after their names the number of memberships which each one has taken.

You will note that by far the larger number of subscribers have only one membership, but others have taken from one to twenty-five. If you would like to increase your number of memberships, just write us. If you are not a member of the Club, it is certainly a fine time to join.

If you did not read Dr. Atkinson's editorial in last week's edition, be certain to get your paper, turn to the editorial and read it. It is an optimistic and encouraging utterance, containing exhortations, which, if followed by the entire membership of the church, will certainly spell success for the institution that is ours and to which we are devoted.

Please sign the blank, attach a dollar bill, mail it to the college and your name will be enrolled as a member of the Dollar-a-Month Club. We have only one new member to present this week—Mrs. Charlie Plummer, 33rd St., Norfolk, Va. She sent in her membership unsolicited. It would be fine if one hundred others would do the same next week.

L. E. SMITH.

MUSIC OUT OF DISCORD.

Tuesday morning, July 5th, two high school graduates, Eugene Lankford and Talbert King, from the nearby city of Burlington, N. C., came into my office accompanied by Dr. G. O. Lankford, the father of Eugene and the pastor of Talbert. These two ambitious youngsters announced that they were interested in Elon College and were anxious that it should have an orchestra and a band.

I suppose that there are but few things that appeal to a youngster and stir his imagination more than a brass band. They announced that the college had musical instruments somewhere. On inquiry, I learned that the college does have two bass horns, two cornets, one melophone, one saxophone, and one trombone, and that these instruments are locked up in a room on the third floor of the Whitley Memorial Building. My informant further declared that all of these instruments were out of tune, with the exception of the saxophone—that this instrument had been kept in use by one who liked to play it. Now, as I recall it, the saxophone is somewhat of a jazz instrument.

I wonder if this is the actual condition of the "one-time" and "would-be" supporters of Elon College? Are they all locked in a room on the third floor of this terrible structure, "depression," and if the instruments that used to make music for the college, and by which the college marched to apparent success are all in bad shape and out of tune, except the saxophone—that instrument of jazz, which, by itself, instead of delighting and inspiring, comes pretty near to racking the nerves and starting us off on the wrong pace.

Now, these youngsters announced that if they could have the key and get into this room and get hold of these instruments, that in a short time they would have them overhauled, in tune, and peeling forth the old-time melodies by which great audiences were once delighted.

I wonder if there aren't scores of young men and young women in our church, not only in Burlington, but in Greensboro, Raleigh, Suffolk, Norfolk, Richmond—all the towns and God's open country, who are ready to demand the keys, march to the third floor of this old structure, "depression," unlock it, get hold of the hearts, hands and purses of the Christian Church that once beat high with hopes for the college, and gave their money gladly to the tune of "One Dollar More for the College," overhaul their spirits, fire their ambitions, tune their hearts and set them to marching again to the tune of "Sacrifice and Success," that the college may continue.

Members of the Christian Church, far and near, this is your college—this is our college. We expect it to serve us, but it can only serve us to the degree in which we support it. It is a task to support Elon College, and a big one, but who wants anything else. A small task is too small for us. A big task challenges the best that is in us, and only measures for us our capacity to do. 30,000 people, and more, can do just about what they make up their minds to do. When it comes to supporting Elon College, it is not a question of ability, but a question of willingness. We are able, and if we are willing, we can and will.

Would you like to see Elon go, and go gloriously? Would you like it to be an institution of which you would be proud, and to which you would be proud to send your children and about which you would be proud to tell your friends who have children to educate—whom you would be proud to influence to attend your church school for training and preparation for life? Well, you can have just such an institution if you will and these are the steps, which, if taken by you and every other member of the Christian Church, will guarantee to us and to those who are to come after us, such a college.

First: Speak well of it—your words in casual daily conversation will either help or hinder. You say: "What can I say?" Listen! Elon College is perhaps the best physically equipped of any small college in this country. Her laboratories are second to none. Her facilities for religious training have not yet been attempted by any other college, university or training school. There is an atmosphere on the Elon College campus that makes an indispensable contribution to character and to life. It is not what your boy or girl gets out of books, unless it be "The Book", that will help them stem the tide of destruction sure to meet them on life's highways. It is that intangible thing, indefinable thing that comes into their lives out of a Christian atmosphere that makes them invincible in the hour of testing. This, fathers and mothers, you should consider when it comes to sending your children from beneath your roof into other hands for training and molding.

Second: Send your sons and daughters (I mean members of the Christian Church—we are always glad to have the sons and daughters of others, but we are now pleading for our own) to Elon. In addition to our equipment that is here to receive your sons and daughters, we have a splendid faculty, which we hope will commend itself to every ambitious parent and deserving youth in our church. Perhaps in next week's paper we will begin the announcements for 1932-1933.

The college is here in the interest of our boys and girls. We must have students, or the college should close. If we had 400 students who would pay their bills, and the income from present endowments, the college could run on its present budget, and what came in, in the way of donations, could be applied on the payment of our debts. There are certainly more than 400 boys and girls in the Christian Church who will be going to college next fall.

Are you interested in your church and your church's institutions? If so, send your sons and daughters to Elon. Don't be afraid to trust them with your college—either for literary training, intellectual development, poise, self-discipline or ambitions for life's tasks. If we do not support our own, how may we expect others to do so?

Third: Give the college your money—not all of it, but a part of it—not very much of it, but all that in the light of Christian duty, you should. We have been lured on by the vain hope that some great philanthropist will come to the front and plank down a huge sum, by which the college's obligations would be met and all future securities be guaranteed. Why do you suppose we have ever had such a vision? Has it ever been done? Yes, but usually such gifts are but the harvest of seed that have been sown years before. We have been sowing the seed, but we must continue to sow in the hope of the harvest coming in due time. We must, individually and collectively, make our gifts, however small.

A plan is presented to you by which you may contribute on a monthly basis for the support of your college. We call this plan the "Dollar-a-Month Club." Have you joined? If not, send in your name, together with a dollar bill and you will be enrolled as a member and be counted with the constantly increasing numbers who are coming to the rescue of the college.

Hail, to the youngsters of Burlington, who have announced the ambition to get out the old instruments, brush away the dust, polish the brass, put them in condition, and strike up a tune that will inspire us to march to victory.

These youngsters will be welcome to Elon in September. How many other boys and girls throughout the church will join them, thus becoming a member of the orchestra and band, who will play us the tune of success and triumph?

L. E. SMITH, President.

ROANOKE, ALA., REVIVALS.

I have my revivals all planned. We will begin first with the church at New Harmony the third Sunday in July, with Rev. J. D. Dollar doing the preaching after the first day. We will begin our union meeting with the M. E. Church, South, at Cragford, the fourth Sunday in July. We will hold our meeting at Corinth with the church at Forrester's Chapel M. E. Church beginning the fifth Sunday in July. Then my last revival for the season will begin at Rock Springs the second Sunday in August, with Rev. J. D. Dollar doing the preaching after the first day. This is the old home church of the late Rev. C. M. Dollar, and the seed that he sowed more than a quarter of a century ago is still bearing a harvest. We are expecting God to do great things for us at all these churches. I think the people are beginning to realize the need of an old-fashioned revival of pure and undefiled religion of Jesus Christ.

The annual Dollar reunion will be held with the church at Rock Springs on Thursday of the revival. It is great to have this family come together at the church at this time.

We are just now in the beginning of a very promising revival in my home church in Roanoke, with Rev. H. C. Caviness doing the preaching, and this writer in charge of the song service. Bro. Caviness seems to be at his best and is preaching the Gospel of Christ which is the power of God unto salvation to everyone who believeth. We esteem it a real treat to have him and his good wife in our community for a week, and we feel that God is going to richly bless their work.

THE WORLD'S WORST SLUMS.

When triplets were born in the Bridgman Memorial Hospital, Johannesburg, South Africa, there was great excitement. Those delightful little persons smiled their way through three and a half months of life in a slum. Then bronchial pneumonia fell upon Zachariah and Enoch. There, in a nine-by-ten room occupied by four grown-ups and two children, besides the triplets, Mrs. Clara Davis Bridgman found them struggling for breath. At night doors and windows were shut. Finally the father was persuaded to allow them to be taken to the hospital, but before this could be done Enoch's little body lay with tiny hands crossed and a solitary candle flickering at his head. Zachariah slipped away later and Isabel was taken to the country by her mother where, at the suggestion of heathen friends, she will be fed artificially. "One wonders if she has a chance," says Mrs. Bridgman, "you can see what we have to contend with in superstition and ignorance against the background of these dreadful slums."

OUR COLLEGES.

I. New Members on the Committee.—It gives me very great pleasure to announce that at a recent meeting of the Congregational Home Boards in New York City the following new members were elected to the Committee on Educational Institutions: Rev. Albert Buckner Coe, D. D., First Congregational Church, Oak Park, Ill., succeeding Dr. Ernest Bouner Allen; Rev. Hugh Elmer Brown, D. D., First Congregational Church, Evanston, Ill., filling a vacancy long standing; President Irving Maurer, LL. D., Beloit College, Beloit, Wis., also filling a vacancy of long standing.

II. Southern Union College.—Some time ago Dr. Frank E. Jenkins addressed a letter to the secretary in which he made the following propositions for the consideration of the Committee on Educational Institutions:

1. "That the Committee on Educational Institutions undertake to lead Elon, Piedmont and Southern Union Colleges into an educational federation with coordinated curricula and various interchanging professorships . . ."

2. "That said committee approve a combined effort of these three colleges in a three-year program for financial support . . ."

3. "That, if Elon does not wish to combine in this way, Piedmont and Southern Union be combined on a basis of educational coordination and a united three-year program . . ."

These propositions have been considered by the members of the committee with the following results:

(a) The "educational federation" of Southern Union with Elon and Piedmont Colleges is not approved.

(b) The united appeal for Southern Union College in connection with Elon and Piedmont Colleges is not approved.

(c) The committee disapproves of the effort to expand Southern Union College to full four-year college status and advises that it be kept strictly to Junior college grade.

(d) The committee advises that Southern Union College should desist at once from making appeals to Congregational denominational loyalty for support.

III. Defiance College.—An exceedingly difficult situation has arisen at Defiance College which unfortunately got into the metropolitan papers. It was brought to a crisis by the sudden resignation of President W. Vernon Lytle before the end of the first year of his administration. Very commendable progress had been made during the year under his business administration in solving the problems with which he was confronted. Drastic action was required and was accomplished with a firm hand and resentment on the part of those who were dismissed and of local interests that lost favored contracts resulted. The trouble has grown largely out of personal contacts. The situation was made worse by a very active propaganda against the president on the part of dismissed faculty members and their friends. The institution is seriously involved financially and more adjustments will be required. A committee of trustees and faculty is at work on the problems involved in the effort to reopen the college next fall.

IV. Union Theological College.—At a recent meeting of the board of Union Theological College it was decided to continue the classes of the school through the year 1932-33. President Jenkins and Dean Osborne are to carry the load, with some part-time assistance. It was felt that this action was required in fairness to the students already enrolled but no new students are to be received. The dormitory is to be closed because this is the most expensive part of the institution. No plans are made beyond the next year.

V. Missouri Educational Problems.—The Missouri State Conference at the recent meeting devoted its time largely to the discussion of its educational interests. Of special interest was the action taken calling for a committee to study the educational institutions of the State and to report to the conference one year hence. Drury College, Iberia and Kidder Jr. Colleges are in Missouri.

VI. Elon College Moratorium.—The financial situation at Elon College has been especially trying and has necessitated a reduction in the staff and internal adjustments. President L. E. Smith has the confidence of the constituency and his administration is commending itself on all sides. The largest creditors have granted a moratorium for two years relieving the college of all interest payments and any curtailment of the principal from June 1, 1932, but only on condition that Dr. Smith remain as president for that period. Friends of the college are endeavoring to raise a fund for the president's salary, in addition to the regular college income, so that all money raised as a result of regular appeals may go to the payment of faculty salaries and operating expenses.

VII. Piedmont College.—It will be a matter of interest to the committee that Dr. Robert L. Kelly, secretary of the Association of American Colleges has recently made a survey of Piedmont College in the report of which he says:

"Piedmont College has its own field and makes its own appeal. The college is needed. It can serve its purpose more effectively as an independent institution, because as suggested, it can create its own atmosphere and continue its own methods in the light of the known needs of its students. No one can know these needs so well as the carefully selected group of trustees, administrators and teachers who make this their life work. There are enough wide-awake boys and girls in Piedmont's field who wish the advantages Piedmont offers and who are not likely to go elsewhere, to guarantee the permanence of the college as a small institution doing intimate qualitative work. There is no possible prospect that Piedmont could or should become a large institution."

It will also interest the committee to know that Piedmont College is included in the study of the smaller colleges being conducted by Mr. Archie M. Palmer, associate Secretary of the Association of American Colleges.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

PRAYER.

Lord, thine arm is not shortened, nor dost thou disregard the believer's faith. The smallness of our faith prevents thy power and souls are slipping anchor. God forgive and reclaim. Corruption assails every phase of the common law. Perchance only by a chastisement yet unfelt can righteousness be made to prevail. Send, O God, such chastisement as thou must, upon whom thou wilt, that our nation, the nations, may yield to thy reign. For the glory of Jesus' name. Amen.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS DEFINED.

(Editor's Note.—The Mission Secretary finds amazing confusion in the minds of many as to what the word "Missions" means. A deacon in one of our churches some time ago declared that helping a neighbor with animal that was in distress was Home Missions. Another pious soul declared that helping a student in college was Missions. Another pious, but bewildered soul, declared that sending a box of food and clothing to hungry folks was Missions. So, in order to help clarify thinking and get out of the fog, definition seems necessary. We turn then to that authority on Missions, Rev. Robert H. Glover, a Fellow of the Royal Geographic Society, etc., distinguished author of the "Progress of World-Wide Missions," who, in the introduction to his great book, defines for us the term "Christian Missions," as follows.—J. O. A.):

To the question, "What is meant by 'Christian Missions'?" various answers might be given. The following definition is quoted as being at once simple and clear:

"Christian Missions" is the proclamation of the gospel to the unconverted everywhere according to the command of Christ.

"Missions" comes from the Latin word mitto—"I send." A missionary is, therefore, a "sent one." "Apostle," from the Greek apostello. "I send," is a synonym for missionary, and the latter and more familiar word may be substituted for the former throughout the New Testament without altering the sense. For example, the fifth book of the New Testament may be called "The Acts of the Missionaries." The term, "Missions," implies three essential factors, viz., a sender, one sent, one to whom sent.

Jesus himself was the Great Missionary. He constantly spoke of himself as a messenger sent by the Father to a lost world. And he said, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." (John 20:21.)

The missionary does not go or speak at his own initiative, but as the commissioned agent of the One who sent him. And the more absolutely he represents him, and the more intelligently and faithfully he conveys his message, the more perfectly does he fulfill his missionary calling.
